BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY.

and the second s EULER (LEONARD) was born at Bafil, on the 14th of April 1707 [A]; he was the fon of Paul Euler, and of Margaret Brucker (of a family illustrious in literature); and fpent the first year of his life at the village of Richen, of which place his father was Protestant mingiter. Being intended for the church, his father, who had himself Audied under James Bernouilli, taught him mathematics, with a view to their proving the ground-work of his other fludies, and in hopes that they would turn out a noble and ufeful fecondary occupation. But they were deftined to become a principal one; and Euler, affifted and per-haps fecretly encouraged by John Bernouilli, who eafily difcovered that he would be the greatest scholar he should ever educate, foon declared his intention of devoting his life to that pura fuit. This intention the wife father did not thwart, but the fon did not fo blindly adhere to it, as not to connect with it a more than common improvement in every other kind of uleful learning, infomuch that in his latter days men often wondered how with fuch a fuperiority in one branch, he could have been to near to eminence in all the reft. Upon the foundation of the Academy of Sciences at St. Petersburg, in 1723, by Catherine I, the two younger Bernouillis, Nicholas and Daniel, had gone thither, promifing, when they fet out, to endeavour to procure Euler a place in it : they accordingly wrote to him foon after, to apply his mathematics to physiology; he did fo, and studied under the best naturalists at Basil; but at the same time, i. e. in 1727, published a differtation on the nature and propagation of found; and an anfwer to the question on the masting of ships, which the Academy of Sciences at Paris judged worthy of the acceffit. Soon after this, he was called to St. Petersburgh, and declared adjutant to the mathematical clafs in the academy, a class, in which, from the circumstances of the times (Newton, Leibnitz, and fo many other immortals having just ceased to live), no easy laurels were to be gathered. Nature, however, who had organized fo many mathematical heads at one time, was not yet tired of her miracles; and the added Euler to the number. He indeed was much wanted; the science of the calculus integralis, hardly come out of the hands of its creators, was still too near the stage of its infancy not to want to be made more perfect. Mechanics, dynamics, and efpecially hydrodynamics, and the fcience of the motion of the heavenly bodies, felt the imperfection. The application of the differential calculus, to them, had been fufficiently fuccessful; but there were difficulties whenever it was neceffary to go from the fluxional quantity to the fluent. With regard to the nature and properties of numbers, the writings of Fermat (who had been to fuccefsful in them), and together with these all his profound telearches, were with Engineering and navigation were reduced to vague principles, and were founded on a heap of often contradictory observations, rather than a regular theory. The irregularities in the motions of the celeftial bodies, and especially the complication of forces which influence that of the moon, were still the difgrace of geometers. Practical aftronomy had yet to wreftle with the imperfection of telefcopes, infomuch, that it could hardly be faid that any rule for making them existed .- Euler turned his eyes to all these objects; he perfected the calculus integralis; he was the inventor of a new kind of calculus, that of fines; he fimplified analytical operations; and, aided by these powerful helpmates, and the altonishing facility with which he knew how to fubdue expressions the most intractable, he threw a new light on all the branches of the mathematics. But at Catherine's death the academy was threatened with extinction, by men who knew not the connection which arts and fciences have with the happinels of a people. Euler was offered and accepted a lieutenancy on board one of the empress's thips, with the promise of fpeedy advancement. Luckily things changed, and the learned captain again found his own element, and was named Professor of Natural Philosophy in 1733, in the room of his friend John Bernouilli. The number of memoirs which Euler produced, prior to this period, is aftonishing [B], but what he did in 1735 is almost incredible. An important calculation was to be made, without lofs of time; the other academicians had demanded fome months to do it. Euler afked three daysin three days he did it ; but the fatigue threw him into a fever, and the fever left him not without the lofs of an eye, an admonition which would have made an ordinary man more sparing of the other. The great revolution, produced by the difcovery of fluxions, had entirely changed the face of mechanics; still, however, there was no complete work on the fcience of motion, two or three only excepted, of which Euler felt the infufficiency. He faw, with pain, that the best works on the fubject, viz. " Newton's Principia," and " Herman's Phoronomia," concealed the method by which these great men had come at fo many wonderful difcoveries, under a fynthetic veil. In order to lift this up, Euler employed all the refources of that analyfis which had ferved him fo well on fo many other occafions; and thus uniting his own difcoveries to those of other geometers, had them published by the academy in 1736. To fay that clearnefs, precision, and order, are the characters of this work, would be barely to fay, that it is, what without thefe qualities no work can be, classical of its kind. It placed Euler in the rank of the first geometricians then existing, and this at a time when John Bernouilli was still living. Such labours demanded fome relaxation; the only one which Euler admitted was music, but even to this he could not go without the fpirit of geometry with him. They produced together the effay on a new theory of mufic, which was published in 1739, but not very well received, probably, becaufe it contains too much geometry for a mufician, and too much mufic for a geometrician. Independently, however, of the theory, which is built on Pythagorean principles, there are many things in it which may be of fervice, both to composers, and to makers of instruments. The doctrine, likewife, of the genera and the modes of mufic is here cleared up with all the clearnefs and precifion which mark the works of Euler. In 1740, his genius was again called forth by the academy of Paris (who, in 1738, had adjudged the prize to his paper on the nature and properties of fire) to discuss the nature of the tides, an important question, which demanded a prodigious extent of calculations, and an entire new fystem of the world. This prize Euler did not gain alone; but he divided it with Maclaurin and D. Bernouilli, forming with them a triumvirate of candidates, which the realms of science had not often beheld. The agreement of the feveral memoirs of Euler and Bernouilli, on this occasion, is very remarkable. Though the one philosopher had fet out on the principle of admitting vortices, which the other rejected, they not only arrived at the fame end of the journey, but met several times on the road; for instance, in the determination of the tides under the frozen zone. Philosophy, indeed, led these two great men by different paths; Bernouilli, who had more patience than his friend, fanctioned every phyfical hypothesis he was obliged to make, by painful and laborious experiment. These Euler's impetuous genius scorned; and, though his natural fagacity did not always fupply the lofs, he made amends by his superiority in analysis, as often as there was any occasion to fimplify expressions, to adapt them to practice, and to recognize, by final formulæ, the nature of the refult. In 1741, Euler received fome very advantageous propositions from Frederic the second (who had just ascended the Pruffian throne), to go and affift him in forming an academy of fciences, out of the wrecks of the Royal Society founded by Leibnitz. With these offers the tottering state of the St. Peterfburgh academy, under the regency, made it neceffary for the philosopher to comply. He accordingly illumined the last volume of the " Melanges de Berlin," with five effays, which are, perhaps, the best things in it, and contributed largely to the academical volumes, the first of which was published in 1744. No part of his multifarious labours is, perhaps, a more wonderful proof of the extensiveness and facility of his genius, than what he executed at Berlin, at a time when he contrived alfo that the Petersburg acts should not suffer from the loss of him. In 1744, Euler published a complete treatise of isoperimetrical curves. The fame year beheld the theory of the motions of the planets and comets; the well-known theory of magnetifm, which gained the Paris prize; and the much-amended translation of Robins's " Treatife on Gunnery." In 1746, his "Theory of Light and Colours" overturned Newton's "Syftem of Emanations;" as did another work, the, at that time triumphant, " Monads of Wolfe and Leibnitz." Navigation was now the only branch of uleful knowledge, for which the labours of analysis and geometry had done nothing. The hydrographical part alone, and that which relates to the direction of the courfe of thips, had been treated by geometricians conjointly with nautical aftronomy. Euler was the first who conceived and executed the project of making this a complete science. A memoir on the motion of floating bodies, communicated to the academy of St. Petersburg in 1735, by M. le Croix, first gave him this idea. His refearches on the equilibrium of ships furnished him with the means of bringing the stability to a determined measure. His fuccefs encouraged him to go on, and produced the great work which the academy published in 1749, in which we find, in fystematic order, the most sublime notions on the theory of the equilibrium and motion of floating bodies, and on the refiftance of of fluids. This was followed by a fecond part, which left nothing to be defired on the fubject, except the turning it into a language eafy of accefs, and divefting it of the calculations which prevented its being of general ufe. Accordingly, in 1773, from a converfation with admiral Knowles, and other affiftance, out of the "Scientia Navalis," 2 vols. 4to. was produced, the "Theorie complette de la Conftruction et de la Manœuvre des Vaiffeaux." This work was inftantly tranflated into all languages, and the author received a prefent of 6000 livres from the French king: he had before had 3001. from the Englifh parliament, for the theorems, by the affiftance of which Meyer made his lunar tables.

[B] On the theory of the more remarkable curves—the nature of numbers and feries—the calculus integralis—the movement of the celeftial bodies—the attraction of fpheroidico-elliptical bodies—the famous folution of the isoperimetrical problem—and an infinity of other objects, the hundredth part of which would have made an ordinary man illustrious.

And now it was time to collect, into one fystematical and, continued work, all the important difcoveries on the infinitefimal analysis, which Euler had been making for 30 years, and which lay dispersed in the memoirs of the different academies. This, accordingly, the Professor undertook ; but he prepared the way by an elementary work, containing all the previous requifites for this study. This is called "An Introduction to the analysis of infinitesimals," and is a work in which the author has exhausted all the doctrine of fractions, whether algebraical or transcendental, by shewing their transformation, their resolution, and their development. This introduction was foon followed by the author's feveral leffons-on the " calculus integralis" and "differentialis." Having engaged himfelf to count Orlow, to furnish the academy with papers sufficient to fill their volumes for twenty years after his death, the philofopher is likely to keep his word, having prefented feventy papers, through Mr. Golofkin, in the courfe of his life, and left two hundred and fifty more behind him; nor is there one of thefe that does not contain a difcovery, or fomething that may lead to one. The most ancient of these memoirs form the collection then published, under the title of "Opuscula Analytica." Such were Euler's labours, and thefe his titles to immortality! His memory shall endure till Science herself is no more! Few men of letters have written fo much as Euler; no geometrician has ever embraced fo many objects at one time, or has equalled him, either in the variety or magnitude of his discoveries. When we reflect on the good fuch men do their fellow-creatures, we cannot help indulging a wifh (vain, alas! as it is) for their illustrious course to be prolonged beyond the term allotted to mankind. Euler's, though it has had an end, was very long and very honourable; and it affords us fome confolation for his lofs, to think that he enjoyed it exempt from the ordinary confequences of extraordinary application, and that his last labours abounded in proofs of that vigour of understanding, which marked his early days, and which he pre-B 3 ferved ferved to his end. Some fwimmings in the head, which feized him on the first days of September 1783, did not prevent his laying hold of a few facts, which reached him through the channel of the public papers, to calculate the motions of the aerostatical globes; and he even compassed a very difficult integration, in which the calculation had engaged him [c]. But the decree was gone forth : on the 7th of September he talked with Mr. Lexell, who had come to dine with him, of the new planet, and discourfed with him upon other subjects, with his usual penetration. He was playing with one of his grandchildren at tea-time, when he was feized with an apoplectic fit. " I am dying," faid he before he loft his fenfes, and he ended his glorious life a few hours after, aged feventy-fix years, five months, and three days. His latter days were tranquil and ferene. A few infirmities excepted, which are the inevitable lot of an advanced age, he enjoyed a share of health, which allowed him to give little time to repose. Euler poffeffed, to a great degree, what is commonly called erudition; he had read all the Latin classics; was perfect master of ancient mathematical literature, and had the hiftory of all ages, and all nations, even to the minutest facts, ever present to his mind. Besides this, he knew much more of physic, botany, and chemistry, than could be expected, from any man who had not made these sciences his peculiar occupation. " I have seen," fays Mr. Fuls, " strangers go from him with a kind of surprise mixed with admiration; they could not conceive how a man, who, for half a century, had feemed taken up in making and publishing discoveries in natural philosophy and mathematics, could have found means to preferve fo much knowledge, that feemed useless to himself, and foreign to the studies in which he was engaged. This was the effect of a happy memory, that loft nothing of what had ever been entrusted to it; nor was it a wonder that the man who was able to repeat the whole Æneis, and to point out to his hearers the first and last verses of every page of his own edition of it, should not have loft what he had learned, at an age when the impreflions made upon us are the strongest [D]. Nothing can equal the ease

[c] This reminds us of the illustrious Boerhaave, who kept feeling his pulfe the morning of his death, to see whether it would beat till a book he was cager to fee was published, read the book, and faid, "Now the business of life is over." —Such men seem not to die, but to be translated to the place where they refume their occupations.

[p] "Another proof of the strength of his memory and imagination deferves to be related. Being engaged in teaching his grandchildren geometry and algebra, and obliged, in confequence, to initiate them in the extraction of roots; he was obliged to give them numbers, which fhould be the powers of other numbers; thefe he ufed to make in his head; and one night, not being able to fleep, he calculated the fix first powers of all the numbers above twenty, and, to our great aftonifhment, repeated them to us feveral days after."

with which, without expressing the least degree of ill-humour, he could quit his abstrufe meditations, and give himself up to the general amufements of fociety. The art of not appearing wife above one's fellows, of defcending to the level of those with whom one lives, is too rare in these days not to make it a merit in Euler to have possessed it. A temper ever equal, a natural and eafy chearfulnefs, a fpecies of fatirical wit, tempered with urbane humanity, the art of telling a ftory archly, and with fimplicity, made his conversation generally fought. The great fund of vivacity, which he had at all times poffeffed, and without which, indeed, the activity we have just been admiring could not have existed, carried him sometimes away, and he was apt to grow warm ; but his anger left him as quickly as it came on, and there never has exifted a man to whom he bore malice. He possefied a precious fund of rectitude and probity. The fworn enemy of injustice, whenever or by whomfoever committed, he used to cenfure and attack it, without the least attention to the rank or riches of the offender.-Recent examples of this are in the recollection of all who hear me. As he was filled with respect for religion, his piety was fincere, and his devotion full of fervour .---He went through all his christian duties with the greatest attention. Euler loved all mankind, and if he ever felt a motion of indignation, it was against the enemy of religion, particularly against the declared apostles of infidelity. He defended revelation against the objections of these men, in a work published at Berlin, in 1747. He was a good husband, a good father, a good friend, a good citizen, a good member of private fociety !

" Euler was twice married, and had thirteen children, four of whom only have furvived him. The eldeft fon is well known as his father's affifiant and fucceffor; the fecond is phyfician to the emprefs; and the third is a lieutenant-colonel of artillery, and director of the armory at Sefterbeck. The daughter married major Bell. From these children he had 38 grandchildren, 26 of whom are still alive. Never have I been prefent at a more touching fight than that exhibited by this venerable old man, furrounded, like a patriarch, by his numerous offspring, all attentive to make his old age agreeable, and enliven the remainder of his days, by every species of kind solicitude and care. It would be vain for me to attempt to defcribe to you thefe tonching scenes of domestic felicity; feveral of you have yourfelves been eye-witnefles of them; you, especially, gentlemen, who make it your boast to have had him for your master. Here we stand, five of us in number! has there ever existed a man of letters, who could glory himself in having feen to many of his fcholars the members of to learned E 4 a fociety [E]? Why is not it given us to teftify to the world at large the tender and eternal affection we all of us feel for him, both as a mafter and a man? an affection but faintly pourtrayed in the feeble drawing I have been able to make of his numerous excellences. Weep, then, over him, with the fciences, who owe him fo much; with the academy, who never yet fuffered fo great a lofs; with his family, of which he was the glory and the fupport. My tears fhall mingle with yours, and the remembrance of the benefits I perfonally received be ever prefent to my mind."

The catalogue of his works in the printed edition follows, and makes 50 pages, 14 of which contain the MS. works.— The printed books confift of works publifhed feparately; and works to be found in the feveral Peterfburg acts, in 38 volumes, (from 6 to 10 papers in each volume)—in the Paris acts—in 26 volumes of the "Berlin acts" (about 5 papers to each volume) :—in the "Acta Eruditorum," in two volumes ;—in the "Mifcellanea Taurinenfia ;"—in vol. IX. of the fociety of Ulyffingue—in the "Ephemerides de Berlin ;" and in the "Memoires de la Societé Œconomique for 1766."

EULOGIUS, a pious and learned patriarch of Alexandria, who fucceeded John IV. in the year 581. He was united in clofe friendship with St. Gregory the Great, and wrote against the Novatians and many other heretics of his time. He died in 608.

EULOGIUS the Martyr, of Cordova. He was a zealous fupporter of the christians against their perfecutors, the Saracens of Spain, by whom at length he was beheaded in 859, after being elected archbisshop of Toledo, but before he had received confectation. Works of his still extant are, 1. A Memorial of the Saints, a history of some martyrs. 2. Apology for the Martyrs. 3. An Exhortation to Martyrdom.

EUMATHIUS, or Eustathius, Macrembolites, a Greek writer of Erotic or amatorial Compositions, particularly the loves of Ismenias and Ismene, whose age is very uncertain. See Fabricius Bibl. Græc. b. vi. c. vi. p. 814. vol. v1. He has been sometimes confounded with Eustathius, bishop of Thessalonica, the commentator on Homer, &c.

[E] " Properly speaking, there are eight members of the academy who were instructed by Mr. Euler, to wit, Mr. J. A. Euler, Kotelnikow, Roumousky, Kraffts, Lexell, Inschodsow, Golovin, and myself, but three were abroad when I spoke.

I spoke. "O, my dear friends, and brothers, from whose eyes I beheld the tear of fenfibility drop fast as I was reading this addrefs, which my heart had dictated to me, on that day I could only grafp your hands, for grief had entirely bereft me of my voice; but I shall never forget this token of your sincere affliction, and it gives me pleasure to do this public justice to the love ye then shewed towards our dear and incomparable master."

EUMENES,

EUMENES, a Greek general, a commander of eminence under Alexander the Great, and one of the most worthy of his fucceffors. We have his life written both by Plutarch and Cornelius Nepos, with many interesting anecdotes scattered among the remains of antiquity. He had ferved Philip during his life, and afterwards was in fuch favour with Alexander, that he gave him in marriage Barfine, a fifter of his own wife of the fame name. After the death of Alexander, Eumenes acquired great power in Afia, but having to contend with the force and ambition of Antigonus, he was, after much brave refistance, overpowered by him about 316 A.C., delivered up to him by the treachery of his foldiers, and finally put to death by that conqueror. The dread Antigonus entertained of this formidable enemy, prevailed over his generofity, and when he was asked by his foldiers how their prisoner was to be kept, he faid, " like an elephant or a lion." After his death, Antigonus granted his body to his friends, permitted them to burn it, and having gathered his ashes into a filver urn, allowed them to be fent to his wife and children. The Argyraspides, who had betrayed Eumenes, received the punishment of their treafon from the enemy they had ferved, being all destroyed by order of Antigonus. Eumenes poffeffed all the qualities which compose a hero in war, and a good and wife man in peace : a rigorous probity, and a fense of honour which made him the most faithful of subjects while he ferved a prince, and the most generous of enemies when he contended with his equals. If any furvivor of Alexander was worthy to fucceed him, it was Eumenes.

EUMENES I. King of Pergamus, fucceeded his uncle Philetærus the eunuch, the first king of that place, in the year 263. A. C. and reigned 22 years, being succeeded by his brother Attalus I. He was a staunch friend to the Romans, and confequently hated by Hannibal, who was in his time attacking them in the first Punic war.

EUMENES II., fon of Attalus the firft, and nephew to the former, fucceeded his father in the year 197, A. C. and affifted the Romans against Antiochus the Great, king of Syria, and Perfeus, the last king of Macedon. He reigned 38 years, and was fucceeded by his brother Attalus II. furnamed Philadelphus. Eumenes, fays Polybius, had a great and noble foul in a weak and delicate body. He had a noble defire of reputation, and was remarkable for his beneficence. The mutual love between him and his brother, was fo remarkable, that it is cited as an example by ancient moralists, and gave the name abovementioned to his brother Attalus.

EUMENIUS. A famous orator in the court of Constantius Chlorus, who about the year 297, spoke a panegyric to that that emperor and his brother Conftantius, which is still extant among the Panegyrici Veteres. In the fame work is alfo an oration of this author for the restoring of schools. When he died feems to be uncertain.

EUNAPIUS [F], a native of Sardis in Lydia, flourished in the fourth century, under the emperors Valentinian, Valens, and Gratian. He was a celebrated sophist, a physician, and no inconfiderable hiftorian. He was brought up by Chryfanthius, a fophift of noble birth, who was related to him by marriage; at whole request he wrote his book " Of the lives of the philosophers and sophists," in which he frequently shews himself an enemy to christianity. He wrote a history of the Cæsars, which he deduced from the reign of Claudius, where Herodian left off, down to that of Arcadius and Honorius. Photius fpeaks with approbation of this hiftory; only complains, that he all along treats the christian emperors very injuriously. while he is fo partial to the heathen, as even to prefer Julian to Constantine the Great. He inveighed also feverely against the monks, whom he charged with pride and infolence, under the mask of austerity; and ridiculed, very profanely no doubt, the relics of holy martyrs. This history is lost; but the loss is the better to be borne, becaufe we have the fubstance of it in Zofimus, who is fuppofed to have done little more than copy it. We have no remains of Eunapius, but his " Lives of the fophists," except a small fragment of his history, which is printed at the end of fome editions of the lives: though Fabricius is of opinion, that this fragment belongs to another Eunapius, who lived fomewhat earlier.

EUNOMIUS, an herefiarch of the 4th century, was born at Dacora, a town of Cappadocia; and was the fon of a peafant : but not relishing a country life, he went to Constantinople, and afterwards to Alexandria, where he became the disciple and secretary of Ætius. He was abundantly more fubtle than his master, as well as more bold in propagating the doctrines of his fect, who have fince been called Eunomians. He then returned to Antioch, where he was ordained a deacon by Eudoxus, bishop of that place; but being fent to defend Eudoxus against Basil of Ancyra, before the emperor Constantius, he was feized upon the road by the partifans of Bafil, and banished to Mide, a town of Phrygia. He returned to Con-Itantinople, and in 360 was made bishop of Cyzicum by his protector Eudoxus, who advifed him to conceal his doctrines : but Eunomius was incapable of following this advice, and gave for much diffurbance to the church by the intemperance of his zeal, that Eudoxus himfelf, by the order of Constantius, was obliged to depose him from his bishopric, and he was that very year banished again. He retired to a house which he had in Chalcedonia, where he concealed the tyrant Procopius in 365; and, being accused by the emperor Valens of having afforded shelter to his enemy, was by him banished a third time to Valens, bishop of Mursa, got him recalled; and Mauritania. he was next banished to the isle of Naxos, for disturbing the peace of the church. He again returned to Chalcedonia; but Theodofius the Elder obliged him to quit that place, and fent him first to Halmyris, a defert of Mœsia near the Danube, and afterwards to Cæfarea of Cappadocia: where, however, the inhabitants would not suffer him to continue, because he had formerly written against Basil, their bishop. Tired at length with being toffed about, he petitioned to retreat to the place of his birth; where he died very old about 394, after having experienced great variety of fufferings.

Eunomius wrote many works: and his writings were fo highly efteemed by his followers, that they thought their authority preferable to that of the gospels [G]. The greatest part of his works are lost: there is however, besides two or three finall pieces, "a confession of his faith" still remaining, which Cave took from a MS. in archbp. Tenifon's library, and inferted into his "Historia Literaria [H];" of which we will here give the fubstance, that the English reader may know what those doctrines were, which created fo much trouble, and drew fuch perfecutions upon this their zealous advocate : "There is one God uncreate and without beginning: who has nothing existing before him; for nothing can exist before what is uncreate; nor with him, for what is uncreate must be one; nor in him, for God is a fimple and uncompounded being. This one, fimple, and eternal being, is God the creator and ordainer of all things : first indeed and principally of his only begotten Son, and then through him of all other things. For God begot, created, and made the Son only, by his own direct operation and power, before all things and every other creature; not producing however any other being like himfelf, nor imparting any of his own proper fubstance to the Son : for God is immortal, uniform, indivisible, and therefore cannot communicate any part of his own proper fubstance to another. He alone is unbegotten; and it is impossible that any other being should be formed of an unbegotten substance. He did not use his own substance in begetting the Son, but his will only: nor did he beget him in the likeness of his substance, but according to his own good pleafure. He then created the Holy Spirit, the first and greatest of all spirits, by his own power indeed and operation mediately, yet by the immediate power and operation of the Son. After the Holy Spirit, he created all other things in heaven and in earth, visible and invisible, corporeal and incorporeal, mediately by himself, by the power and operation of the Son, &c. &c."

EUPHEMIA, (FLAVIA, ÆLIA, MARCIA), wife of the emperor Justin the first, who married her in the year 518. She was originally a flave, of what country is unknown, but was concubine to Justin before he married her. She died before the emperor, about the year 523, but without children. She owed her elevation to her fidelity, and the fweetnefs of her difposition.

EUPHEMIUS, patriarch of Conftantinople, after Flavitas, about the year 489. He was involved in contefts with the popes, Gelafius and others, on the fubject of erafing or preferving certain names on the facred lifts of faints called Diptycha, and, the pope being fupported by the emperor Anaftafius, the patriarch was banifhed to Ancyra in 495, where he died in 515.

EUPHORION, the fon of Polymnestus of Chalcis in Eubœa, a Greek poet and historian, born, according to Suidas, in the 26th olympiad, at the time when Pyrrhus was defeated by the Romans, which brings it to the third year of that olympiad, the year before Christ 274. Though ill made and of a fallow complexion, he was beloved by Nicia, the wife of Alexander the king of his country. Towards the latter end of his life he grew rich, and became librarian to Antiochus the Great, king of Syria, at the time of whole accession he was turned fifty years of age. The time of his death is uncertain. He wrote in heroic verse: some few fragments are ftill extant. Cicero speaks of his compositions as obscure : but he was highly effected by the emperor Tiberius, who imitated his ftyle, and placed statues of him in the libraries of Rome. There was also another Euphorion, a fon of Æschylus, who gained prizes at Athens for fome posthumous tragedies of his father's; and wrote a few himfelf: and another, author of fome Greek epigrams in the Anthologia, who flourished in the 126th olympiad.

EUPHRATES, a heretic of the fecond century, founder of the fect of Ophites or Serpentarians, one of whole dogmas was "that the ferpent by which our first parents were deceived, was either Christ himself or Sophia (wisdom) concealed under that form," for which reason they paid a kind of divine honours to certain ferpents kept for that purpose. In most points he adhered to the Oriental or Gnostic philosophy of two opposite principles, with the Æons, and other dreams of those fects. There were also two philosophers of this name, one a Platonic under Perdiccas, the other a Stoic under Adrian. EUPHRANOR, an excellent fculptor and painter of Athens, flourithed about 362 years before Chrift. He wrote feveral volumes on the art of colouring, and on fymmetry, which are loft. His conceptions were noble and elevated, his ftyle mafculine and bold: and he was, according to Pliny, the first who fignalized himfelf by reprefenting the majesty of heroes. Among his inost celebrated paintings were the twelve Gods, the battle of Mantinea, and Theseus. With respect to the latter, he used to fay, that the Theseus of Parrhasius had been fed with roses, but his with beef.

EUPOLIS, an Athenian comic poet, who flourished about the year 435 before Christ, in the time of the old comedy. His play of Numeniæ was acted in this year, his Flatterers about 420. Many others of his pieces are known by name, but only fragments of any of them remain. Of his death various accounts are given. Some fay that he was thrown into the fea, by order of Alcibiades, for writing the Baptæ against him; others, that he was shipwrecked in a military expedition in the Helless suidas, a decree, that no poet should perform military fervice. He obtained feven prizes in the theatres of Athens. His first drama was produced at the age of feventeen.

EVREMOND St. (CHARLES de St. Denis, lord of) a celebrated French wit, was descended from one of the best families in Normandy, and born at St. Denis le Guaft, April I, .1612. Being a younger fon, he was defigned for the gown; and, at nine years of age, fent to Paris to be bred a scholar. He was entered in the college of Clermont; and continued there four years, during which he went through grammar-learning and rhetoric. He went next to the university of Caen, in order to study philosophy; and, having continued -there one year, returned to Paris, where he purfued the fame ftudy one year longer in the college of Harcourt. He diftinguished himself no less in the academical exercises, than by his fludies; and excelled particularly in fencing, infomuch, that "St. Evremond's pafs" became famous among the fwordsmen. As foon as he had completed his philosophical, and other exercifes, he began to fludy the law : but, whether his relations had then other views, or his own inclination led him to arms, he quitted that study, after he had followed it a twelvemonth; and was made an enfign before he was full fixteen. When he had ferved two or three campaigns, he obtained a lieutenant's commission; and had a company of foot given him, after the fiege of Landrecy.

A military life did not hinder him from cultivating philosophy and the belles lettres. He had also no mean opinion of the law, which he thought not only useful, but even necessary to a gentleman; and ever delighted much in cultivating it. He fignalized himfelf in the army by his politeness and by his wit, as much as by his bravery. He was at the fiege of Arras in 1640; and the year following obtained a commission in the horfe, which gave him fresh opportunities of distinguishing himfelf. These accomplishments recommended him to all the great men of his time; and the duke of Enguien was fo charmed with his conversation, that he made him lieutenant of his guards, for the fake of having him conftantly near his person. In 1643, after the campaign of Rocroy, he wrote a kind of fatire against the French Academy, which was published in 1650 with this title, " The comedy of the academicians for reforming the French tongue." He ferved in the campaign of Friburg in 1644; and the next year received a dangerous wound in the knee, at the battle of Nortlingen. After the taking of Furnes in 1646, the duke of Enguien appointed him to carry the news to court; and, having at the fame time opened to him his defign of belieging Dunkirk, charged him to propose it to cardinal Mazarin, and to settle with him all that was necessary for the execution of fo great an undertaking. He was fo dextrous in the management of this commission, that the minister confented to all the duke defired.

inche aussi aussi a casa a

In 1648, he loft the post which he had near the prince of Condé; for this was the duke's title after his father's death. The occasion of it was an offence he had given to the prince, by being too fatyrical. The prince loved raillery, but could not always pardon it. The year after he went to Normandy, to fee his family. The duke of Longueville, who had declared against Mazarin, used all endeavours to engage St. Evremond of his party; offering him the command of his artillery. This he refused to accept, as he tells us himfelf, in a fatire intitled, " The duke of Longueville's retreat to his government of Normandy;" a piece with which Mazarin was fo extremely pleafed, that in his last fickness he several times engaged St. Evremond to read it to him. In 1650, he followed the court to Havro de Grace, in company with the duke of Candale. In this journey he had a long conversation with that noble perfonage, which he afterwards committed to paper; and in which he joined, to the judicious counfels he gave his friend, the characters of the courtiers with whom he was most intimate. The civil war broke out in 1652; and the king, being acquainted with his merit and bravery, and knowing befides that he had conftantly refused to be employed against the court, made him a mareschal de camp, or majorgeneral; and the next day gave him a warrant for a penfion ot of 3000 livres a year. He ferved afterwards under the duke of Candale in the war of Guienne; but, upon the reduction of that province, was committed by cardinal Mazarin to the Baftile, where he continued two or three months. Some jefts againft the cardinal in a company where St. Evremond was, and in which he had no greater fhare than the reft, were the pretence for his confinement. But the true reafon was, that he was fulpected to have given the duke of Candale fome advice unpleafing to the cardinal. Yet, when St. Evremond went to return him thanks after his enlargement, the cardinal told him very obligingly, that " he was perfuaded of his innocence; but that a man in his fituation was obliged to hearken to fo many reports, that it was very difficult for him to diftinguifh truth from fallfhood, and not to do injuffice fometimes to an honeft man."

In 1654, he ferved in Flanders: during which campaign, being one day at dinner with the marshal d'Hoquincourt, he was witness to the conversation that general had with father Canaye, a jesuit, then director of the hospital of the king's army: which he found fo entertaining, that he committed it to writing fome time after, and it is now in his works. In 1657, he fought a duel with the marquis de Force; and, though all possible care was taken to keep it fecret, the court had notice of it, which obliged him to retire into the country, till his friends had obtained his pardon. In 1659, he ferved in Flanders, till the fuspension of arms was settled between France and Spain: and afterwards accompanied Mazarin, when he went to conclude a peace with Don Luis de Haro, the king of Spain's first minister. He had promised the marguis of Crequi, afterwards marshal of France, to give him a particular account of the whole negotiation : and therefore, as foon as the peace was figned, he wrote a long letter to the marquis, in which he shewed, that the cardinal had facrificed the honour and welfare of France to his own private interest; and treated him in a very fatyrical manner. This letter falling afterwards into the hands of fome of the cardinal's creatures, though fome time after his death, it was reprefented as a state-crime; and he was obliged to fly to Holland, where he arrived in 1661. He had taken a tour into England, the year before, with the count of Soiffons, who had been fent over by the king of France to compliment Charles II. upon his restoration; and there had made many friends. He did not therefore ftay any long time in Holland, but passed over into England; where he was received with great respect, and admitted into the friendship of the duke of Buckingham, and other perfons of distinction.

Jn

In England he wrote many pieces, which, with the reft of his works, have been feveral times printed. In 1665, he was feized with a diforder, which threw him into a fort of melancholy, and greatly weakened him; upon which he was advifed to go to Holland, where he vifited fome learned men and celebrated philosophers, who were then at the Hague, particularly Heinfius, Voffius, and Spinoza. He afterwards refolved to fee Flanders, and spent some time at Breda, where negotiations for peace were carried on between England and Holland; went from thence to Spa and Bruffels; and, in his return to the Hague, passed through Liege. He had now made up his mind to pass the remainder of his days in Holland; when Sir William Temple delivered letters to him from the earl of Arlington, informing him, that king Charles defired his return to England. Upon this, he croffed the fea once more; and the king gave him a penfion of 300l. a year. He could not however forget his own country; and made feveral attempts to procure leave to return, but in vain. After the peace of Nimeguen in 1679, he wrote an epiftle in verse to the king of France, in which he indirectly asked leave to return to his native country; but it proved ineffectual.

Upon the death of Charles II. in 1685, he loft his penfion; and, as he could not rely on the affection of king James, though that prince had shewn himself extremely kind to him, he defired his friends to renew their endeavours to procure his return. The marshal de Crequi advised him to write to the king, and promifed to deliver his letter; but it had no more effect than the epiftle in verse. In 1686, the earl of Sunderland proposed to king James to create for him a place of secretary of the cabinet, whole province should be to write the king's private letters to the foreign princes. The king approved the plan; but St. Evremond thought it did not be-come him to accept fuch an office. The revolution was advantageous to him. The prince of Orange had been very kind to him in Holland; and, when he came to be king of England, gave him very substantial marks of his favour. He often took him into his parties of pleafure, and loved to converfe with him; to hear him talk of the great generals he had feen in France, and of the military transactions to which he had been witnefs. St. Evremond had now refolved to finish his days peaceably in England, when he received letters from the count of Grammont, acquainting him, that he might return, and would be well received. But he returned for anfwer, that the infirmities infeparable from old age would not permit him to undertake fuch a journey, nor was he disposed to leave a country where he lived very agreeably. "He liked, he faid, to be with people who were used to see his wen." In 1697, he 4 he wrote a little piece against the abbot Renaudot, on the fubject of Bayle's dictionary. Sept. 1703, he was feized with a strangury, of which he died the 9th of that month, in his 95th year. He was interred in Westminster-abbey, where a monument was erected to his memory by his friends, with a Latin epitaph, in which he is highly praifed. 'He was never married.

St. Evremond had blue, lively; and fparkling eyes, a large forehead, thick eye-brows, a handfome mouth and an expreffive fmile, in fhort, an agreeable and ingenuous countenance. Twenty years before his death, a wen grew between his eyebrows, which afterwards increased to a confiderable bigness; but was no way troublefome to him. His behaviour was civil and engaging, his humour ever gay and merry; but he had a strong inclination to fatire. His friend, the dutchess of Ma-zarin, who also lived for sometime in England, used jocularly to call him " the old fatyr." He always fpoke of his difgrace with the firmness of a gentleman; and whatever strong defire he might have to see his country again, he never follicited it in a mean or cringing manner. Though he did not pretend to rigid morals, yet he had all the qualities which are supposed to constitute a man of honour; was just, generous, grateful, full of goodness and humanity. As for religion, he always professed the Romish, in which he was born; though he has been fuspected of being a free-thinker. Bayle, who would wish to have it thought fo, tells us, in one of his letters, that it was publicly known, he used no affistance either of minister or priest, to prepare him for death; and that it was faid, the envoy from the court of Florence actually fent to him an ecclefiaftic, who, afking him whether he would be reconciled, received for anfwer, "With all my heart : I would fain be reconciled to my ftomach, which no longer performs its ufual functions." But this feems inconfistent with what is faid of his care not to jest on religious subjects. I have feen verses, continues Bayle, which he wrote fifteen days before his death ; and his only regret was, that he was reduced to boiled meats, and could no longer digest partridges and pheafants. Another author informs us, that he was more affected with the death of the dutchess of Mazarin, with whom he had lived in the most unreferved friendship, than with the approach of his own; for he shewed no regret of life, though he had made the purfuit of pleafures his principal study for above fifty years [1]. But whatever might be his fentiments of religion, he never let fall, any loofe expressions about it : nor could he bear that it should be made a subject of mirth.

[1] Reflections on the death of free-thinkers, &c. By Monf. Deflands: VOL. VI. C "Com"Common decency," he faid, " and the regard due to one's fellow-creatures, will not fuffer it."

In order to complete his character, we will here add that which he drew for himfelf in 1696; and fent to the count of Grammont, together with that nobleman's epitaph, who had been dangeroufly ill, but was then perfectly recovered. " If," fays he, " after having read the epitaph, you have the curiofity to know him that made it, I will give you his character a He is a philosopher equally remote from superstition and impiety: a voluptuary, who has no lefs averlion for debauchery, than inclination for pleafure: one who never felt the preffure of indigence, and who was never acquainted with plenty. He lives in a condition defpifed, by those who have every thing, envied by those who have nothing, relished by those who make reason the foundation of their happiness. When he was young, he hated profusenes; being perfuaded, that wealth is necessary for the conveniences of a long life. Now he is old, he canhardly endure thriftines; being of opinion, that want is little to be dreaded, when a man has but little time left to be miferable. He is well pleafed with nature, and does not complain: of fortune. He hates vice, is indulgent to frailties, and laments misfortunes. He fearches not after the failings of men. with defign to expose them; he only finds out the ridiculous in them for his own diversion. He has a fecret pleasure in perceiving this himfelf : he would have yet a greater in difcovering it to others, were he not checked by difcretion. Life, in his opinion, is too fhort to read all forts of books, and to burden one's memory with a multitude of things at the expence of one's judgement. He does not apply himfelf to the most learned writers, in order to acquire knowledge; but to the most rational, to fortify his reason. Sometimes he chuses the most delicate, to render his own taste fo; sometimes the most agreeable, to give the fame turn to his own genius. It remains, that I defcribe him fuch as he is in friendship and. in religion. In friendship, he is more constant than a philotopher, and more fincere than a younger man of good-nature without experience : as to religion,

Juffice and charity fupply, the place

Of rigid penance and a formal face. His piety, without inflicted pains,. Flows eafy, and aufterity difdains. God only is the object of his care, Whofe goodnefs leaves no room for black defpair : Within the bofom of kind providence

He places his repose, his blifs, and sure defence."

There have been feveral editions of his works; but the befe is that of Amfterdam 1726, in five volumes 12mo, together with with two volumes more in the fame fize, intituled, "A curious collection of the best pieces attributed to St. Evremond. and of feveral pieces by other hands:" to all which is prefixed his life, exactly as well as copioufly written by Des Maizeaux. Several of his pieces had been translated into English, though very incorrectly: but we have an accurate translation of the whole published by Des Maizeaux, 1726, feven vols.; the fecond edition of which was printed at London in 1728, in three volumes 8vo.

EURIPIDES, the tragic poet, was born of a creditable Athenian family; especially on his mother Clito's fide, whom Suidas reports to have been nobly defcended, though Aristophanes in jeft calls her a cabbage-feller, and Valerius Maximus has recorded it in earnest [K]. He was born in the island Salamis, whither his father and mother had fled, with a great many other eminent families of Athens, upon the formidable invalion of Greece by Xerxes : and his birth is supposed to have happened in the first year of the 75th Olympiad, 480 years before Chrift. His name is supposed to have been formed from the Euripus, or narrow fea, in which the battle of Salamis was fought. It is faid, that while his mother was with child, her husband Mnefarchus confulted the oracle of Apollo, to know what he might hope for; and that he received these verses in anfwer:

" Happy Mnefarchus! heaven defigns a fon:

The liftening world shall witness his renown,

Eufeb. Præp. Evan. v. 33.

Mnefarchus, interpreting this promise of the oracle no higher, than that his fon fhould win the prize in the Olympic games, took care to educate him in the fame manner with those whom the Greeks defigned for athletæ or wreftlers: but Euripides, though he made fo good a progrefs in thefe feats of the body, as to gain the crown at the Athenian sports in honour of Ceres and Thefeus [L], had always much greater thoughts in his head : and therefore, while his father was labouring to have him perfect in the palæstra, made a nobler choice for himself, being a conftant auditor of Anaxagoras in philosophy, and Prodicus in rhetoric; and diverting himfelf in the mean time with painting, which fome will have to have been at first his profession. It is not probable, that Euripides learnt morality of Socrates, as Gellius reports: Socrates was ten or twelve years younger than Euripides, and therefore is more likely to have profited by him.

The

The occasion of his applying himfelf to dramatic poetry was the extreme danger his mafter Anaxagoras had incurred by his philosophy: who, under the accusation of despising the public gods, was banished from Athens by the fury of the mob, and had good fortune to escape with his life. He was then eighteen; but his works will evidently fhew, that he did not afterwards lay afide the study of morality and physics. He wrote a great number of tragedies, which were highly efteemed both in his life-time and after his death : and Quintilian, among many others, doubted whether he was not the best of the tragic poets. " Sophocles and Euripides," fays he, " have far excelled Æschylus in tragedy. Many people question, which of these two poets in their different manner deferves the preference; but as this bears no relation to what I am now writing upon, I shall leave it undetermined. However, there is no one but must own, that Euripides will be of much more use to those who are intended to plead : for his diction, which is cenfured by fuch as think there is more fublimity in the grave, majeftic, and fonorous style of Sophocles, comes nearer to that of an orator. He likewife abounds with moral reflections; and is almost equal to the fages, when he treats on the fame fubject with them. In his manner of reafoning and replying, he may be compared to the most renowned orators at the bar. He charms all, when he attempts to raife the paffions; and, when he would raife pity, he is inimitable [M]."

It has been wondered, that the Roman poets should celebrate Sophocles, Æschylus, and Thespis, as Virgil, Propertius, and Horace have done, yet should make no mention of Euripides: but the reason assigned for this omission is, that the fyllables which compose his name were not fuited to hexameter verse, and not that they thought him inferior, at least to Æschylus and Thespis. Varro relates, that out of the 75 tragedies written by him, five only gained the victory; yet observes, that most of those who conquered him were wretched poetasters. This is not to be wondered at; for at that time, perhaps more than in the prefent [N], cabal pronounced the fate of compofitions; and the bafest arts were employed, in order to procure the favour of the judges. In the mean time, his pieces were prodigioufly applauded; and nothing can better demonstrate the high efteem they were in, than the fervice they did to the Atheniens in Sicily. The Athenian army under the command of Nicias suffered all the calamities that ill fortune in war can produce. The victors made a most cruel advantage of their victories: but although they treated the Athenian foldiers with fo much inhumanity, yet they were extremely kind to fuch as could repeat any verses of Euripides. "We are told," fays Plutarch, " that many, who returned fafe to their country, ** kindly faluted Euripides, declaring that they had been re-" ftored to their liberty, for teaching their victors fuch verfes " of his as they remembered; and that others, who roamed up " and down, had meat and drink given them, in return for finging s his verses [0]."

It was almost impossible for two great poets, such as Sophocles and Euripides, who were contemporary, and afpired to the fame glory, to love one another, or to continue long in friendship. Accordingly they quarrelled; and Athenæus relates feveral particulars of their enmity, which are no way honourable to them. Neverthelefs, Sophocles difcovered a great efteem for Euripides, when he heard of his death: he caufed a tragedy to be represented, in which he himself appeared in a mourning habit, and made his actors take off their crowns. Aristophanes took great pleasure in ridiculing Euripides in his comedies, which perhaps might give him more uneafinefs than his quarrel with Sophocles. There are many ftrong passages in his tragedies against women: on which account he acquired the name of a woman-hater; yet he married when he was only three and twenty years old, and had three fons. The diffolute life of this first wife forced him to divorce her, and he married a fecond, who proved at least as diforderly. Though Suidas has diftinguished Euripides by the title of woman-hater, yet Athenæus calls him a woman-lover. He affures us, that this poet was very fond of women, and that Sophocles hearing fomebody fay, that he bore a mortal hatred to them; "I own he does," fays Sophocles, " in his tragedies, but he is paffionately fond " of them in bed [P]." Agreeably to this notion of his chastity, fome authors fay, that defirous to make use of the privilege allowed of marrying two wives, he took two together, but made fo ill a choice, that they quite wore out his patience, and raifed in him an averfion to the whole fex [Q].

It was about a year after the Sicilian defeat, when he left Athens, and went to the Macedonian court. Some fay that the reafon of his going thither was, becaufe, having caught his wife in bed with an actor, he was ashamed of shewing his face at Athens. But this feems an idle ftory, and there is no occafion to have recourfe to any fuch fuppolition. Archelaus, king of Macedonia, was fond of learned men, invited them to his court by acts of munificence, gave them a most gracious reception, and often raifed them to very high honours. He did fo by Euripides, whom, if Solinus may be credited, he made his prime minister [R]. Nothing can be a more express proof of. the high efteem Archelaus had for him, than his behaving to Decamnichus, who one day reproached him with having a ftinking breath: to whom the poet replied, " My mouth has reason to stink, fince so many secrets have rotted in it [s]." But Archelaus, not thinking Euripides fufficiently revenged by this answer, delivered Decamnichus up to him, in order that he might explate the affront by being foundly lashed. The advanced age of Euripides, and the chaftity which many writers afcribe to him, fhould reftrain us from believing too haftily the amorous adventures which are faid to have befallen him in Macedon. He was feventy-two, when he went to that court, and it has always been acknowledged, that he never was inclined to unnatural amours. He had passed but few years there, when an unhappy accident concluded his life. He was walking in a wood, and, according to his usual manner, in deep meditation; when, unfortunately meeting with Archelaus's hounds, he was by them torn to pieces. Every account gives him the fame end, though it differs from the reft in some minute circumftances. Some indeed relate that he was pulled to pieces by women, to revenge the honour of their fex; but this is a fable, copied from that of Orpheus, who is faid to have been deftroyed by Bacchanals. It is not certain, whether his death happened by chance, or through envy of fome of the courtiers. Archelaus, however, buried him with great magnificence; and not contented with folemnizing his funeral obfequies, he alfo cut his hair, and affumed all the marks of grief. The Athenians were fo moved with his death, that the whole city went into mourning; and one of his friends, named Philemon, declared that, could he be perfuaded that the dead enjoy a fenfe of things, he would hang himfelf, in order to be with Euripides. He was near feventy-five years old when he died; and, notwithftanding the afperfions recorded by Athæneus, he was, according to the best accounts, a man of great gravity and feverity in his conduct, and regardlefs of pleafures.

He is, of all writers, the most remarkable for having intersperfed moral reflections and philosophical aphorisms in his dramatic pieces; and, it is generally thought, he has done it too frequently. Though he had the fate of Anaxagoras before his eyes, yet he was not always fo well guarded about his maxims as he should have been. He hazarded one, relating to the fanctity of an oath, which brought him to danger. It is this in his Hippolytus: " My tongue has fworn, but still my mind is free." For this verse he was impeached of impiety, as teaching and defending perjury; but it does not appear that he was punished for

it. The answer he made to the accuser is left on record by Aristotle [T]: " that it was a very unreasonable thing to bring " a cause into a court of judicature, which belonged only to " the cognizance of a theatre, and the liberty of a public " festival; that, when these words were spoken on the stage, " there went along with them fome reafon to justify them, and " that he was ready to justify them, whenever the bill should " be preferred in the right place." Another time he incenfed the audience highly, by making Bellerophon dogmatize too gravely in favour of avarice; fo highly, that they would have driven the actor from the stage, if Euripides himfelf had not appeared, and befought them to have a little patience, by affuring them, that they would foon fee the unhappy end of the mifer, whole maxims had to ftrongly difgusted the audience. This we learn from Seneca [U]. Plutarch relates, that at another time fuch offence was taken at the two first verses of his Menalippus, which feemed to doubt the existence of Jupiter himfelf [w], that he was forced to change them: and others have concluded him to be an atheift, from impious speeches uttered in his plays. But, in anfwer to all thefe, we may afk. whether any thing can be more abfurd, than to afcribe to the author of a tragedy the fentiments he puts into the mouths of his characters? His last editor Barnes observes, that, to support the character of Sifyphus, he was obliged to make him reason as an atheist; and that therefore Plutarch had no just caule to sufpect there the artifices of an author, of giving vent to his own thoughts under another man's name. " I wonder " very much," fays Barnes, " what it was could make fo " great a man believe, that Euripides had delivered his fenti-" ments craftily in the perfon of Sifyphus; and that this " fhould be our tragic poet's opinion, fince no man ever " had a deeper fense of religion than Euripides, as is manifest " from numberlefs paffages in his works; and it very juftly " fuited the character of Sifyphus to fpeak impioufly, as I " obferved on Bellerophon [x]."

He used to shut himself up in a gloomy cave, and there compose his works. This cave was in the isle of Salamis, and Aulus Gellius [x] had the curiosity to go into it. He composed his verses with great difficulty. He one day complained to the poet Alcestis, that in the three last days he had been able to write but three verses, though he had laboured with all his might. Alcestis observed, with an air of high vanity, that he had written an hundred with the utmost ease. "Ay, but," fays Euripides, "you don't consider the difference; your verses

" are made to live no longer than thefe three days, whereas " mine are to continue for ever." The works of Euripides, as well as Sophocles, were transmitted to king Ptolemy, when he was founding the Alexandrian library : and the circumstance is thus related by Galen: "King Ptolemy," fays he, "fent to " the Athenians to borrow the original manufcripts of Sopho-" cles, Æschylus, and Euripides, in order to transcribe them " for his library; laying down in their hands fifteen talents of " filver, by way of fecurity. Upon receipt of the books, he " took care to have them written out on the fairest parchment, " and fet off with the richeft ornaments: and then, keeping the " originals, he fent the copies to Athens, with this meffage, " viz. that the king had defired the city to accept of those " books; and of the fifteen talents which he had left in their " hands: that they had no reafon to be angry, fince, if he " had neither fent them the originals nor the copies, he had " done them no injury, inafmuch as they themfelves, by tak-" ing a fecurity, fuppofed it a fufficient reparation for the " loss [z]."

There are now extant but nineteen of his tragedies, and part of a twentieth; though Suidas fays, that he composed ninetytwo. Suidas fays alfo, that, according to others, he wrote seventy-five only; but Barnes found the titles of eighty-four. There had been five editions of all his plays, in Greek, with Latin verfions; and that of Cambridge by Joshua Barnes, 1694, in folio, has been accounted the best. This editor added the Scholia, and all the fragments he could find, with notes, and a life of Euripides, abounding with erudition. But an edition has lately, (1778), been published from the Clarendon press at Oxford, with all the necessary care of having collated Mff. with learned notes, and the Latin verfion amended, by Samuel Mufgrave, M. D.: which edition, there is reafon to believe, is far more correct than any of the former. It is in four volumes, 4to. [A]. Three fingle plays (the "Supplices Mu-" lieres," and the two " Iphigeniæ") had before been incomparably well edited by Mr. Markland; and by the laudable labours of Mr. Woodhull and Mr. Potter, the English language. can now boaft of two good poetical translations of Euripides.

hulband, meaning to reward her accomplice with her hand and the crown, but her plots were happily detected, and betrayed by her daughter. Amyntas, however, fpared her life. After the death of Amyntas, her two elder fons, who fucceeded to the crown, fell martyrs to her cruelty and ambition: her third fon, Philip, had wifdom to guard himfelf against her plots, and reigned fecurely. This was Philip, the father of Alexander the Great.

EURYDICE, wife of Philip, furnamed Arrhidæus, a natural fon of Philip, who for a few years after the death of Alexander the Great had the title of king. He was, however, very weak, and Eurydice was the active perfon. But Olympias, mother of Alexander, prevailing, by her order Arrhidæus and his wife were put to death. The latter had the liberty of choofing her death, and preferred the cord to the dagger or the bowl.

EUSDEN (LAWRENCE), defcended from a good family in Ireland, and fon of Dr. Eufden, rector of Spotfworth in Yorkshire, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge; after which he went into orders; and was for fome time chaplain to Richard Lord Willoughby de Broke. His first patron was the celebrated Lord Halifax, whofe poem " On the Battle of the Boyne," Eufden translated into Latin. He was also effected by the duke of Newcastle, on whose marriage with lady Henrietta Godolphin he wrote an Epithalamium, for which, upon the death of Rowe, he was by his grace (who was then lord chamberlain, and confidered the verfes as an elegant compliment) preferred in 1718 to the laureatship, He had feveral enemies; and, among others, Pope, who put him into his Dunciad; though we do not know what provocation he gave to any of them, unlefs by being raifed to the dignity of the laurel. Cooke, in his "Battle of the Poets," fpeaks thus of him:

" Eufden, a laurel'd bard, by fortune rais'd,

" By few been read, by fewer still been prais'd," &c.

And Oldmixon, in his "Art of Logic and Rhetoric," p. 413, is not fparing of his reflexions on the poet and his patron. His cenfures, however, are plainly those of a disappointed competitor. And perhaps great part of the ridicule, which has been thrown on Eusden, may arise from his fucceeding fo ingenious a poet as Rowe. That he was no inconfiderable versifier, the poems he has left will evince; and, as his moral character appears to have been respectable, the duke acted a generous part in providing for a man who had conferred an obligation on him. The first-rate poets were either of principles very different from the government, or thought themselves too diftinguished to undergo the drudgery of an annual annual Ode. Eufden, however, feems to have been but little known before his preferment, if we judge by the manner in which he is mentioned in the duke of Buckingham's "Seffion " of the Poets:"

" In rushed Eusden, and cried, who shall have it,

" But I the true laureat, to whom the king gave it?

" Apollo begg'd pardon, and granted his claim,

"But vow'd that till then he ne'er heard of his name."

In fome old book, which the compiler of this article cannot recollect, it is obferved, that Eufden fet out well in life, but afterwards turned out a drunkard, and befotted his faculties away. He died at his rectory at Coningfby, Lincolnfhire, the 27th of September, 1730; and left behind him in MS. a translation of the works of Taffo, with a life of that poet. Some of his beft poems may be feen in Nichols's "Select "Collection."

EUSEBIA (AURELIA), the wife of the emperor Conftantius. A woman of excellent genius and erudition, but ftrongly addicted to the Arian herefy: in fupport of which the exerted all her influence over her hufband, which was confiderable. Few of the empreffes had been to handfome, fcarcely any to chafte. She prevailed on Conftantius to give his fifter Helena to Julian, and to name him Cæfar. Many virtues are allowed her by hiftorians, and among others those of compaffion and humanity. Yet they accuse her of endeavouring, by potions, to render her fifter-in-law Helena barren, because the was to herfelf, and of causing the murder of her infant, because that project failed. She died about the year 360, much regretted by her hufband; according to fome authors, in confequence of medicines the took to remove sterility.

EUSEBIA, abbefs of St. Cyr, or St. Saviour, at Marfeilles. Of her is related by French writers the legend told in England of an abbefs of Coldingham, that fhe cut off her nofe to fecure herfelf from ravifhers, and that her nuns followed the example. This is faid to have happened in 731, when the Saracens invaded Provence. The cataftrophe of the tale in both countries is, that the ladies were murdered by the difappointed favages.

EUSEBIUS, furnamed Pamphilus, from his friendship with Pamphilus the Martyr, an eminent ecclesiastical historian, was born in Palestine, about A. D. 267. Cave thinks it probable, that he was born at Cæsarea [B]; but we are not certain as to the place of his birth. We have no account who were his parents, nor who his masters; but he tells us himself, that

[B] Cave, Hift. literar.—Dupin, Nouvell. Bibl.—Hen. Valefius de vit. & script. Euseb. prefixed to his edition of Eccles. hist. he was educated in Paleftine, and faw Constantine there, while he travelled through that country in the retinue of Diocletian. He was ordained priest by Agapius, bishop of Cæsarea, where he contracted an intimacy with Pamphilus, an eminent prefbyter of that church. During the perfecution under Diocletian [c], he exhorted the Christians to fuffer refolutely for the faith of Christ; and particularly affisted, his friend Pamphilus, who fuffered martyrdom after two years imprisonment. In the time of the same persecution, he went to Tyre, where he was an eye-witness of the glorious combats of the five Egyptian martyrs. He was likewife in Egypt and at Thebais, where he faw the admirable conftancy of many martyrs of both fexes. He has been reproached with having offered incenfe to idols in this perfecution, in order to free himfelf from prifon. This imputation was fixed upon him by Potomon, bishop of Heraclea, at the council of Tyre: for, if we believe Epiphanius, that bifhop, feeing Eufebius fitting in the council, cried out, " Is it fit, Eufebius, that you fhould fit, and that " the innocent Athanafius fhould fland to be judged by you? "Who can bear fuch things as thefe? Tell me, were not " you in prifon with me during the time of the perfecution ? " I lost an eye in defence of the truth; but you are maimed in no " part of your body, nor did you fuffer martyrdom, but are whole " and alive. By what means did you escape out of prison, un-" lefs you promifed our perfecutors that you would do the de-" testable thing, and perhaps have done it ?" Epiphanius adds, that Eusebius, hearing this, rofe and broke the affembly, faying, "If, when you are out of your own country, you fay " fuch things against us, it is certain that your accusers must " be in the right: for, if you exercise your tyranny here, you " will do it with much more affurance in your own country." Valefius observes, from the above-cited passage of Epiphanius, that those perfons are mistaken, who relate that Eusebius had facrificed to idols, and that it was openly objected to him in the council of Tyre; fince Potomon did not charge him with it, but only grounded a fuspicion on his being difmiffed fafe and whole. Befides, as Cave very properly remarks, had he really facrificed, the difcipline of the church was then fo rigid, that he would have been degraded from his orders; at least, would never have been advanced to the epifcopal dignity.

When the profecution was over, and peace reftored to the church, Eufebius was elected bifhop of Cæfarea in Paleftine, in the room of Agapius, who was dead; and this was about the year 313. He had afterwards a confiderable fhare in the contest relating to Arius, priest of Alexandria; whose cause

he,

he, as well as other bishops of Palestine, defended at first. upon a perfusion that Arius had been unjustly perfecuted by Alexander, bishop of Alexandria. He not only wrote to that bishop in favour of Arius, but likewife, not being able to procure his reftoration, permitted him and his followers to preferve their rank, and to hold in their churches the ordinary affemblies of the faithful, on condition that they should fubmit to their bishop, and intreat him to restore them to communion. He affisted at the council of Nice, held in 325, and made a speech to the emperor Constantine, at whose right-hand he was placed, when he came to the council. He at first refused to admit of the term CONSUBSTANTIAL; and the long and formal opposition which he made to it occasioned a suspicion that he was not altogether fincere, when he fubfcribed, as he did at length, to the Nicene creed. About 330, he was prefent at the council of Antioch, in which Eustathius, bishop of that city, was deposed: but though he confented to his deposition, and was elected to the fee of Antioch in his room, he absolutely refused it; and when the bishops wrote to Constantine to defire him to oblige Eufebius to confent to the election, he wrote alfo to the emperor, to request him that he would not urge him to accept of it: which Constantine readily granted, and at the fame time commended his moderation. Eufebius affisted at the council of Tyre held in 335 against Athanasius; and at the affembly of bishops at Jerusalem, when the church was dedicated there. He was fent by those bishops to Conftantine, to defend what they had done against Athanasius: and it was then, that he pronounced his panegyric upon that emperor, during the public rejoicings in the 30th year of his reign, which was the last of his life. He was honoured with very particular marks of Constantine's esteem: he frequently received letters from him, feveral of which are inferted in his books; and he was often invited to the emperor's table, and admitted into private difcourfe with him. When Constantine [D] wanted copies of the scriptures, for the use of those churches which he had built at Constantinople, he committed the care of transcribing them to Eusebius, whom he knew to be well skilled in those affairs: and when Eusebius dedicated to him his book " concerning Easter," he ordered it immediately to be translated into Latin, and defired our author to communicate as foon as poffible the other works of that nature which he had then in hand.

Eufebius did not long furvive Conftantine, for he died about 338, according to Dupin; or 340, according to Valefius. He wrote feveral great and important works, of which among those that are extant we have, 1. "Chronicon:" divided into two parts,

and carried down to A. D. 325; in which, not long before the council of Nice, Cave supposes this work to have been finished. The first part, which is at prefent extremely mutilated, contains an history of the Chaldeans, Asfyrians, Medes, Persians, Lydians, Jews, Egyptians, &c. from the creation of the world. In the fecond part, which is called " Canon Chronicus," he digefts the hiftory of the feveral nations according to the order of time. St. Jerom translated both parts into Latin: but we have remaining, of the verfion of the first part, only fome extracts, containing the names of the kings, printed with the translation of the fecond part. It was printed at Bafil, and afterwards published more accurately by Arnauld de Pontac, bishop of Baras, at Bourdeaux in 1604. But no perfon ever undertook to collect the Greek fragments of the original, till Joseph Scaliger published them at Leyden 1606 in folio, under the following title: " Thefaurus temporum, " complectens Eusebii Pamphili chronicon Latine, S. Hie-" ronymo interprete, cum ipfius chronici fragmentis Græcis " antehac non editis, et auctores omnes derelicta ab Eusebio " continuantes. Edente Josepho Justo Scaligero, qui notas et " castigationes in Eusebium, nec non Isagogicorum Chrono-" logiæ canonum libros tres adjecit." There was another edition, much enlarged, printed at Amsterdam in 1658, in two volumes folio, under the care of Alexander Morus. Dupin fays, that "this work of Eufebius difplays a prodigious extent " of reading, and confummate erudition. It is necessary to " have read an infinite number of books and ancient monu-" ments, in order to compile an universal history; and to " have been mafter of a very clear understanding at the fame " time, in order to collect fuch a multitude of facts, and dif-" pofe them in their proper order. This is an immense la-" bour, which is a strong proof of the vast reading and prodi-" gious memory of Eusebius. It must be owned, indeed, " that Africanus's Chronicle was of great fervice to him, and " that he has copied that author throughout his work. However " he has corrected feveral of Africanus's mistakes, though he " has fallen into others himfelf. But it is almost impossible " not to err in a work of fuch vaft extent and difficulty as an " universal chronicle. Mistakes are excusable in a perform-" ance of this kind; nor can they hinder it from being de-" fervedly confidered as one of the most useful works of anti-" quity."

His next work is, 2. "Præparationis Evangelicæ, libri XV." Valefius tells us, that this book, as well as his treatife "De "Demonstratione Evangelicâ," was written before the Nicene council, fince they are expressly cited in his "Ecclefiastical " history," which Valefius affirms to have been written also before before it: but Cave is of opinion, that the book " De Præ-" paratione Evangelica" was written after that council, undoubtedly after his " Chronicon," fince his " Canones Chro-" nici" are expressly cited in it. 3. " De Demonstratione " Evangelica." We have of this work only ten books extant, though Eufebius wrote twenty. A beautiful edition of this and the former book was printed in Greek by Robert Stephens in 1544 and 1545, in two volumes, folio. They were reprinted at Paris 1628, in two volumes, folio, with a new verfion of the book " De Præparatione" by the jefuit Francis Vigerus, and with Donatus's translation of the book "De " Demonstratione." 4. " Historiæ Ecclesiasticæ, libri V." It contains the hiftory of the church from the beginning to the death of Licinius the elder, which includes a period of 324 years. Valesius observes, that he wrote this after almost all his other works; and Cave fays, that it was written after the Nicene council, fince he mentions in it not only his " Chronicon," but likewise his treatise " De Demonstra-" tione." At the end of the eighth book, we find a small treatife "Of the martyrs of Palestine;" in which he describes the martyrdom of those who suffered for the faith of Christ in that province. This has been erroneoufly confounded with the 8th book of the hiftory; whereas it is a separate tract, which ferves for a supplement to that book. The ecclesiastical history has been often translated and printed : but the best edition is that of Henry Valefius, who, having remarked the defects of all the former translations, undertook a new one, which he has joined to the Greek text revifed by four manufcripts, and has added notes full of erudition. Valefius's edition was printed at Paris in 1659 and 1671, and at Frankfort in 1672, with the reft of the ecclesiaftical historians. It was printed again at Cambridge in 1720, in three volumes folio, by William Reading: who has joined to the notes of Valefius fuch obfervations of modern authors as he had picked up here and there. But, as Le Clerc fays, " they might as well have been placed " at the end of the book, fince they are much inferior to those " of Valefius, both for ftyle and matter; and appear with the " fame difadvantage as an ordinary painting placed by the " work of an eminent mafter [E]."

Eufebius wrote, 5. "Contra Hieroclem liber." Hierocles had written a book, under the name of Philalethes, againft the Christian religion; in which, to render it ridiculous, he had compared Apollonius Tyanæus with Christ, affirming, that the former had worked miracles as well as the latter, and was afcended to heaven as well as he. Against this work of Hierocles,

Eusebius's

Eusebius's book was written; and it is printed at the end of the "De Demonstratione Evangelica," and at the end of Philostratus " De vita Apollonii." 6. " Contra Marcellum, " libri II." and " De Ecclefiastica Theologia, libri III." This work was defigned to confute Marcellus, bishop of Ancyra, who was condemned for Sabellianifm in the fynod at Constantinople in 336; and it was written at the defire of that fynod. It is subjoined also to the book " De Demonstra-7. " Epistola ad Cæsarienses de fide Nicæna." " tione." Socrates and Theodoret have preferved this in their ecclefiaftical histories [F]. 8. " De locis Hebraicis," containing a geographical defcription of all the countries, cities, and places, mentioned in the Old Testament. It was translated into Latin, and at the fame time enlarged and corrected by St. Jerom. The original with that translation, and a new version, with learned notes, was published by James Bonfrerius at Paris in 1631 and 1659. 9. " Oratio de laudibus Constantini." We have mentioned this above; it is printed at the end of the ecclefiastical history. 10. " De vita Constantini, libri IV." This is rather a panegyric than a life, being written in a florid and oratorical style. Some have denied this to be Eufebius's; but Cave thinks their arguments fo inconfiderable, as not to deferve a particular anfwer. It is subjoined to the ecclessaftical history. 11. " Expositio in Canticum Canticorum." This was not written entirely by Eufebius, but compiled partly our of his writings, and partly out of those of Athanastus, Didymus, St. Gregory of Nyssen, and others. It was published in Greek with Polychronius and Pfellus by Meurfius at Leyden 1617 in 4to. 12. "Vitæ prophetarum," afcribed to Eufebius in an ancient manufcript, and published with the commentaries of Procopius on Ifaiah, in Greek and Latin, by Curterius, at Paris 1580, in folio. 13. " Canones facrorum evangeliorum " X." The translation of these by St. Jerom is published among that father's works, and in the "Bibliotheca patrum." 14. "Apologiæ pro Origene liber primus," translated by Ruf-finus, is published in St. Jerom's works. St. Jerom tells us, that Eufebius was the fole author of the "Six books of the " apology for Origen," ascribed to his friend Pamphilus: but it is evident from the testimony of Eusebius himself [G], and from that of Photius, that he wrote the five first books in conjunction with Pamphilus, and added the fixth after the death of that martyr. The Latin translation of the first book of this work is all that we have remaining of it. 15. "Sermo-" in illud, Sero fabbatorum. Item, De Angelis ad monumentum

" visis." These two fermons were published in Greek and Latin by Combefifius [H]. Befides thefe works of Eufebius, there are feveral extant in MS. which have not yet been published; and the titles of feveral, which are not extant. Of the latter kind, the thirty books " against Porphyry," (though Cave makes but twenty-five) " are," fays Le Clerc, " in all " probability the greatest loss, which we have fustained with " refpect to the writings of Eufebius: for we might have " learned from them the objections of the most learned phi-" lofopher of his time, and the answers of the most learned " bifhop alfo of his time [I]."

Photius has faid of Eufebius, that he was a man of extenfive learning, but that his ftyle is neither agreeable nor polite  $[\kappa]$ . Dupin observes, that he was one of the most learned men of antiquity, as his friends and enemies have equally acknowledged; and that there was none among the Greek writers, who had read fo, much; but remarks, that he never applied himfelf to the polifhing his works, and is very negligent in his ftyle. Dr. Jortin styles Eufebius " the most learned bishop of " his age, and the father of ecclefiaftical hiftory. Like the " illustrious Origen," fays he, " of whom he was very fond, " he hath had warm friends and inveterate enemies; and the " world hath ever been divided in judging of his theological " fentiments. The Arians and Unitarians have always laid " claim to him-and in truth any party might be glad to have " him.—He forupled at first to admit the word Confubstantial, " becaufe it was unscriptural; but afterwards, for the fake of " peace and quiet, he complied with it in a fenfe which he " gave to it.-He feems to have been neither an Arian nor an "Athanafian, but one who endeavoured to fteer a middle " courfe, yet inclining more to the Arians than the Atha-" nafians [1]." Le Clerc had a difpute with Cave about the orthodoxy of Eufebius: who, as Cave faid, was a Confubstantialist, but, according to Le Clerc, an Arian. See more of this in the articles of CAVE and LE CLERC.

EUSEBIUS, the pope of that name, was contemporary with the former Eufebius the hiftorian. He fucceeded Marcellus as bishop of Rome, in the year 310; and lived but four months after his elevation. He was by birth a Greek. Blair's tables give him three years in the papacy, but Pagi and others fupport the account here given.

EUSEBIUS, bishop of Berytus, of Nicomedia, and lastly, of Constantinople, into which fee he is faid to have intruded himfelf by force. A violent and active partizan of Arianifm, EUSEBIUS, bishop of Emesa in Syria. Some homilies are extant which are afcribed to him, but with little certainty. He died about 360. He alfo was an Arian.

EUSEBIUS, bishop of Verceil, or Vercelli, in Piedmont. This bishop was as strenuous a defender of Athanasius, as any of those above-mentioned were of the opposite party. In the council of Milan, 355, which was wholly under the influence of the Arian emperor Constantius, he boldly refisted the condemnation of Athanafius, and perfuaded two other bifhops to do the fame. Many orthodox bifhops prefent were furprifed into obedience. These three were banished for their firmnes: but after the death of Constantius, the bishop of Verceil returned to his fee, where he died in 371. It is not certain that any work of his is extant.

EUSEBIUS, bishop of Samofata, was another opposer of the Arians, though for fome time connected with them. He alfo was banished for his orthodoxy by the emperor Valens, and during his banifhment went about in a military difguife confoling those who were perfecuted on the same account. He attended the council of Antioch in 378, where he was a bold defender of the faith; but was killed in the fame year at Dolichæ in Syria, by a tile which an Arian woman threw upon his head.

EUSTACHIUS (BARTHOLOMEW), an Italian phyfician, anatomist, and philologist of the fixteenth century; was born at San-Severino, afterwards fettled at Urbino, and finally at Rome. The plates for his anatomical tables were engraved at Rome in 1552, but were not published, though anxiously wifhed for by the medical world, till 1714, when an edition in folio was brought out by Lancifius, phyfician to the pope. A fecond edition was also published at Rome in 1728. There are extant alfo by this author, Opufcula Anatomica, republished by Boerhaave in 1707, and an edition of Erotian's gloffary of the words used by Hippocrates, with observations, published at Venice, from a MS. in the Vatican, in 1566.

EUSTATHIUS, a faint of the Romish church, born at Side in Pamphylia, was first bishop of Berœa, and in 325, of Antioch. He was a strong opposer of Eusebius of Nicomedia, and the Arian party in the council of Nice, from whole vengeance he afterwards fuffered, being deposed and banished by Constantius, on a suborned accusation of incontinence. He died at Trajanopolis, about the year 360. Sozomen, and other ecclesiastical writers, speak in high terms of the beauty, pu-D rity,

EUSTATHIUS, a very learned Greek, was born at Constantinople, and flourished about A. D. 1170 [M]. He was educated for the church; was first a monk, then deacon of the great church at Conftantinople, then bilhop of Myra elect. and laftly, before he was confecrated for Myra, translated to the archbishopric of Thessalonica. Many things are recorded, of which he is faid to have been the author; but the works for which he is chiefly memorable are his " Commentaries upon " Homer and Dionyfius Periegetes." His " Commentaries " upon Homer" were first published with that poet at Rome in 1550, under the pontificate of Julius III. to whom they were dedicated; and were reprinted by Frobenius at Bafil ten years after. They are very copious, and frequently illustrate the text; but are principally valued by grammarians, for the great affiftance they afford, in understanding the Greek language. The learned Duport, in his "Gnomologia Homer-" ica," wonders that Eustathius, who was a Christian and an archbishop, should never mention Holy Scripture, and very feldom the ecclefialtical writers, throughout his commentaries, though he had fo many opportunities of mentioning both. Fabricius imputes this filence to his having collected the materials of them from the more ancient commentators upon Homer, who knew nothing of the facred books; but whatever was the reafon, we may as well wonder, that a man of Eustathius's character, who fpent fo much of his life in reading and writing books, should never compose any thing relating to his profession; for we do not know that he ever did. His " Commentaries upon the Periegelis of Dionylius," were first published at Paris in 1577, but very imperfectly; they were greatly augmented by Fabricius, who fupplied a valt hiatus between verses 889 and 917; and this addition was inferted in its proper place by Hudson, in his edition at Oxford, 1697, 8vo. When Eustathius died, and at what age we know not; but he appears to have been alive in 1194. From the fimilarity of the name, the loves of Ifmenias and Ifmene have been attributed to him. See EUMATHIUS.

EUSTOCHIUM, daughter of Paula, a Roman lady of ancient family, was learned in Greek and Hebrew, as well as in the Latin language, infomuch that fhe could read the Hebrew pfalms with fluency, and comment ably upon them. She was many years a difciple of St. Jerom, by whom fhe is mentioned with great praife in his epifles, and in the life of St. Paula. She lived in a monaftery at Bethlehem, till fhe was forced from it by a kind of persecution, faid to be excited by the Pelagians; and died about 419.

EUSTRATIUS, bishop of Nice, flourished in the beginning of the twelfth century, and was celebrated for his polemic writings in divinity, and his philosophical works. Anna Comnena fays of him, that " he was a man wife in divine know-" ledge; and, in the profane disputations of the schools, supe-" rior to the best ornaments of the academy, and the porch." His Greek commentaries on Aristotle's latter analytics, and on his ethics, are still extant, the former published at Venice in 1534, the latter at the same place in 1536, and at Paris in 1543. A work against Chrysolanus on the Holy Ghost is faid also to be extant in manuscript.

There was another Euftratius, a prieft of Conftantinople, whofe time is not exactly known, but conjectured to be the fixth century. Photius has given a character of his writings, and an account of a work by him on the ftate of the dead [N].

EUTHYCRATES, a celebrated Greek fculptor, fon and difciple of Lyfippus, "who imitating," fays Pliny, "rather "the perfeverance, than the elegance of his father, chofe to "cultivate more the fevere than the pleafing ftyle. He flou-"rifhed in the 120th Olympiad. His most famous statues reprefented Hercules and Alexander; also Thespis the hun-"ter, and the Thespiadæ; the equestrian fight at the cave of "Trophonius; Medea in a car drawn by four horses, which "fubject he executed feveral times." Pliny mentions others also.

EUTHYMIUS, patriarch of Conftantinople, into which office he was put in 906 by the emperor Leo VI. firnamed the philofopher, in the place of Nicholas Myfticus, whom the emperor had difplaced. He was born in Ifauria, and was by profession a monk. His probity and merit procured him the friendship of Leo, who made him his confession. But Alexander II. who succeeded Leo, banished Euthymius, and restored Nicholas: He died in exile about 910 or 11, and his corpfe was brought to Constantinople, and interred there with great folemnity.

EUTHYMIUS (ZIGABENUS, or ZIGADENUS, for it is read both ways; and though the name has the appearance of a Gentile adjective, no place is known from which it can be derived) a Greek monk of Conftantinople, in favour with the emperor Alexius Comnenus, whom he furvived. The emperor died in 1118. At the command of Alexius, he com posed his great work, entitled, Panoplia dogmatica Orthodoxa fidei, or, the whole armour of the doctrine of the crthodox faith, against heretics of all kinds; which has lately been rendered famous by being cited in the dispute concerning I John v. 7. He wrote besides nine other works on various theological subjects, which are enumerated by Fabricius, in his Biblioth. Græc. l. v. c. II. Euthymius very highly praises Alexius for his theological knowledge and excellence in disputation. It is not known at what time he died. There is also a Georgius Zigabenus, mentioned by Fabricius [0].

EUTOCIUS, of Afcalon in Paleftine, a Greek mathematician of the fixth century, the most intelligent of those who lived in the decline of Greek literature. He wrote commentaries on the conics of Apollonius, which were addreffed to Anthemius, and were published in Halley's edition of that author; and on the most important works of Archimedes, which lately appeared with every advantage of elegance and correctnefs, in the folio edition of Archimedes, islued from the Clarendon prefs in the year 1792. Eutocius has fome of the best qualities of a commentator. He very feldom passes over a difficult paffage in his author without explaining it, or a chafm in the reafoning without fupplying the defect. His remarks are ufually full; and fo anxious is he to render the text perfpicuous, that fometimes he undertakes to elucidate where his author may be thought fufficiently clear. Writers have differed about his age; Saxius, one of the lateft, and generally most accurate, places him in the fifth century; but he addreises Anthemius, and we find from his own writings, that Ifidorus was his preceptor: now Ifidorus and Anthemius were, according to Procopius, the architects of the church of St. Sophia, built at Constantinople, about the year 532; confequently, Eutocius flourished in the middle of the fixth century.

EUTROPIUS (FLAVIUS), an Italian fophift, according to Suidas, but probably a Greek by birth, wrote a compendious hiftory of Roman affairs, divided into ten books, from the foundation of the city to the reign of Valens, to whom it was dedicated: that is, to A. D. 364 [F]. He was fecretary to Conftantine the Great, and afterwards ferved as a foldier under Julian the Apoftate, whom he attended in his unfortunate expedition against the Persians. It appears, too, that he bore the offices of Proconful, and Prætorian Præfect. There have been two opinions about his religion, fome fupposing him to have been a Christian, others a Heathen. The former ground their opinion chiefly upon a passage, where he speaks of Julian, as a perfecutor of Christians: "Nimius Religionis Christianæ " infectator, perinde tamen ut cruore abstineret;" a perfe-

cutor of the Christian religion, yet abstaining from languinary methods. But they feem to have more reason on their fide, who conclude him to have been an Heathen, not only from his fituation and character under Julian, but from the testimony of Nicephorus Gregoras, who declares him to have been " of " the fame age and fect" with that emperor  $\lceil Q \rceil$ . Voffius thinks that he might be neither Christian nor Heathen; and feems inclined to rank him with many others of his times, who hung between the two religions, without embracing either. A paffage in fome editions of his hiftory, wherein he fpeaks of Jefus Chrift as our God and Lord, is acknowledged to be spurious. The best edition of Eutropius, is that of Verheyk, published at Leyden in 1762, in 8vo, with every useful illustration. At the end of the tenth book, he promifes another historical work, or rather a continuation of this; and he tells us, that he " must raife his style, and double his diligence, " when he enters upon the reign of fuch respectable and illus-" trious princes as Valens and Valentian:" but death, probably, prevented the execution of his purpose. There are two Greek verfions of this fhort history of Eutropius, one by Capito Lycius, and another by Pæanias, both ancient. There is a French translation by the Abbé Lezeau; but no good one in English.

EUTROPIUS the eunuch, minister and favourite of the emperor Arcadius, who in the year 399, raifed him to the confulship. The infolence and injustice of Eutropius foon created him many enemies. He caufed feveral illustrious perfons to be exiled; and in order to infure the destruction of those he attacked, he prevailed on that emperor to abolish the right of afylum in churches. Gainas, general of the emperor's forces, jealous of Eutropius, engaged Tribigildus, a Goth, to revolt, and lay waste Asia. The minister, ignorant of the fecret understanding between the general and the revolter, fent Gainas against him. Instead of giving battle to Tribigildus, Gainas confulted with him, and wrote word to Arcadius, that the enemy was too ftrong to be reduced, but was ready to make terms of pacification in cafe Eutropius fhould be given up to him. Arcadius, preffed on one fide by the apprehenfion of this revolt, and on the other by his wife Eudoxia, who was justly irritated against Eutropius, deprived him of his dignities, and drove him from the palace. From the indignation of the public, Eutropius was now forced to feek that afylum which he had denied to others, but he would have been forced from it, had not the people been appealed by the eloquence of St. Chryfoltom. He was, however, brought to trial, and accufations were very eafily found to overwhelm him. He was fentenced to lofe his head; and thus exhibited a firiking inftance of those fudden revolutions of fortune which happen chiefly in corrupt or ill-regulated governments. He was beheaded in the year of his confulship, A. D. 399. The appointment of an eunuch to the office of conful, awakened the prejudices of the Romans, who had fubmitted to every other infult.

" Omnia cefferunt eunucho confule monstra," fays Claudian, who has left two books of spirited and poetical invective against this unworthy minister. Eutropius was naturally deformed, and when he acquired this elevation, was also decrepid with age. " His face," St. Chryfoftom fays, " when the paint was washed off, was more ugly and wrin-" kled than that of an old woman; yet he affected occasion-" ally to harangue the fenate, and even to appear on horfeback " at the head of the troops in the drefs of an hero, which " his form must have rendered truly ridiculous. Well might " the enemies of Rome with the Romans always to have fuch a " general." The origin of a flave, thus degraded below humanity for the meanest fervices, is of course obscure. It feems, from what Claudian fays, that he was a native of Armenia; and, if we may credit that fatirift, his original offices were the most degrading that can be imagined. He was first fubservient to the baseft pleasures of Ptolemy, an imperial groom; then pander to the general Arintheus; and promoted to the dignity of hair-dreffer, and menial attendant on the daughter of Arintheus when that general married. His oftenfible office in the palace was only that of præfect of the bed-chamber. The eunuchs in these stations had long possessed a secret influence of great extent under weak emperors; but Arcadius was the first who ventured thus to bring one forward as a public magistrate of the empire. An Eutropius appears among the confuls in the year 387, under Valentian, but a different perfon.

EUTYCHES, originally a monk, and for his piety elected abbot of the convent near Conftantinople to which he belonged. He is faid to have lived to an advanced age before he diftinguifhed himfelf by any peculiar opinions. Then, through a violent defire to oppofe the Neftorian herefy, which was fuppofed to divide the nature of Chrift into two diftinct perfons, he became the leader of a new herefy, by abforbing the human nature of Chrift entirely in the divine, and maintaining that the human body of Chrift was only apparent. Thefe difputes concerning the nature of Chrift, it must be confeffed, frequently ran into fuch fubtlety of diftinctions as not to be eafily comprehended; yet were maintained with as much warmth warmth as if the existence of Christianity had depended on them. His doctrines were first noticed in a council assembled at Constantinople by Flavianus, in 448, where they were condemned, and himfelf deposed from his dignity of abbot. Eutyches, however, had interest enough with the emperor Theodofius to procure another council at Ephefus, in 449, wherein the former acts were reverfed, Flavian and other bishops who had opposed Eutyches deposed, and every thing carried with fuch violence, that this council is generally named sevolos Anspurn, the convention of robbers. A third council was necessary to settle these differences; and pope Leo the First, (called St. Leo, or Leo the Great) prevailed on Marcian, the fucceffor of Theodofius, to call one at Chalcedon, which met in 451, and was reckoned the fourth œcumenical or general council. 630 bishops were present. Here Eutyches was condemned, though absent, and the following doctrine laid down in opposition to his herefy : " That in Christ two " diftinct natures were united in one perfon, without any " change, mixture, or confusion." Yet even after this decifion, violent difputes and divisions sublisted for a confiderable time. It is uncertain what became of Eutyches after the council of Ephefus; Leo certainly applied to Marcian and to Pulcheria to have him depofed; but whether he fucceeded or not, is unknown. Two fupplications to Theodofius, one confeffion, and a fragment of another by Eutyches, are still extant.

EUTYCHIANUS (POPE), fucceeded Felix in 275, and filled the fee of Rome till 283, when he was fucceeded by Caius. He was a native of Tufcany; was a zealous defender of what he conceived to be the rules of the church, and terminated his career by fuffering martyrdom.

EUTYCHIUS, patriarch of Conftantinople, fucceffor of Mennas. He paffed the first part of his life as a monk at Amafæa; but, having pleafed Justinian by his acuteness when attendant upon the bishop of Amasæa, was raised by him to the patriarchal see in 553, and presided that year in the general council held at Constantinople. He had, however, the virtue to oppose the emperor when in error, and was therefore deprived of his dignity in 564, and fent back to his monastery. In 578 he was restored by Tiberius II. and died in 585, at the age of 73. A fragment or two of writings by him remain.

EUTYCHIUS, a Christian author, of the fect of the Melchites, was born at Cairo in Egypt, 876, and became eminent in the knowledge of physic; which he practifed with fo much fuccefs and reputation, that even the Mahometans reckoned him one of the best physicians in his time [R]. Towards the latter part of his life, he applied himfelf to divinity; and was chosen in 933, patriarch of Alexandria. He then took the name of Eutychius; for his Arabic name was Said Ebn Batrik : Said meaning happy, in Arabic, as Eutychius does in Greek. He had the misfortune not to be very acceptable to his people; for there were continual jars between them, from his first accession to the fee, to the time of his death, which happened in 950. He wrote annals from the beginning of the world to the year 900; in which may be found many things which occur no where elfe, but certainly many which were collected from lying legends, and are entirely fabulous. An extract from these Annals, under the title of " Annals of the church of Alexandria," was published by Selden, in Arabic and Latin, in 1642, 4to; and the Annals entire were published by Pocock, in Arabic and Latin, in 1659, 4to, with a preface and notes by Selden. Befides thefe, Eutychius wrote a book, " De rebus Siciliæ," after Sicily was conquered by the Saracens; the manufcript of which is now in the public library at Cambridge, fubjoined to the Annals; alfo "A difputation between the heterodox and the Chriftians:" together with fome fmall medical performances.

EUZOIUS, a deacon of Alexandria, depofed by Alexander, bifhop of that fee, at the fame time as Arius, and condemned at the council of Nice. But having fatisfied the emperor Conftantine in 335, by a confession of faith, in which he affumed the appearance of orthodoxy, he was made bifhop of Antioch in 361. The catholic bifhops took offence at this; yet he was the perfon who baptized the emperor Constantius. He died about 376.

EXPILLI (CLAUDE D'), prefident in the parliament of Grenoble, and a faithful magistrate to Henry IV. and Louis XIII. was born at Voiron in Dauphiny, in 1561, and died at Grenoble in 1636. He was not only a friend and patron of merit, but was himfelf an orator, a historian, and a poet, though not of the first order. He was, in truth, a better magistrate than a writer. There are, however, extant by him, "Pleadings," published at Paris in 4to, 1612; "Poems," 4to, 1624; "a Life of Baiard," in 12mo, 1650; and "a Treatife " on French orthography," fol. Lyons, 1618. It is faid, much to his honour, that to deferve his friendship, was to have it; and that the most certain titles to it were learning and virtue.

EXUPERIUS, bifhop of Thouloufe, at the beginning of the fifth century, and a Romifh faint, diffinguifhed himfelf by his exemplary charity at the time of a great famine. Having expended all his own poffeffions in relieving the poor, he proceeded to fell the facred veffels of gold and filver. St. Jerom dedicates his commentary on Zechariah to him, and compares him him to the widow of Sarepta, whole oil failed not. He died about 417, at a confiderable age. There were feveral other bishops of this name.

EYCK (HUBERT VAN), born at Mafeick on the Macs, in the diocefe of Liege, in 1366, and died in 1426. He was a celebrated painter, and particularly patronized by Philip the Good, duke of Burgundy, for whom he painted feveral pictures. But he was exceeded in fame by his younger brother John, who was alfo his pupil.

EYCK (JOHN VAN), brother and disciple of the preceding; born in 1370. To him is usually attributed the invention of painting in oil, of which the following account is given. He is faid to have fludied chemistry as well as painting, and one day, endeavouring to form a brilliant varnish, he found that linfeed oil, or nut oil, mixed with his colours, formed a folid and shining body, which made varnish unnecessary. His fecret was carried by a disciple into Italy, and thence circulated throughout Europe. Many have, however, afferted, that paintings in oil may be traced back to a much earlier period. This painter is very frequently called John of Bruges. He died in 1441.

EZEKIEL, the third of the greater prophets; was the fon of Buzi, a defcendant of Aaron, and is faid to have been a native of Sarera. He was carried captive into Babylon in the year 597 before Christ, with Jehoiachin king of Judah. He was settled, with many others of his captive countrymen on the banks of the Chebar, a river of Melopotamia, where he was favoured with the divine revelations which are extant in the book that bears his name. He began to deliver these prophecies about eight or ten years after Daniel began, in the fifth year of Jehoiachin's captivity, and, as fome have fuppofed, in the thirtieth year of his age. Very little is known of Ezekiel more than can be collected from his prophecies. It is faid by Epiphanius, in the lives of the prophets, that he was put to death by the prince of his people becaufe he exhorted him to leave idolatry. But this, and other circumstances related of him by different writers, are confidered as doubtful or fabulous. His ftyle is characterized by bishop Lowth, as bold, vehement, and tragical, and as worked up occasionally to a kind of tremendous dignity: it certainly is highly parabolical, and abounds with figurative and metaphorical expressions. He appears to have been mercifully raifed up to animate his countrymen, and preferve them from defpondence in their captivity and fufferings, by foretelling the punifhment of their enemies, the coming of the Melliah, and their own final reftoration.

EZEKIEL, a Greek Jew, and a poet, who wrote tragedies on fubjects of the facred hiftory. Large fragments of a tragedy by him, on the departure of Ifrael from Egypt, have been preferved by Clemens of Alexandria, and Eufebius. Various opinions are held concerning the time in which he lived. Eufebius introduces a Demetrius as quoting him; and if that was (as an eminent writer of the prefent day fuppofes) Demetrius Phalereus, he muft have lived near 300 years before the birth of our Saviour. Others bring him down to a century after that period. He muft, at all events, have been prior to Clemens, who quotes him; and certain it is, that there are fome remarkable expressions concerning the divine Logos in his fragments [s].

FABER,

FABER, (JOHN), firnamed from one of his works, the Mallet of heretics Malleus hearting Mallet of heretics, Malleus hereticorum, was born in Suabia, and diftinguished himfelf in the universities of Germany in the 16th century. In 1519 he was appointed vicar-general to the bifhop of Conftance; and in 1526, Ferdinand king of the Romans, afterwards emperor, named him as his confessor. The fame patron in 1531, advanced him to the fee of Vienna. He died in 1542, at the age of 63. His works are comprised in three volumes folio, printed at Cologne in 1537-1541; but that for which he was most celebrated was entitled, Malleus Hæreticorum, in which he discusses many controversial points with confiderable warmth. Luther having been one of his opponents, Erafmus faid, when he was advanced to the episcopacy, " that Luther, poor as he was, found means to " enrich his enemies." He was impetuous in argument, and his enemies attributed to him many indifcreet expressions, which if they ever escaped him, would have been remembered only by enemies.

FABER (BASIL), born in 1520, at Soraw in Lufatia, on the confines of Silefia. He was bred to letters, and fucceffively became a teacher in the schools at Nordhausen, Tennstadt, and Quedlinburg, and lastly, rector of that at Erfurt. He was a zealous Lutheran, and translated into German, the remarks of Luther on Genefis. He published also observations on Cicero, and other learned works; but the chief foundation of his fame, was his Thefaurus Eruditionis Scholastica. an undertaking which required the labour of many able men to render it complete. It was first published in 1571. After his death it was augmented and improved by Buchner, Thomafius, and the great Christopher Cellarius. The best edition was published at the Hague in 1735, in two vols. folio. B. Faber died in 1576.

FABER (ANTONIUS). See FAVRE (Antoine).

FABER (JACOBUS). See FEVRE (Jacques).

FABER (NICOLAUS). See FEVRE (Nicolas).

FABER (TANAQUIL). See FEVRE (Taneguy le). FABERT (ABRAHAM), marechal of France; an officer of diftinguished honour and courage, who raifed himfelf to that high post under Louis XIV. by the mere force of merit. He fignalized himfelf particularly in 1635. In 1640 he was wounded in the thigh, at the fiege of Turin, but would not fuffer fuffer the limb to be amputated; difdaining, as he expressed himfelf, to die by morfels. Death, he declared, should take him altogether, or not at all. Notwithstanding this fingular refolution, he recovered. In 1642, he was employed at the fiege of Perpignan. In 1654, he took Stenai, and his fervices were rewarded in 1658 by the government of Sedan, and staff of marechal of France. He had the magnanimity to refufe the collar of the royal orders, which was offered to him by Louis XIV. becaufe, though his family had been ennobled by Henry IV. he could not produce the qualifications neceffary for that dignity. He would not, he faid, have his cloke decorated with a crofs, and his foul difgraced by an imposture. He died in 1662, at the age of 63. It is remarkable, that with all his great qualities and abilities, he was addicted to judicial aftrology, and was thought by the common people to deal with the devil; infomuch that the most brilliant of his fucceffes were popularly attributed to that affiftance.

FABIAN (ROBERT), author of the "Chronicle of England "and France," or, as he himfelf calls it, "The Concordaunce "of Stories," was born in London in the 15th century. He was brought up to trade, and became fo confiderable a merchant, that he was chosen an alderman, and, in 1493, was one of the she lived in; had fome skill in poetry, both in English, Latin, and French; but applied himself chiefly to history. His chronicle was not printed till after his decease. He died at London in 1512, and was buried in St. Michael, Cornhill. Stow, in his "Survey of London," has preferved some verses, which were formerly upon his monument.

His Chronicle was first printed at London in 1516; and afterwards in 1553, in finall but neat black types, and on a good paper. It is divided into two volumes, folio; the first of which begins with Brute, and ends at the death of Henry II. The fecond, which is the most valuable, begins with Richard I. and ends at the 20th of Henry VII. in 1504. Stow calls this work, " a painful labour, to the great honour of the city, and " of the whole realm." Fabian is very circumstantial respecting the affairs of London; and notices feveral things relating to the government of that city, which are not to be met with elfewhere.—We are told, that cardinal Wolfey caufed as many copies of this book as he could obtain to be burnt, because the author had made too clear a discovery of the large revenues of the clergy.

FABIUS. Quintus Fabius Rullianus, a celebrated Roman, who was five times conful, three times dictator, and triumphed twice or more, yet was always diftinguished by his modesty and equanimity. The first public office in which we trace him, him, is that of curule ædile, which he bore in the year before Christ 330. In the year 324, he was named master of the horse by the dictator L. Papirius Cursor, in the war against the Samnites; and, having given battle to the enemy in the absence of the dictator, contrary to his express order, though completely victorious, was capitally condemned; and through the strictness of Roman discipline, and the inflexible severity of the dictator, would have been executed, had he not been first refcued by the army, and then strongly interceded for by the fenate and people of Rome. His first confulship was three years after, in the year 321. It was not till the year 303. when he bore the office of cenfor, that he acquired the firname of Maximus, which afterwards was continued in his family. It was given him in confequence of his replacing the low and turbulent mob of Rome in the four urban tribes, and thereby diminishing their authority, which when they were scattered in the various tribes, had been confiderable on account of their numbers. His last confulship was in the year 294, and it is not likely that he lived many years after that period. We find him, however, three years after, attending the triumph of his fon the proconful, a very old man, and celebrated by the historians for his modest demeanour, and respectful acknowledgment of his fon's public dignity.

FABIUS. Quintus Fabius Maximus Verrucosus, a noble Roman, the fourth in defcent from the preceding, who, in a very fimilar career of honours, obtained yet more glory than his anceftor. He also was conful five times, in the years 233. An. Chr. 228, 215, 214, and 210; and dictator in the years 221 and 217. His life is among those written by Plutarch." In his first confulship, he obtained the honour of a triumph for a fignal victory over the Ligurians. His fecond confulfhip produced no remarkable event, nor, indeed, his first dictatorthip, which feems to have been only a kind of civil appointment, for the fake of holding comitia, and was frustrated by some defect in the omens. But in the confernation which followed the defeat at Thrafymene, his country had recourfe to him as the perfon most able to retrieve affairs, and he was created dictator a fecond time. In this arduous fituation he atchieved immortal fame, by his prudence in perceiving that the method of wearing out an invader was to protract the war, and avoid a general engagement, and his steady perfeverance in preferving that fystem. By this conduct he finally attained the honourable title of Cunctator, or protractor. But before he could obtain the praise he merited, he had to contend not only with the wiles and abilities of Hannibal, but with the impatience and imprudence of his countrymen. The former he was able to baffle, the latter nearly proved fatal to Rome. ". If Fabius," faid faid Hannibal, " is fo great a commander as he is reported to " be, let him come forth and give me battle." " If Hanni-" bal," faid Fabius in reply, " is fo great a commander as he " thinks himfelf, let him compel me to it." A battle in Apulia, however, was brought on by the rashness of his mafter of the horfe, Minucius, and it required all the ability of Fabius to prevent an entire defeat. His moderation towards Minucius afterwards, was equal to his exertions in the conteft. After he had laid down his office, the conful Paulus Æmilius endeavoured to tread in his steps, but rashness again prevailed over wifdom, and the defeat at Cannæ enfued in the year 215. Now it was that the Romans began at length to do full justice to the prudence of Fabius. He was called the *(hield, as Marcellus the fword of the republic; and, by an ho*nour almost unprecedented, was continued in the confulship for two successive years. He recovered Tarentum before Hannibal could relieve it, and continued to oppose that general with great and fuccefsful skill. It has been laid to his charge that when Scipio propofed to carry the war into Africa, he oppofed that meafure through envy; and Plutarch allows that though he was probably led at first to difapprove, from the cautious nature of his temper, he did afterwards become envious of the rifing glory of Scipio. It is, however, possible, that he might think it more glorious to drive the enemy by force out of Italy, than to draw him away by a diversion. Whether this were the cafe or not, he did not live to fee the full refult of the meafure, for he died in the year 203, at a very advanced age, being, according to fome authors, near a hundred. This was the very year preceding the decifive battle of Zama, which concluded the fecond Punic war. The highest encomiums are bestowed by Cicero upon Fabius, under the perfon of Cato, who just remembered him, and had treasured many of his fayings.

FABIUS (PICTOR), a Roman historian, the first profe writer on the fubject of Roman history. He was the fon of C. Fabius Pictor, who was conful with Ogulnius Gallus in the year 271, before Christ, and grandfon of the Fabius who painted the temple of health, from whom this branch of the family obtained the name of Pictor. He was nearly related to the preceding Fabius, and after the battle of Cannæ, was fent to the Delphic oracle to enquire by what fupplications the Gods might be appeafed. He wrote the history of this war with Hannibal, and is cited by Livy as authority in it. The fragments of his annals that remain in the works of the ancients, whether in Greek or Latin, for he wrote in both, relate chiefly to the antiquities of Italy, the beginnings of Rome, or the acts of the Romans. He is cenfured by Polybius, as too partial to the Romans, and not even just to the Carthaginians. His style was doubtless that of his age, unformed, and imperfect. An history, circulated as his, consisting of two books, one on the golden age, the other on the origin of Rome, is now known to have been a forgery of Annius of Viterbo.

FABRE (JEANE CLAUDE), called Pere Fabre. A French author of no very high eminence. He was chiefly a compiler, and not much diftinguished for his taste. Two dictionaries, a bad translation of Virgil with notes, and an ill written Continuation of Fleury's Ecclesiastical History, form the chief part of his works. Some articles in an edition of Richelet's dictionary, of a theological and of a fatyrical nature, obliged him for a time to quit the congregation of the Oratory at Paris, to which he belonged. He returned in 1715, and died there in 1753, at the age of 85.

FABRETTI (RAPHAEL), a very learned antiquary of Italy, was born at Urbino, of a noble family, in 1619. After he had passed through his first studies at Cagli, he returned to Urbino to finish himself in the law, in which he was admitted doctor at eighteen. Having an elder brother at Rome, who was an eminent advocate, he alfo went thither, and applied himself to the bar; where he soon diffinguished himself to fuch advantage, that he was likely to advance his fortune. Cardinal Imperiali entertained fo great an efteem for him, that he fent him into Spain, to negotiate feveral important and difficult affairs; which he did with fuch fuccefs, that the office of the procurator fifcal of that kingdom falling vacant, the cardinal procured it for him. Fabretti continued thirteen years in Spain, where he was for some time auditor general of the Nunciature. These employments, however, did not engage him fo much, but that he found time to read the ancients, and apply himfelf to polite literature. He returned to Rome with cardinal Bonelli, who had been nuncio in Spain; and from his domestic became his most intimate friend. He was appointed judge of the appeals to the Capitol; which post he afterwards quitted for that of auditor of the legation of Urbino, under the cardinal legate Cerri. His refidence in his own country gave him an opportunity of fettling his own private affairs, which had been greatly difordered during his absence. He continued there three years, which appeared very long to him, because his inclination to study and antiquities made him wish to feitle at Rome, where he might eafily gratify those defires to the utmost. He readily accepted therefore the invitation of cardinal Corpegna, the pope's vicar, who employed him in drawing up the apostolical briefs, and other dispatches belonging to his office, and gave him the infpection of the reliques found found at Rome and parts adjacent. Alexander VIII. whom Fabretti had ferved as auditor when cardinal, made him fecretary of the memorials, when he was advanced to the pontificate; and had fo great a value and affection for him, that he would certainly have raifed him to higher dignities, if he had lived a little longer.

Upon the death of Alexander, Fabretti retired from business, and devoted himfelf entirely to his favourite amufement. He went to fearch antiquities in the country about Rome, without any other companion than his horfe, and without any regard to the heat or inclemency of the weather. As he always made use of the fame horse, his friends gave that animal, by way of jeft, the name of Marco Polo, the famous traveller; and faid, that this horfe used to difcover ancient monuments by the fmell, and to ftop of himfelf immediately, when he came to any ruins of an old building. Fabretti was fo well pleafed with the name given to his horfe, that he used it to write a letter to one of his friends in an ironical strain, yet full of learning, upon the ftudy of antiquity: but this letter was never printed. Innocent XII. obliged him to quit his retirement, and made him keeper of the archives of the caftle of St. Angelo; a post, which is never given but to men of the most approved integrity, fince he who enjoys that place is mafter of all the fecrets of the pope's temporal estate. All these different employments never interrupted his refearches into antiquity; and he collected enough to adorn his paternal houfe at Urbino, as well as that which he had built at Rome after the death of Alexander VIII. Neither could old age divert him from his ftudies, nor hinder him from labouring at the edition of his works, which he printed at his own house. He died Jan. 7, 1700. He was a member of the academy of the Afforditi at Urbino, and the Arcadi at Rome [A].

He was the author of the following works: 1. "De Aquis & "Aquæ-ductibus Veteris Romæ Differtationes tres. Romæ, "1680," 4to. His book may ferve to give great light to Frontinus, who has treated of the aqueducts of Rome, as they were in his time under the emperor Trajan. It is inferted in the fourth volume of Grævius's "Thefaurus Antiquitatum "Romanarum." 2. "De Columna Trajana Syntagma. "Accefferunt explicatio Veteris Tabellæ Anaglyphæ Homeri "Iliadem, atque ex Stefichoro, Archino, et Lafche Ilii exci-"dium continentis, et emiffarii lacus Fucini deferiptio. Ro-"mæ, 1683." folio. 3. answer to James Gronovius's " Responsio ad Cavillationes R. "Fabretti," printed at Leyden, 1685. Fabretti had given occasion to this dispute, by censuring in his book, "De " Aquæ-ductibus," fome corrections of Gronovius; and thus had drawn upon himfelf an adverfary, who treated him, as he did every body elfe, with very little ceremony. Fabretti replied to him here; under the name Jasitheus, and treated him with as little; Gronovius called him, Faber Ruflicus, which he retorted by stiling his antagonist, Grunnovius. 4. " In-" scriptionum Antiquarum, quæ in ædibus paternis affervan-* tur, explicatio et additamentum. Romæ, 1699," folio. Fabretti had an admirable talent in decyphering the most difficult infcriptions, and difcovered a method of making fomething out of those which seemed entirely disfigured through age, and the letters of which were effaced in fuch a manner as not to be discernible. He cleaned the surface of the stone, without touching those places where the letters had been engraven. He then laid upon it a piece of thick paper well moistened, and pressed it with a spunge, or wooden pin covered with linen; by which means the paper entered into the cavity of the letters, and, taking up the dust there, discovered the traces of the letters. M. Baudelot, in his book " De " l'Utilité des Voyages," informs us of a fecret very like this, in order to read upon medals those letters which are difficult to be decyphered. 5. " A Letter to the abbé Nicaife," containing an infcription remarkable for the elegance of its style, inferted in the "Journal des Savans" of Dec. 1691. Fabretti difcovers in his writings a lively genius, a clear and eafy conception, and a great deal of learning.

FABRI (HONORE'), a learned and laborious jefuit, born in 1607 at Bellay near Lyons, fucceffively profeffor of philofophy at Lyons, and penitentiary at Rome, where he died in 1688. His weighty works in theology and philofophy are now little known, except by name; and the chief thing worth recording of him feems to be, that it has been faid, though probably with little foundation, that he had difcovered the circulation of the blood before Harvey.

FABRICIUS (CAIUS), firnamed Lufcinus, an illustrious Roman, much and justly celebrated for his inflexible integrity; and contempt of riches. He was twice conful, first in the year before Christ 282, when he obtained a triumph for his victories over the Samnites, Lucani and Bruttii. Two years after this, Pyrrhus invaded Italy; and, after the defeat of the Romans near Tarentum, Fabricius was fent to that monarch to treat of the ransom and exchange of prisoners, on which occasion he manifested a noble contempt of every endeavour that could be made, in any shape, to shake his fidelity, and excited the admiration of Pyrrhus. His fecond confulfhip was in the year 278, when his refined generofity yet further fecured the efteem of the royal enemy, whom he informed of the treacherous defign of his physician to give him poifon. According to fome authors, he again triumphed this year over the allies of Pyrrhus. It was remarked, that when the comitia were held for the enfuing confuls, Cornelius Rufinus, a man of notorious avarice, and detested by Fabricius for that vice, but an excellent general, obtained the confulship chiefly by his interest. Being asked the reason of this unexpected proceeding, he faid, " In times of danger it is better that the public " purfe should be plundered, than the state betrayed to the " enemy." But when he became cenfor in the year 275, he proved his fixed diflike to that man's character, by removing him from the fenate, for possessing an unlawful amount of filver plate. The war with Pyrrhus was then concluded. St. Evremond, with the contemptible fneer of a man who has no conception of difinterested virtue, infinuates that his poverty was ambitious, and his feverity envious; but it is not for a French epicurean to judge the motives of a Fabricius. His frugality and poverty became almost proverbial; and Virgil has characterized him in very few words:

- - " parvoque potentem

" Fabricium.

The ftate paid a glorious tribute to his memory by portioning his daughters after his death.

FABRICIUS (GEORGE), a learned German, and celebrated for a talent at Latin poetry, was born at Chemnitz in Mifnia, a province of Upper Saxony, 1516. After a liberal education, he went to Italy and Rome, in quality of tutor to a nobleman; where he fpent his time in a manner fuitable to his parts and learning. He did not content himfelf with barely looking on, and blindly admiring; but he examined with great accuracy and minuteness, all the remains of antiquity, and compared them with the defcriptions which the Latin writers have given of them. The refult of these observations was his work entitled, ROMA, published in 1550, containing a description of that city. From Rome he returned to his native country, and was appointed master of the great school at Meissen, over which he prefided twenty-fix years, and died in that station, in 1571. He was the author of numerous Latin poems, and had the strongest passion for verse that can be conceived. His poems appeared at Bale in 1567 [B], in two volumes 8vo; and, besides this collection, there are also Hymns, Odes against the Turks, the Art of Poetry, Comparisons of the Latin Poets, &c. He is faid to have had the laurel from the emperor Maximilian, a short time before his death.

His poems are written with great purity and elegance. He was particularly careful in the choice of his words; and he carried his fcruples in this respect fo far, that he would not on any account make use of a word in his "Sacred Poems" which favoured the least of Paganism. He condemned some liberties of this fort, which he had taken in his youth; and he exceedingly blamed those Christians who applied themselves for matter to the divinities of Parnassus, and the fables of the ancients. He wrote also in profe, the Roma, already mentioned; the "Annals of Meffein," in feven books; "Origines " Saxonicæ," in two volumes, folio; the fame quantity on the affairs of Germany and Saxony, &c. His "Roma" has been greatly admired by fome, by Barthius in particular: and there is this fingularity in it, that he has fo adapted to his defcriptions the language of the Latin writers who have described the same kind of things, as to make fome Germans fancy it an ancient work.

FABRICIUS (JEROME), an Italian, ufually called Aquapendente, from the place of his nativity, was a phylician of vast repute in his day. He laid the foundation of his acquisitions at Padua, where he made himfelf master of the Latin and Greek tongues, and went through a course of philosophy. Then he applied himfelf to physic, under the famous Fallo-pius; and made a wonderful progress by the directions of so excellent a master. He applied himself principally to furgery and anatomy, which he professed with high reputation at Padua for forty years. Fame, and not interest, is faid to have been his principal point in view. He had many good qualities of the heart, as well as great ones of the head, which procured him numerous friends; from whom he should seem to have received prefents, inftead of fees: for the cabinet, which he fet apart for the reception of these presents, had this remarkable infcription on it, "Lucri neglecti lucrum;" that is, "The lucre of neglected lucre." The republic of Venice fettled upon him a yearly stipend of a thousand crowns in gold, and honoured him with a statue and a gold chain. He died about 1603. The writings he left form two volumes in folio, the one of works in furgery, published collectively in Holland in 1723; the other of anatomical works, published at Leyden in 1738.

FABRICIUS (JOHN ALBERT), a most learned and laborious man, was born at Leipfic, Nov. 11, 1668. Having loft his parents at eleven years of age, he was fent by his guardians to study at Quedlinburg; where, we are told, he was infpired with an incredible ardor for letters, by the accidental reading of E 2 of Barthius's Adversaria. Upon his return from Leipsic, in 1686, he applied himfelf attentively to the reading of ancient authors, facred and profane. He went to Hamburgh in 1693, where John Frederic Mayer offered him apartments in his house, and the care of his library. He accepted the offer, and spent five years with Mr. Mayer in a very agreeable manner, dividing his time betwixt preaching and fludy. He was chosen, professor of eloquence in this city 1699; and made doctor in divinity at Kiel. In 1719, the landgrave of Heffe Caffel offered him the first professorship of divinity at Gieffen, and the place of fuperintendant over the churches of the Augfburg confession; which offer he was very ready to accept. But the magistrates of Hamburgh augmented his falary very confiderably, for the fake of keeping him there; and of this he ever after retained fo grateful a fenfe, that no offers of preferment could tempt him to leave them. He died at Hamburgh the 3d of April, 1736, after a life spent in the severest application; for it is almost incredible what labours he underwent, in order to benefit, as he did in an eminent degree, the republic of letters.

Among a great number of works, these following are the principal and most useful: 1. "Bibliotheca Latina, sive No-" titia Auctorum Veterum Latinorum, quorumcunque scripta " ad nos pervenerunt." This work was afterwards enlarged; and the best edition of it is that in two vols. 4to. It has fince been republished, in three vols. 8vo, by Ernesti. 2. "Bibli-" otheca Græca, five Notitia Scriptorum Veterum Græcorum, " quorumcunque Monumenta integra aut fragmenta edita ex-" tant : tum plerorumque ex Manuscriptis ac Deperditis." This confifts of 14 vols. in 4to, and gives an exact account of the Greek authors, their different editions, and of all those who have commented, or written notes upon them. Thefe two works may be faid to fet forth a very complete hiftory of Greek and Latin learning. 3. " Codex Apocryphus Novi " Testamenti, collectus, castigatus, censuris et animadversioni-" bus illustratus." The best edition is that of Hamburgh, 1719, in 3 vols. 8vo. 4. " Codex Pfeudepigraphus Veteris " Teftamenti," 2 vols. 8vo, 1722, and 1723, giving the fame illustration to the Old Teftament, as the former work to the New. 5. "Bibliographia Antiquaria, five Introductio in " Notitiam Scriptorum, qui Antiquitates Hebraicas, Græcas, " Romanas, et Christianas scriptis illustraverunt." The best edition is that of Hamburgh and Leipfic, in 1716, 4to. 6. " Delectus Argumentorum et Syllabus scriptorum, qui veri-" tatem Religionis Christianæ adversus Atheos, Epicureos, " Deistas seu Naturalistas, Idolatras, Judzos, et Mohammed-" anos lucubrationibus suis asserverunt. Hamb. 1725," 4to. This

This performance, very valuable in itfelf, is yet more fo, on account of the Proemium and first chapters of Eufebius's "De-" monstratio Evangelica," which are wanting in all the editions of that work, and were supposed to be lost; but which are here recovered by Fabricius, and prefixed to the "De-" lectus, with a Latin translation by himfelf. 7. "Salutaris " Lux Evangelii, toti orbi per Divinam Gratiam exoriens: " five Notitia Historico-Chronologica, Literaria, et Geogra-" phica, propagatorum per orbem totum Christianorum Sa-" crorum Delineata. Hamb. 1731," 4to. This work is very curious and interesting to the historian, as well as divine. It contains some epistles of the emperor Julian, never before published. 8. "Bibliotheca Mediæ et infimæ Latinitatis," printed in 5 vols. 8vo, 1734, reprinted at Padua, in 6 vols. 4to, 1754.

By thefe and many other works of lefs magnitude, Fabricius has laid the whole learned world under the greateft obligations; fince he has contributed more, perhaps, than any other man ever did, to abridge and fhorten the fatigue which fcholars are obliged to undergo, in order to be acquainted with the materials of their profession.

To enable him to perform thefe fervices, he was gifted with a prodigious memory, and an extreme facility in writing. Befides, fays Niceron, as he had projected his principal works very early in life, he had collected materials for them in good time, marking every thing with fuch exactnefs, that nothing further was required but to put them into order. This he did very expeditioully, the vivacity of his genius not fuffering him to linger over any work. His pupils alfo gave him occasional assistance, particularly in the tables of reference. If, however, he fometimes received aid, he alfo gave it on all occasions, to those who stood in need of his counfels or interference. Perfuaded that the more a man knows, the more conficious he must be that he is ignorant in many points, he never took offence when errors in his works were noticed. to him, but frankly owned that he himfelf could fpecify many others.

FABRICIUS (VINCENT), a man eminent for wit and learning [c], and for the civil employments with which he was honoured, was born at Hamburgh in 1613. He was a good poet, an able phyfician, a great orator, and a learned civilian. He gained the effecem of all the learned in Holland, while he fludied at Leyden; and they liked his Latin poems fo well, that they advifed him to print them. He was for fome time counfellor to the bifhop of Lubec, and afterwards fyndic of the city of Dantzic. This city alfo honoured him with the dignity of burgomaster, and fent him thirteen times deputy in Poland. He died at Warfaw, during the diet of the kingdom, in 1667. The first edition of his poems, in 1632, was printed upon the encouragement of Daniel Heinfius, at whofe house he lodged. He published a second in 1638, with corrections and additions: to which he added a fatire in profe, intitled, " Pranfus Paratus," which he dedicated to Salmafius; and in which he keenly ridiculed the poets who fpend their time in making anagrams, or licentious verfes, as also those who affect to despife poets. He was the author also of a Latin poem, in which is told at large a remarkable ftory of a Dutch maidfervant. She had been fhut up in a garden, on account of three large carbuncles, which had been observed upon her, during the plague in 1636. She thought of nothing but certain death, when a young man, who was vehemently in love with her, administered no other remedy to her, but the most ardent embraces; and as he perceived them to be of fome effect, he continued to go and lie every night with this infected maid. She recovered her health entirely, nor did he contract the least distemper from her. On this story Bayle observes, that " if " love gives wit to the most stupid, it also inspires the most " cowardly with courage; for," fays he, " in all like-" lihood this maid's lover would have run away like a hare, 44 had he met a footman infected with the plague: but " becaufe he was in love, and had a favourable opportunity to " fatisfy his paffion, he ventured to expose himself to the " greateft danger."

The most complete edition of his poems is that of Leipsic, 1685, published under the direction of his son. It contains also Orations of our author, made to the kings of Poland; an Oration spoken at Leyden in 1632, concerning the siege and deliverance of that city; and the Medical Theses, which were the subject of his public disputations at Leyden, in 1634, &c.

FABRICIUS (BARON), known to the public by his letters relating to Charles XII. of Sweden, during his refidence in the Ottoman empire, was fprung from a good family in Germany. His father was prefident of Zell for George I. as elector of Hanover, and he had a brother who held a confiderable office in that prince's fervice. The baron, of whom we are fpeaking, as foon as he had finished his studies, went into Holstein, and was early taken into the fervice of that court, where his talents were much esteemed. He was fent from thence, by the duke administrator, in a public character, to his Swedish majesty, while he continued at Bender. He was then in the flower of his youth, had a good person, pleasing address, great accomplishments, and no vanity. He foon ftood food very high in the good graces of that prince; accompanied him in his exercises, was frequently at his table, and fpent hours alone with him in his clofet. He it was that gave him a turn for reading; and it was out of his hand that monarch fnatched the book, when he tore from it the 8th fatire of Boileau, in which Alexander the Great is represented as a madman. He had but one enemy in the court, viz. general Daldorff, who was made prisoner by the Tartars, when they flormed the king's camp at Bender. Fabricius took pains to find him out, releafed him, and fupplied him with money; which fo entirely vanquished the general, that he afterwards became a warm friend. This amiable man was likewife in favour with king Staniflaus, and with our own monarch George I. whom he accompanied in his last journey to Hanover, and who may be faid to have died in his arms. A translation of his genuine letters in English, containing the best accounts relating to the Northern Hero during his refidence in Turkey, was published in one volume, 8vo, Lond. 1761.

FABROT (CHARLES HANNIBAL), a French lawyer, was born at Aix in Provence, in 1580. His skill in the civil and canon law, and also in the belles lettres, procured him many friends, and among them, the celebrated Peirefc. He became advocate, doctor, and professor of law, at Aix; where he continued to 1617, and then went to Paris, at the folicitation of the prefident du Vair. After the death of this prefident, he returned to Aix; but went again to Paris in 1637, and was detained there by the chancellor Seguier, who fettled on him a confiderable penfion, by way of encouraging him to complete an edition of the "Bafilicæ," or "Constitutions of the " Eastern Emperors." This work he executed to the approbation of all, and published it, 1647, in 7 vols. folio. He added a Latin translation of his own to the Greek original, and illustrated the whole with notes. Two years after, he published Cedrenus, Nicetas, Anastasius Bibliothecarius, Con-Itantine Manafles, and Glycas, in two vols. folio; all which he illustrated with curious notes, and differtations of his own, In 1652, he began to revife the works of Cujacius, writing notes upon him, and adding fome tracts of that author from manufcripts. The revising of this great work, which we have in ten vols. folio, was finished by him in 1658: but his too great application to the tafk threw him into a diftemper, which put an end to his life the year after. Besides the works abovementioned, he published notes upon some part of the Theodofian Code, in 1618. He likewise wrote a treatise against Salmafius, upon fome cafes in the civil law, intitled, " Replicatio adversus Cl. Salmasii Replicationem," &c. Justellus and Voel, who published their "Bibliotheca Juris Ca-E 4 " nonici

" nonici" in 1661, inferted in their fecond volume a collection of Ecclefiaftical Conftitutions of Theodorus Balfamon, which they found in Fabrot's fludy, with learned notes of his own.

FACCIOLATI (GIACOMO) an Italian orator and grammarian, fettled at Padua, editor of an edition of the oration of Cicero for Quinctius, and author of feveral philological, grammatical, and other learned works. Was born in 1682, and died in 1769.

FACIO (BARTOLOME'O) born at Spezzia in the territory of Genoa; was fecretary to Alphonfo of Arragon, king of Naples; and was intimately acquainted with Æneas Sylvius, who became pope under the name of Pius II. and with moft of the literati of his age. But between him and Laurentius Valla an irreconcileable enmity fubfifted. He died about the year 1457, but at what age is not exactly known. His chief works are, 1. "De bello Veneto Claudiano, feu inter Venetos " et Genuenfes, circiter anno 1391," 8vo, Lugd. 1578. 2. " De rebus ab Alphonfo I. Rege Neapolitano geftis, lib. x. " 3. De humanæ Vitæ felicitate, ad Alphonfum Neap. Reg." which, with other tracts by him, was first published at Hanover, in 1611, by Marquard Freher. 4. " De Viris illustr. " fui temporis," Florence, 1745. FACUNDUS, bishop of Hermianum in Afia, who was prefent at the council of Conftantinople, held by pope Vigilius in 547, and was a strenuous defender of the writings called The three chapters, which the council of Chalcedon had pronounced orthodox. The works fo named were, I. The writings of Theodore of Mopfuestia. 2. The books which Theodoret of Cyrus wrote, against the twelve anathemas published. by Cyril against the Nestorians. 3. The letter which Ibas of. Edeffa had written to Maris, a Persian, concerning the council of Ephefus, and the condemnation of Neftorius. The queftion of condemning these writings, had been raifed by Theodore bishop of Cæsarea, for the sake of weakening the authority of the council of Chalcedon, and crushing the Nestorians. The emperor Justinian, listened to this prelate, published an edict against the three chapters in 544, and in the council of. Constantinople abovementioned, forced the pope Vigilius to accede to the fame fentence. Vigilius, agitated between the contending parties, changed his opinion and conduct four times; but Facundus remained firm, and was banifhed for his perfeverance. He wrote twelve books on the fubject, addreffed to, Justinian, which are still extant, and one against Mutianus, but, in fact, against Vigilius; both published with notes, by P. Sirmond, in 1629. There is also an "Epistola Catholica, " fidei pro defensione trium capitulorum," added to the edition of 1675. His style is animated and artful, but not always moderate.

FAERNUS (GABRIEL), a native of Cremona in Italy, was an excellent Latin poet and critic, and flourished in the 16th century. He was fo skilled in every thing relating to polite literature, that the cardinal de Medicis, afterwards Pius IV. was particularly fond of him. He was the author of fome Latin Elegies, a hundred Latin Fables selected from the ancients, and written in Iambic verfe; and of feveral productions in the way of criticism, as, " Censura Emendationum " Livianarum, De Metris Comicis," &c. He was remarkably skilled in decyphering manufcripts, and restoring ancient authors to their purity. He took great pains with Terence, in particular; and Bentley thought his notes upon that author fo important, that he has given them entire in his edi-He died at Rome in 1561, as Thuanus relates; who tion. gives his character, and fays, that the learned world was greatly obliged to him, yet had been more fo, if, instead of suppressing, he had been content with imitating the Fables of Phædrus. For he afferts that Faernus dealt unfairly with the public concerning Phædrus, who was then unknown; having a manufeript of that author, which he concealed from the world, for fear of lessening the value of the Latin fables he had made in imitation of Æfop. Perrault, however, who published a translation of Faernus's fables into French verse at Paris, in 1699, has defended his author from Thuanus's imputation. His words in the preface are as follow: "Faernus s has been called a fecond Phædrus, by reafon of the excel-66 lent style of his Fables, though he never faw Phædrus, who " did not come to our knowledge, till above thirty years after " his death; for Pithœus, having found that manufcript in " the duft of an old library, published it in the beginning of " this century. Thuanus, who makes very honourable men-" tion of our author in his hiftory, pretends, that Phædrus " was not unknown to him; and even blames him for having " fuppreffed that author, to conceal what he had ftolen from " him. But there is no ground for what he fays; and it is " only the effect of the ftrong perfuasion of all those, who are " fo great admirers of antiquity, as to think that a modern " author can do nothing that is excellent, unlefs he has an an-" cient author for his model. Out of the hundred fables which ". Faernus published in Latin verse, there are but five that " had been treated by Phædrus; and out of those five, there " are but one or two that have been managed nearly in the fame 5 manner: which happened only becaufe it is impossible that st two men, who treat on the fame fubject, should not agree fometimes in the fame thoughts, or in the fame expressions." FAGAN . . .

FAGAN (CHRISTOPHER BARTHE'LEMI), a French comic writer of fome eminence within the prefent century. He was fon of a clerk in a public office at Paris, in which he alfo obtained an appointment, fuch as gave him little trouble, and left him leifure for literary occupations. He wrote for feveral of the French theatres, and his works were collected into four volumes, 12mo, 1760. The general character of his comedies is a delicate and natural livelinefs. The most approved of them were, The Rendezvous, and The Ward. In his own character he was not unlike la Fontaine, indolent, averfe to bufinefs, negligent of his appearance, abfent, and timid, by no means likely to be taken by a ftranger for a man of genius. He died in 1755, at the age of fifty-three.

FAGIUS (PAUL), whose German name was Buchlein, a Protestant minister, was born at Rheinzabern in Germany, 1504, and laid the foundation of his learning in that town. He was fent to Heidelberg at eleven, and at eighteen to Strafburg; where not being properly supported, he had recourse to teaching others, in order to find himfelf books and neceffaries, The fludy of the Hebrew becoming fashionable in Germany, he applied himfelf to it; and by the help of Elias Levita, a learned Jew, became a great proficient in it. In 1527, he took upon him the care of a school at Isna; where he married, and had a family. Asterwards, quitting the occupation of a schoolmaster, he entered into the ministry, and became a fedulous preacher. Bufflerus, one of the fenators of Isna, being informed of his perfect knowledge in the holy tongue, and of his natural bias to the arts, erected a printinghouse at his own charge, that Fagius might publish whatever he fhould deem useful to religion in that way: but the event did not answer the expence.

In 1541, the plague began to fpread at Ifna; when Fagius understanding that the wealthiest of the inhabitants were about to leave the place, without having any regard to the poorer fort, rebuked them openly, and admonished them of their duty; that they fhould either continue in the town, or liberally beftow their alms before they went, for the relief of those they left behind; adding that, during the time of that calamity, he would himfelf in perfon vifit those that were fick, would administer spiritual comfort to them, pray for them, and be pre-fent with them day and night: all which he did, and yet efcaped the distemper. At the same season the plague raged in Strafburg, and among many others took off Wolfangus Capito; upon which Fagius was called by the fenate to fucceed him; and here he continued to preach till the beginning of the German wars. Then the elector Palatine, intending a reformation in his churches, called Fagius from Strafburg to Heidelberg, berg, and made him the public profeffor there: but the emperor prevailing against the elector, the reformation was prevented. During his refidence here, he published many books for the promotion of Hebrew learning; which were greatly approved by Bucer and others.

His father dying in 1548, and the perfecution in Germany threatening pains and penalties to all who did not profess the Romish doctrine, he and Bucer came over to England, upon receiving letters from Cranmer, in which they had affurances of a kind reception and a handfome stipend, if they would continue here. They arrived in 1549; were entertained fome days in the palace at Lambeth; and defined to refide at Cambridge, where they were to perfect a new translation and illuftration of the Scriptures, Fagius taking the Old Testament, and Bucer the New, for their feveral parts. But this was all put an end to, by the fudden illnefs and death of both thefe professors. Fagius fell ill at London of a quartan fever, but would be removed to Cambridge, on hopes of receiving benefit from the change of air. He died there in Nov. 1550; and Bucer did not live above a year after. By a difgraceful bigotry, both their bodies were dug up and burnt in the reign of queen Mary.

FAGE (RAIMOND DE LA), a felf-taught genius in drawing with the pen, or Indian ink, who arrived at fuch eminence in that branch, as to be complimented upon it by Carlo Marat. He went to vifit that painter, who received him with politenefs, and offered him his pencil; when he declined ufing it, faying, that he had never practifed painting. "I am glad to "hear it," faid the artift, "for, if I may judge from your "drawings, of the progrefs you would have made in paint-"ing, I must certainly have given place to you." Fage lived irregularly, generally drawing at a public-houfe, and fometimes paying his bills by a fketch produced upon the occafion. He was born in 1648, at Lifle en Albigeois in Languedoc, and died in 1690.

FAGON (GUI CRESCENT), a celebrated French phyfician in the reign of Louis XIV. who advanced him to the place of chief royal phyfician. He was born at Paris in 1632, the fon of a commillary of war. He was bred to medicine, and took the degree of doctor in 1664, foon after which he alarmed the old phyficians, by fupporting the circulation of the blood, a doctrine not then established. His first step to advancement feems to have been his undertaking to collect plants for the royal garden, which he did at the instance of Vallot, then chief phyfician. He collected with great care on the Alps, and in the fouth of France; and on his return was rewarded by the appointment of professor of botany and chemistry in the royal gardens. In 1668, 1668, he was named chief physician to the dauphiness, soon after to the queen, then to the royal children, and, lastly, in 1693, to Louis himfelf. In this high office his virtue and difinterestedness were no less conspicuous than his knowledge. He voluntarily retrenched the perquifites of his place, was a ftrenuous defender of the faculty, and the enlightened detector of quacks. In 1698, being then also in the place of fuperintendant of the royal gardens, he prevailed on the king to fend Tournesort to the east for plants, which produced the scientific voyage fo well known to the world. His own conflictution was naturally very flender, but he preferved it, by attention to a strict regimen, nearly to the age of 80. Fontenelle faid of him very justly, that he gave the most conspicuous proof of his skill in keeping himself alive. " His house, faid the same genius, was like certain ancient temples, in which were preferved the receipts for curing every possible difease." He died in 1718, leaving two fons, one of whom became a bifliop, the other a counfellor of state.

FAHRENHEIT (GABRIEL DANIEL), the celebrated improver of the thermometer, was born at Dantzic, May 14. 1686. He was originally intended for commerce, but had a decided turn for philosophical studies, and employed himself in the constructon of barometers and thermometers, which art he carried to great perfection. About 1720, he improved the thermometer, by fubstituting mercury for spirit of wine. He alfo made a new scale for the instrument, fixing the extremities of it at the point of fevere cold observed by himself in Iceland in 1709, which he conceived to be the greatest degree of cold, and at the point where mercury boils, dividing the intermediate space into 600 degrees. His point of extreme cold, which is the fame that is produced by furrounding the bulb of the thermometer with a mixture of fnow, fal ammoniac, and fea falt, he marked o, and carried his degrees upwards; though few thermometers have been practically formed. which carry their degrees much above 212, the point at which water boils. Forty degrees below the o of Fahrenheit, have fince been observed at Petersburg, and elsewhere; and as this is the point at which mercury freezes, it would make a better limit to the fcale, which would thus be confined between the utmost extremities of heat and cold that can be examined. by means of that fluid. ' Our English philosophers have in, general adopted the scale of Fahrenheit; those of France have preferred Reaumur's. Fahrenheit published a differtation on thermometers in 1724. He travelled to Holland, and in various parts of the continent, in purfuit of knowledge, and died Sept. 16, 1736.

FAILLE (GUILLAUME DE LA) a celebrated fyndic of Toulouse, known by his history of that city in two folio volumes, and a treatife on the nobility of the capitouls, or fheriffs of Touloufe. These works are full of curious research, delivered in a lively but not a correct style. He died in 1711, at the advanced age of 96.

FAIRFAX (EDWARD), an English poet, who flourished in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I. His merits were fo great, that Waller professed to have learnt from him the art of versification. Dryden introduces Spenser and Fairfax almost on a level, as the leading authors of their times; and feems even to give the preference to the latter in point of harmony. Of his life, however, but little was known till the publication of bishop Atterbury's " Epistolary Correspondence" produced . the following narrative [E] from a defcendant of the family F :

<sup>7</sup> Edward Fairfax was the fon of Sir Thomas Fairfax of Denton in Yorkshire, who passed his-youth in the wars of Europe, and was with the duke of Bourbon at the facking of Rome, anno 15*.

"His eldest brother was Sir Thomas [G] Fairfax, who was knighted at Roan in Normandy, and fignalized himfelf on many occasions in Germany against the house of Austria, then aspiring to a fifth monarchy. His younger brother was Sir Charles, who was a captain under Sir Francis Vere at the battle of Newport; and, in that famous three years fiege of Oftend, commanded all the English in the town, awhile before it was furrendered, where he received a wound in his face, by a piece of the skull of a marshal of France slain near him with a cannon bullet, and foon after was himfelf flain.

"While his brothers were thus honourably employed abroad, he staid at home at his book, and thereby made himself fit for any employment in church or ftate. But an invincible modefty, and love of a retired life, made him prefer the thady groves and natural calcades of Denton, and the forest of Knarefborough, before all the diversions of court or camp.

" He did not pass his time ignobili otio, as appears by the many valuable manufcripts he has left in the library of my lord Fairlax at Denton, both in verfe and profe.

"His first essay in poetry was when very young, in translating Torquato Taffo's heroic poem of "Godfrey of Bullen" but of Italian into fmooth and excellent English verse; a book highly commended by the best judges and wits of that age, and allowed by the critics of this [H]. King James valued it above all other English poetry; and king Charles, in the time of his confinement, used to divert himself by reading it.

"He wrote other ingenious eclogues, and prefented them to the duke of Richmond and Lenox, of which his fon William gives this account in his annotations upon them, viz. "Thefe "bucolics were written in the first year of the reign of king James, and from their finishing, they lay neglected ten years in my father's study, until Lodowic the late noble duke of Richmond and Lenox defired a fight of them, which made the author to transferibe them for his grace's use. That copy was feen and approved by many learned men; and that reverend divine Dr. Field, now bishop of Hereford, wrote verses upon it; and these following were written by Wilson, Scoto-britannus:

" Et Phœbum, castasque doces, Fairfaxe, sorores

" Salfa verecundo verba lepore loqui, Ulla nec in toto prurit lafcivia libro,

" Pagina non minus est quam tibi vita proba."

Chaste is thy Mufe as is a vestal nun,

And thy Apollo fpotlefs as the fun,

No wanton thought betray'd by word or look,

As blamelefs is thy life, as is thy book.

" But the book itfelf, and the bifhop's encomium, perifhed in in the fire, when the banqueting-houfe at Whitehall was burnt, and with it part of the duke's lodgings where the book was; but, with my father's help, I recovered them out of his loofe papers, &c."

"Thefe were his diversions in his folitude; but he has left better proofs of his learning and judgement, in the controversy of religion with the church of Rome, all correctly written with his own hand.

"There was one John Dorrell, a Romish priest of no ordinary fame, then a prisoner in the castle of York: between them there passed feveral letters, on feveral subjects, as the pope's supremacy, infallibility, idolatry, &c. which deferve to be published.

"The antiquary Roger Dodfworth, in his manufcript book, which he calls "Sancti et Scriptores Ebor," gives him this character: "Edward Fairfax of Fuyfton, efq. in the foreft "of Knarefborough, brother of fir Thomas lord Fairfax of

"He was very ferviceable to his brother my lord Fairfax in the education of his children, the government of his family, and in all his affairs. The fuccefs appeared in having all his children bred fcholars, and well principled in religion and virtue: his houfe famed for hospitality, and his estate flourishing.

"What his principles were, appears by this character he gives of himfelf in his book called "Demonology:" For my-"felf, I am in religion neither a fantaftic Puritan, nor a fuperftitious Papift; but fo fettled in confcience, that I have the fure ground of God's word to warrant all I believe, and the commendable ordinances of our English church to approve all I practife: in which course I live a faithful chriftian, and an obedient fubject, and fo teach my family."

"These were the principles, and this the practice of the family, during the life of that noble lord Thomas, who died May 1, 1641, before the civil wars began in England, happily for himself, but not for the family.

"His fons were bred fcholars: two of them took to the gown, one to the pulpit, the other to the bar: but a martial humour running in their veins, three of them were flain in the wars beyond fea; two in the defence of Frankendale, the other at Montauban in France. I cannot mention the name of those two brothers, my uncles William and John, without taking notice of the condoling letter, with the first news of their death, fent to their father, from Henry lord Clifford, the last earl of Cumberland of that name [1].

[1] "To my noble and worthy friend fir Thomas Fairfax at Denton.

.. Worthy Sir,

" I never took pen in hand with more grief, for though my letter be to comfort you, yet are the contents fo fad reports unto you of woe, declaring the death of your valiant and brave fons in the Palatinate, as I proteft I figh from the bottom of my heart at every paufe, not knowing how to comfort you, being fu troubled with grief myfelf, which makes me begin in confution.

<sup>66</sup> The brave fallies out of Frankendale were fo often made with fuccefs by them, that I think it as impossible for time to furvive the memory of them, as it is to reftore again to life the noble executioners. For with the lofs of eighty of our men, there were flain above 2000 of the bravest Spaniards that Spinola left behind him in the Palatinate: and they still defended the town till my lord Vere and count Mansfield raifed the fiege. But, alas! two or three days before the relief, your fon John was flain with fome fixteen more, surprised by the enemy upon the outworks (in a dark night, the fentinelgiving no notice), who cut them to pieces. when they had formed to accept of the enemies offer of fafety, if they would yield themfelves prisoners.

" The brave captain William, as my informer

"Mr. Edward Fairfax had feveral children, fons and daughters. His eldeft fon William was a fcholar, of the fametemper of his father, but more cynical. He translated "Dia " ogenes Laertius, the Lives of the old Philosophers," out of Greek into English.

"Edward died about the year 1632, at his own house called Newhall, in the parish of Fuyston, between Denton and Knaresbosough, and lies under a marble stone; but deferves a monument near Godfrey of Bullen in the Temple of Jerusalem."

FAITHORNE (WILLIAM), an ingenious English painter, who flourished in the 17th century. After the civil wars broke out, he went into the army; when being taken prisoner in Basing-house, and refusing to take the oaths to Oliver, he was banished into France. He studied several years under the famous Champagne, and arrived to very great perfection in correctness of drawing. He was also a great proficient in engraving, as likewise in painting, especially in miniature, of which there are many specimens now extant in England. He died in Blackfriars in 1691, when he was near 75 years of age. He wrote a book, "Upon Drawing, Graving, and Etching," for which he was celebrated by his friend Flatman the poet, in an elegy, which ends with these lines:

" So long as brafs, fo long as books endure,

So long as neat wrought pieces, thou'rt fecure,

A "Faithorne sculpsit," is a charm can fave

From dull oblivion, and a gaping grave."

William Faithorne the fon, who performed chiefly in mezzotinto, has often been confounded with his father.

FALCANDUS (HUGO), a writer of Sicilian hiftory in the 12th century. He wrote the hiftory of the calamities by which that country was afflicted for near 23 years, under William I. and II. His preface was written in the year 1166. He wrote the hiftory of events of which he was himfelf a witnefs, and is reckoned an author of merit, and good credit. The exact time of his death is not known.

FALCONBERG (MARY COUNTESS OF), was the third daughter of Oliver Cromwell, a lady of great beauty, but of informer tells me, two days after being in the trenches, had his thigh taken off by a cannon fhot, but lived a day and half after, in which time he acted the part of as good a Chriftian, as he had before of a fuccefsful commander; fo as the happinefs of his foul muft neceffarily extenuate the lofs of his life, the one crowned with honour, the other with eternal bleffednefs.

Bifhop Burnet, who ftiles her a wife and worthy woman, fays, that "fhe was more likely to have maintained "the poft (of protector) than either of her brothers;" according to a faying that went of her, "that thofe who wore breeches, "deferved petticoats better; but if thofe in petticoats bad been "in breeches, they would have held fafter." After Richard was depofed, who, as fhe well knew, was never formed for regal power, fhe exerted herfelf in behalf of Charles II. and is faid to have had a great and fuccefsful hand in his reftoration. It is very certain that her hufband was fent to the Tower by the commiffion of fafety a little before that great event, and that he ftood very high in the king's favour. She died March 14, 1712. See a remarkable paffage concerning her in Dr. Z. Grey's examination of Neal's hiftory of the Puritans, p. 36.

FALCONER (WILLIAM), an ingenious Scottifh failor, who, about the year 1762, came up to London with a very pathetic poem, called "The Shipwreck," founded on a difafter which happened in his own experience. The publication of this piece recommended him to the late duke of York, and he would, in all probability, have been fuitably preferred, if a fecond fhipwreck, as may be fuppofed, had not proved fatal to him, and to many gentlemen of rank and fortune with whom he failed. It was in 1769, that he went out a volunteer in the Aurora frigate, fent to carry Meff. Vanfittart, Scrafton, and Ford, the fupervifors appointed to regulate our Eaft India fettlements; which veffel, after it had touched at the Cape of Good Hope, was never more heard of. Before his departure he publifhed a very ufeful Marine Dictionary in one volume, quarto.

FALCONET (CAMILLE), born at Lions in 1671, was bred a phyfician, in which profession his family had long been celebrated, but diffinguished himself more in general literature than in medicine. He settled at Paris, became a friend of Malebranche, and in 1716 was elected into the French academy. He had a library of between four and five hundred thousand volumes, from which he prefented to the royal library, all those that were wanting to that collection. He died in 1762, at the age of 91, being supposed (like Fagon), to have prolonged his life by his skill. He was of a lively disposition, with a ready natural eloquence; and though he was not fo famous in the practice of medicine, he was much efteemed in confultation. His chief works are, I. A translation of Villemont's "Systema Planetarum," published in 1707. 2. An edition of the Greek Pastoral of "Daphnis and Chloe," translated by Amyot, with curious notes. 3. An edition of Despé-VOL. VI. F rier's rier's "Cymbalum Mundi," with notes. 4. Several differtations in the memoirs of the academy; and fome medical thefes.

FALCONIA (PROBA), a Roman poetefs, who flourished in the reign of Theodofius; was a native of Horta, or Hortanum, in Etruria. There is still extant by her, a cento from Virgil, giving the facred history from the creation to the deluge; and the history of Christ, in verses felected from that poet, introduced by a few lines of her own. Authors have fometimes confounded her with Anicia Faltonia Proba, the mother of three confuls: and with Valeria Proba, the wife of Adelfius, a proconful.

FALDA (GIOVANNI BAPTISTA), an Italian engraver of this century, fome of whofe etchings in aquafortis, are much efteemed by connoiffeurs. He published views of the palaces, fountains, &c. of Rome, which are thought valuable and curious.

FALETI (JERONIMO), an Italian poet of the fixteenth century, a native of Savona, in the flate of Genoa. He publifhed in 1557 a poem in Ottava rima, on the wars of Charles V. in Flanders, and other mifcellaneous poems; and in 1558, twelve of his orations were publifhed at Venice by Aldus, in folio. He wrote alfo on the caufes of the German war under Charles V. and an Italian translation of Athenagoras on the refurrection. He was diftinguifhed as a flatefman, an orator, and an hiftorian, as well as a poet, and was deputed on an embaffy to Venice by Hercules Anteftini, duke of Ferrara.

FALIERI (ORDELAFO), doge of Venice, went with a powerful fleet to the aid of Baldwin king of Jerufalem, about the year 1102. Having affifted that prince in recovering the greater part of Syria, he conquered on his return, Dalmatia, Croatia, and feveral other provinces. He returned in triumph to his native country, but did not long enjoy his tranquillity. Zara in Dalmatia revolted, and in laying fiege to that city, in the year 1120, he loft his life.

FALIERI (MARINO), doge of Venice in the year 1354, formed an atrocious defign of feizing the government, fo as to render himfelf abfolute. He had already formed his plan for affaffinating all the fenators, when his plot was difcovered by one of his accomplices. The fenate took their measures fo well, that fixteen of the confpirators were feized at once with Falieri. They were hanged, and he was beheaded at the age of 80. Four hundred more, concerned in the plot, were put to death in various ways. The confpirator who revealed the defign was ennobled, and had a pension of 1000 crowns. But being difcontented with this reward, he upbraided the fenators for for ingratitude, and at length was banifhed for his murmurs into the island of Augusta, whence he escaped, but perished in making his way to Dalmatia.

FALKLAND (LORD): See CARY.

FALLE (PHILIP), a learned man, was born in the ille of Jerfey in 1655, and at fourteen became a commoner of Exeter college in Oxford [K]; from whence he removed to St. Alban's hall, and took both his degrees in arts. Afterwards he went into orders, retired to his native country, where he was made rector of St. Saviour's, and was afterwards chofen deputy from the ftates of that ifland to king William and queen Mary. He publifhed three fermons; one preached at St. Hilary's in Jerfey, in 1692; another at Whitehall in 1694; and another b fore the mayor of London in 1695. He was the author alfo of, "An account of the ifle of Jerfey, the greateft of thofe iflands. "that are now the only remainder of the Englifh dominions "in France: with a new and accurate map of that ifland." 1694; 8vo.

FALLOPIUS (GABRIEL), a most celebrated physician and anatomist of Italy, was descended from a noble family, and born at Modena in 1490. He enjoyed a strong and vigorous constitution, with vast abilities of mind, which he cultivated by an intense application to his studies in Philosophy, Phystic, Botany, and Anatomy. In this last he made some discoveries, and, among the rest, that of the tubes by which the Ova descend from the Ovarium, and which from him are called the "Fallopian Tubes." He travelled through the greatest part of Europe, and penetrated by his labour the most abstruss of nature. He practised physic with great fuccess, and gained the character of one of the ablest physicians of his age. He was made professor of anatomy at Pisa in the year 1548, then at Padua in the year 1551; at which last place he died upon the 9th of October, 1563, aged feventy-two years.

His writings, by which he very much diftinguished himself, were first published separately, at the time they were written; and afterwards collected and printed with the title of, "Opera "Genuina Omnia, tam Practica, quam Theoretica, in tres "Genuina Omnia, tam Practica, quam Theoretica, in tres "tomos distributa." They were printed at Venice in 1584, and in 1606; and at Francfort in 1600, "cum Operum Ap-"pendice," and in 1606, in folio. The first volume contains, 1. "Institutiones Anatomicæ." 2. "Observationes Anato-"micæ." 3. "Observationes de Venis." 4. " De partibus fimilaribus humani corporis." 5. "De Medicamentis Sim-"plicibus." 6. "De materia medicinali in librum primum

FALS (RAIMOND), a celebrated engraver of medals. He was born at Stockholm in 1658, but fettled at Paris in 1683, where he obtained a high reputation, worked under Cheron medallift to the king, and had his diligence and ingenuity rewarded by a penfion of 1200 livres. He died at Berlin in 1703.

FALSTER (CHRISTIAN), a celebrated Danish critic and philologer of Flenfburg, the exact time of whofe birth and death we have not been able to learn. His chief works, which are all of a curious and interesting nature, were published between the years 1717 and 1731. They are thefe: 1. "Supplemen-" tum Linguz Latinz," confifting of observations on Cellarius's edition of Faber; Flensburg, 1717. 2. "Animadver-" fiones Epistolicæ," of a similar nature, published at the fame place and time. 3. "Quastiones Romana," containing an idea of the literary history of the Romans, with obscure memorials of eminent writers and works; Flenfburg, 1718. 4. "Cogitationes Philologicæ," Lipf. 1719. 5. "Sermo "Panegyricus de variarum gentium bibliothecis," ibid. 1720. 6. Vigilia prima noctium Ripenfium," containing obfervations on A. Gellius; Hafniæ, 1721. 7. "Amænitates Philologi-" cæ," Amít. 1729-32, 3 vols. And, 7. "A Danish trans-" lation of the fourteenth fatire of Juvenal," Hafn. 1731, in 4to, the reft are 8vo.

FANCOURT (SAMUEL), a native of the West of England, was, at the beginning of the prefent century, paftor of a congregation of Protestant Diffenters in Salifbury, where he had a number of pupils for near 20 years. Profetting a creed very different from the opinions of Calvin, as appears by his numerous publications [M], he incurred the difpleasure of the zealous Calvinists. [M] His publications as collected from the Catalogue of his Circulating Library, had an equal fhare in the controversy; which turned on the divine prescience, the freedom of the human will, the greatness of the divine love, and the doctrine of reprobation.

Driven-from a comfortable fettlement to the great metropolis, where he acquired no new one as a teacher, Mr. Fancourt, about the year 1740 or 1745, established the first circulating library for gentlemen and ladies, at a fubscription of a guinea a year for reading; but in 1748 extended it to a guinea in all, for the purchase of a better library, half to be paid at the time of fubfcribing, the other half at the delivery of a new catalogue then in the prefs, and twelve-pence a quarter beside, to begin from Michaelmas 1745, to the librarian. Subscriptions were to be paid without further charge to the proprietors, but to pay only from the time of fubfcribing; out of which quarterly payments were to be deducted the rent of the rooms to receive the books, and accommodate fubfcribers, a falary to the librarian to keep an open account, and to circulate the books; a flock to buy new books and duplicates as there was occafion; the expence of providing catalogues, and drawing up writings for fettling the truft. This truft was to be vested in twelve or thirteen perfons chosen by ballot out of the body of proprietors; and the propofer, Mr. Fancourt himfelf, was to be the first librarian, and to continue fo as long as he discharged his office with diligence and fidelity. Every fingle fubfcription entitled the fubfcriber to one book and one pamphlet at a time, to be changed ad libitum for others, and kept ad libitum, if not wanted by other fubscribers. Mr. Fancourt advertifed himfelf alfo in these proposals as a teacher of Latin, to read, write, and speak it with fluency in a year's time or less, at twelve guineas a year, one guinea a month, or twelvepence an hour, allowing five or fix hours in a week. The great hypercritic of Mr. Fancourt's defign was the late Dr. C. Mortimer. Not to trace the poor librarian through every fhifting of his quarters, he fixed at last at the corner of one of the ftreets in the Strand, where encumbered with a helples and fick wife, turned out of fashion and out-planned by a variety of imitators, and entangled with a variety of plans, not one of which could extricate him from perplexities, this worthy man, who may be faid to have first circulated knowledge among us, funk under a load of debt, unmerited reproach, and a failure of his faculties, brought on by the decay of age, precipitated by misfortunes. His library became the property of creditors, and he retired in humble poverty to Hoxton-square, where some of his brethren relieved his necessities, till he closed a life of usefulness in his 90th year, June 8, 1768. As a preacher, though neither what is now called popular, nor pastor of a London con-F3 gregation, gregation, the writer of this article remembers to have heard him with pleafure, when engaged to fill up those vacancies which were occasioned by accident; and he will ever regret how few imitators the manly eloquence and reasoning of Mr. Fancourt have in this giddy age.

FANNIUS (CAIUS), the fon of Marcus Fannius, and fonin-law of Lælius; wrote a hiftory, of which Cicero fays, that it was neither inelegant nor perfectly eloquent : yet it was extolled "for its first veracity, and had the honour of being epitomized by M. Brutus, He wrote alfo Annals, the eighth book of which is quoted by Prifcian, and others by different writers. He was first cousin to C. Fannius Strabo, who was conful with Domitius, A. C. 121, and grandfon to C. Fannius Strabo, author of the Fannian law, one of the earliest fumptuary laws, which was passed in his confulship, A. C. 161. Fannius wrote his history in his youth, when he ferved in Africa under Scipio Æmilianus, and in Spain under Fabius Max. Servilianus. He was not on the best terms with his father-in-law, because he had preferred L. Scævola, the hufband of an elder daughter, in an election for the college of augurs: yet by his recommendation he became a student under Panætius.

FANNIUS (QUADRATUS), a bad poet in the time of Augustus, whose vanity induced him to fend his works, and a figure of himself, to one of the public libraries, and was flattered by its reception, as Horace tells us; which is almost all we know of him, except that the old scholiast mentions a fatire as one of his performances.

FANNIUS (CAIUS), another Roman hiftorian, who flourifhed in the reign of Trajan, and was a friend of the younger Pliny. From the account of him given by that author, he feems to have been an advocate in much bufinefs. He wrote, however, three books, relating the deaths of those who were either executed or banished by order of Nero; and was preparing others, when his progress was intercepted by death. Pliny laments him as a man he loved, as polished, and eloquent, naturally acute, improved by exercise, and stored with various learning. His three books, he adds, were written in a middle style, between history and colloquial narration, in pure latinity, and containing strong marks of penetration and diligence. His death was fudden.

FANSHAW (SIR RICHARD), an English gentleman, famous for his embassies and writings, descended from an ancient family at Fanshaw-gate in Derbyshire, was the tenth fon of Sir Henry Fanshaw, of Ware-Park in Hertfordshire, where it is supposed he was born about 1607. He received the rudiments of his education from the famous Thomas Farnaby, afterwards completed his studies in the university of Cambridge, bridge, and from thence went to travel into foreign countries, by which means he became accomplished. He diffinguished himfelf fo early, that, in 1635, he was taken into the employments of state by Charles I. and then fent refident to the court of Spain; whence being recalled in 1641, he adhered to the royal interest, and was employed in the most important mat-In 1644, attending the court at Oxford, he had the ters. degree of doctor of the civil law conferred upon him; and being now grown eminent for his excellent abilities and learning, he was made fecretary to Charles prince of Wales, whom he attended into the western parts of England, and thence into the isles of Scilly and Jersey. In 1648, he was made treafurer of the navy under the command of prince Rupert, which he managed till 1650; when he was created a baronet by Charles II. and fent envoy extraordinary to the court of Spain. Being recalled thence into Scotland, he ferved there in quality of fecretary of state, to the great fatisfaction of all parties, though he never took, fays Wood, COVENANT or ENGAGEMENT. He afterwards attended his majefty to Worcefter; and being taken prisoner in the battle there of 1651, he was committed to close custody in London; where continuing till he had contracted a very dangerous illnefs, he had the liberty allowed him, upon bail given, to go any where for the recovery of his health, provided he ftirred not five miles from the place, without leave of the parliament. During these, and other seafons of leifure, he wrote various poems, and made several translations, of which an account shall be given below.

February 1659, he repaired to the king at Breda, who knighted him the April following. Upon his majesty's restoration, it was expected from his great fervices, and the regard the king had for him, that he would have been made fecretary of state: but at that period there were fo many people's merits to reward, and fo great a clamour for preferment, that Sir Richard was disappointed, but had the place of master of requests conferred upon him, a station in those times of considerable profit. On account of his being a good Latin scholar, he was also made fecretary for that language. In 1661, being one of the burgeffes for the university of Cambridge, he was fworn a privy counfellor of Ireland; and having, by his residence in foreign countries qualified himself for public employment, he was fent envoy extraordinary to Portugal, with a dormant commission to the ambassador, which he was to make use of as occasion should require. Shortly after, he was appointed ambaffador to that court, where he negotiated the marriage between his master and the infanta donna Catherina. He returned to England towards the end of the fame year : but F 4 110 72

we are affured by Wood, that, in 1662, he was sent again amballador to that court; and when he had finished his commisfion to the fatisfaction of both princes, being recalled in 1663, he was fworn one of his majefty's privy council.

In the beginning of 1664, he was fent ambassador to Philip the IVth of Spain, and arrived in Feb. at Cadiz, where he met with a very extraordinary and unexpected falutation, and was received with fome circumstances of particular esteem. It appears from one of his letters, that this diftinguishing respect was paid him, not only on his own, but on his mafter's account: and from another, that this peculiar honour arole from the expectation that Tangier and Jamaica were to be reftored to Spain by England, which occasioned his arrival to be fo impatiently longed for, and fo magnificently celebrated. During his refidence at this court Philip died, Sept 1665, leaving his fon Charles an infant, and his dominions under the regency of his queen, daughter of the emperor Ferdinand III. Sir Richard, taking the advantage of this minority, put the finishing hand to a peace with Spain : that country being fufficiently tired and weakened with a war of twenty-five years for the recovery of Portugal, which had been difinembered from the Spanish crown in 1640. The treaty of peace was figned at Madrid Dec. 6, 1665, and is to be feen in the fecond volume of Arlington's letters. In January following, Sir Richard took a journey into Portugal; with a view, no doubt, of bring-ing about an accommodation between that crown and Spain: but this was not effected till 1667, by the mediation of his Britannic majesty.

Having fulfilled his commission, he was preparing to return to England; when, June 4, 1666, he was feized at Madrid with a violent fever, which put an end to his life on the 16th. His body being embalmed was conveyed by land to Calais, and fo to London; whence being carried to All-Saints church in Hertford, it was deposited in the vault of his father-in-law, till May 1671; and then removed to a new vault, made on purpose for his family, in the parish church of Ware. By his lady, Anne, daughter of Sir John Harrison of Balls, he had fix sons and eight daughters; whereof only one son and sour daughters furvived him. The author of the account of him prefixed to his letters, &c. fays, that " he was remarkable for * his meeknefs, fincerity, humanity, and piety; and alfo, was " an able statesman and great scholar, being in particular a " complete master of several modern languages, especially " the Spanish, which he spoke and wrote with as much ad-" vantage as if he had been a native."

Though his life may truly be faid to have been a life of bufinefs, yet he found time to produce the following works in T. U

the literary way: I. An English translation in rhyme of 4 II " Paftor Fido, or The Faithful Shepherd," written by Battista Guarini, 1646, 4to. 2. A translation from English into Latin verse of " The Faithful Shepherdels," a pastoral : written by John Fletcher, gent. 1658. 3. In the octavo edition of "The Faithful Shepherd," are inferted the following poems of our author; An ode on his majesty's proclamation in in 1630, commanding the gentry to refide upon their estates in the country; an English translation of the fourth book of Virgil's Æneid; odes of Horace, translated into English; 2 fummary Discourse of the Civil Wars of Rome. 4. He translated from Portuguese into English, " The Lusiad, or Portu-".gal's Historical Poem," written by Luis de Camoens, 1655, folio. 5. After his decease, in 1671, these two pieces in 4to: "Querer per solo querer," "To love only for love's fake," a dramatical romance, reprefented before the king and queen of Spain; and "Fiestas de Aranjeuz," Festival at Aranjeuz. Both written in Spanish by Antonio de Mendoza, upon celebrating the birth-day of Philip VI. in 1623, at Aranjuez; and translated by our author in 1654, during his confinement. 6. " Original Letters, during his Embaffies in Spain and Portu-" gal, 1702," 8vo. With his Life prefixed.

We are told, that he composed other things, remaining in manufcript, which he wrote in his younger years, but had not the leifure to complete. Even fome of the forementioned printed pieces have not all the perfection, which our ingenious author could have given them: for, as the writer above obferves, " being, for his loyalty and zeal to his mafter's fervice, " toffed from place to place, and from country to country, " during the unfettled times of our anarchy, fome of his ma-" nufcripts falling by misfortune into unfkilful hands, were " printed and published without his confent or knowledge, " and before he could give them his last finishing strokes." But that was not the case with his translation of " Il Pastor " Fido," which was published by himfelf, and hath been applauded by fome of the best judges: particularly by Sir John Denham, who, after censuring fervile translators, goes on thus:

" A new and nobler way thou doft purfue

" To make translations and translators too.

" They but preferve the ashes, thou the flame,

" True to his sense, but truer to his fame."

FARDELLA (MICHAEL ANGELO), a celebrated professor of natural history and astronomy in the university of Padua; was by birth a Sicilian, bred a Franciscan, and asterwards became a secular priest. He was born at Trapani in Sicily, in 1650, and died at Naples in 1718. His works are little known known in this country. He is faid to have been lively, inconfiderate, and generous.

FAREL (WILLIAM), a learned minister of the church, and most intrepid reformer, was the fon of a gentleman of Dauphiné in France, and born at Gap in 1489 [M]. He studied philosophy, and the Greek and Hebrew tongues, at Paris with great fuccefs, and was for fome time a teacher in the college of cardinal le Moine. Briconnet bishop of Meaux, being inclined to the reformed religion, invited him to preach in his diocefe in 1521; but the perfecution, raifed there against those stiled heretics, in 1523, obliged him to provide for his fecurity out of France. He retired to Strafburg, where Bucer and Capito admitted him as a brother; and he was afterwards received as fuch by Zwinglius at Zurich, by Haller at Berne, and by Oecolampadius at Bafil. As he was thought a proper man to make profelytes, he was advifed to undertake the reformation of religion at Montbeliard, in which defign he was fupported by the duke of Wittenberg, who was lord of that place; and he fucceeded in it most happily. He was a man of a most fiery zeal, which however he tempered a little, by the advice of Oecolampadius. Once on a procession-day, he pulled out of the priest's hand the image of St. Antony, and threw it from a bridge into the river: it is a wonder he was not torn to pieces by the mob. Erasmus by no means liked Farel's temper, as appears from what he wrote of him to the official of Befancon." "You have," fays he, " in your neigh-" bourhood the new evangelist Farel; than whom I never faw " a man more false, more virulent, more seditious." He has given a frightful character of him elfewhere: but he thought Farel had abused him in some of his writings, and therefore is not to be altogether believed in every thing he fays of him.

In 1528, he had the fame fuccefs in promoting the reformation in the city of Aigle, and foon after in the bailiwick of Morat. He went afterwards to Neufchatel in 1529, and difputed against the Roman catholic party with fo much strength, that this city embraced the reformed religion, and established it entirely Nov. 4, 1530. He was fent a deputy to the fynod of Waldensis, held in the valley of Angrogne. Hence he went to Geneva, where he laboured against popery: but the grand vicar and the other clergy resisted him with so much fury, that he was obliged to retire. He was called back in 1534 by the inhabitants, who had renounced the Roman catholic religion; and was the chief perfon that procured the perfect abolition of it the next year. He was banished from Geneva with Calvin in 1538, and retired to Basil, and asterwards to Neuschatel, where there was great probability of a large evangelical harvest. From thence he went to Metz, but had a thousand difficulties to encounter; and was obliged to retire into the abbey of Gorze, where the count of Furstemberg protected him and the new converts. But they could not continue there long; for they were befieged in the abbey, and obliged at last to furrender, after a capitulation. Farel very happily escaped, though ftrict fearch was made after him, having been put in a cart among the fick and infirm. He took upon him his former functions of a minister at Neufchatel, whence he took now and then a journey to Geneva. When he went thither in 1553, he was prefent at Servetus's execution. He went again to Geneva in 1564, to take his last leave of Calvin, who was dangeroufly ill. He took a fecond journey to Metz in 1565, . being invited by his ancient flock, to come and fee the fruits of the feed which he had fown in their hearts. He returned to Neufchatel, and died there Sept. 13, in the fame year.

He married at the age of fixty-nine, and left a fon, who survived him but three years. Though he was far better qualified to preach than to write books, yet he was the author of fome few publications. The difficulties this minister underwent in promoting the reformation, and the courage he fhewed in furmounting them, are almost incredible. He was often furrounded with drawn fwords: bells were rung to prevent his being heard; but in vain: they could neither interrupt nor terrify the preacher. His marriage was thought very ftrange, and out of feafon, even by his friends: but he was not at a loss for arguments to justify it. He married, he faid, for the fake of an help-mate in his old age: he married to fhew, that a state of celibacy is neither meritorious nor satisfactory, as they of the Romifh church affert: and he married to prove, that the grace of a perpetual continency is neither given to all, nor for ever. These reasons have been urged by his friends and party: the last of which must needs appear a very strange one ? " Men will hardly imagine," fays Bayle, " that the gift of " continence, which has been kept to the age of fixty-nine, " fhould on a fudden difappear and vanish away."

FARET (NICHOLAS), one of the first members of the French academy, and principally concerned in forming the statutes of that rising institution. He was secretary to the count d'Harcourt, a friend of Vaugelas St. Amand, and other ingenious men, but himself a very indifferent author both in prose and verse. He had the credit of being a bon vivant, more, perhaps, from his looks than his practice. He was born in 1600, and died in 1646.

FARIA (EMMANUEL DE Sousa), a Portugueze knight, was born in 1590 of a noble family; and being educated fuitably, ably, made a great progress in the belles lettres, and in the knowledge of languages [N]. He accompanied the marquis de Castel Rodrigo, who went ambassador to Rome in the time of Urban VIII. and gained the efteem of all the learned, who frequented the court of that pontiff. Leo Allatius has mentioned him with honour. He died at Madrid in 1650; and, like many others who have devoted their lives to letters, is faid to have been fo negligent of his fortune, as to have died extremely poor. He is the author of feveral works in poetry and profe: and is remarkable for having preferred the Castilian to the Portuguese, though the latter was his native tongue. His poems have been collected into feven volumes. fome of which were not published till after his death. His ftyle is manly, vigorous, nervous; and he every where fhews much genius and judgment. He wrote 2. "Moral and poli-"tical Difcourfes." 3. "Commentaries upon the Lufiadas of Camoens." 4. "A hiftory of Portugal to the reign of Henry the cardinal." 5. "Portuguefe Europe, Afia, Africa, " and America, or a hiftory of their dominions in all those 44 parts," published after his death. He had some singularities, affected a philosophical plainness of drefs, and was of a fevere and independent turn, but fociable and lively with his friends.

FARINACCIO (PROSPER), a celebrated Italian lawyer, born at Rome in 1554, died in 1618. His works, which amount to the quantity of thirteen folio volumes, are much esteemed in his own country, but are chiefly on subjects of law as then established at Rome.

FARINATO (PAUL), an Italian painter, was born at Verona 1522; his mother dying in labour of him. He was a difciple of Nicolo Golfino, and an admirable defigner, but not altogether fo happy in his colouring: though there is a piece of his painting in St. George's church at Verona, fo well performed in both parts, that it does not feem inferior to one of Paul Veronefe, which is placed next to it. He was famous alfo for being an excellent fwordfman, and a very good orator. He had confiderable knowledge in fculpture and architecture, efpecially that part of it which relates to fortifications. His laft moments are faid to have been as remarkable as his firft, on account of the death of his neareft relation. He lay upon his death-bed in 1606; and his wife, who was fick in the fame room, hearing him cry out, "He was going," told him, " She would bear him company;" and actually did fo, as they both expired at the fame minute.

FARING-

FARINGDON (ANTHONY), an English divine, was born at Sunning in Berks, 1596[0]. He was admitted scholar of Trinity-college, Oxford, in 1612, and elected fellow in 1617. Three years after, he took a master of arts degree; about which time entering into orders, he became a celebrated preacher in those parts, an eminent tutor in the college, and, as Wood fays, an example fit to be followed by all. In 1634, being then bachelor of divinity, he was made vicar of Bray near Maidenhead in Berks, and foon after divinity-reader in the king's chapel at Windfor. He continued at the first of these places, though not without fome trouble, till after the civil commotions broke out; and then he was rejected; and reduced with his wife and family to fuch extremities, as to be very near starving. At length Sir John Robinson, alderman of London, related to archbishop Laud, and some of the parishioners of Milk-street, London, invited him to be pastor of St. Mary Magdalen in that city, which he gladly accepted, and preached with great approbation from the loyal party. In 1657, he published a folio volume of these sermons, and dedicated them to his patron Robinson, " as a withesse or ma-" nifesto," fays he to him, " of my deep apprehension of " your many noble favours, and great charity to me and mine, " when the sharpnesse of the weather, and the roughnesse of " the times, had blown all from us, and well-neer left us " naked."

After his death, which happened at his houfe in Milk-ftreet, Sept. 1658, his executors publifhed, in 1663, a fecond folio volume of his fermons containing forty, and a third in 1673, containing fifty. He left alfo behind him, in MS. memorials of the life of John Hales of Eaton, his intimate friend and fellow-fufferer: but thefe memorials have never come to light.

FARNABY (THOMAS), an eminent grammarian and fchool-mafter, was fon of Thomas Farnaby of London, carpenter, and grandfon of Mr. Farnaby, fometime mayor of Truro in Cornwall. He was born in London about 1575. He became a fervitor of Merton-college in Oxford in 1590, but continued there only a fhort time; for, being feduced to abandon his religion and country, he went into Spain, and was for fome time educated there in a college belonging to the Jefuits. He was originally of foreign extraction: for his great grandfather, the father of the mayor of Truro, was an Italian mufician. Being weary, at length, of the fevere difcipline of the Jefuits, he contrived to leave them; and went with Sir Francis Drake and Sir John Hawkins, in their laft voyage in 1595, being in fome efteem with the former. He afterwards ferved as a foldier in the Low Countries; but being reduced to great neceffity, he landed in Cornwall; at which time, fays Wood, " his diffreffes made him ftoop fo low, as to " be an abcdarian, and feveral were taught their horn-books " by him." At length, he fettled at Martock in Somerfetshire, and taught a grammar-school there with good fucces. He afterwards removed to London, and applied himfelf to the education of noblemen and gentlemen's children, which procured him a handfome livelihood. The number of his scholars amounted at one time to above three hundred. While he taught this fchool, he took the degree of master of arts in the univerfity of Cambridge; and April 24, 1616, was admitted, ad eundem, in that of Oxford. He removed again about 1636, on account of frequent fickneffes in the city, to Sevenoaks in Kent, in the neighbourhood of which place he purchased an estate; and purfued his occupation of teaching with such fuccefs and profit, that he afterwards purchased another estate at Horsham in Suffex. Upon the breaking out of the commotions in 1641, he was reckoned to be ill affected to the parliament, becaufe, when the protestation was urged that year, he faid, " It was better to have one king than five hundred." Afterwards, being fufpected to have favoured the rifing of the country for the king about Tunbridge, in 1643, he was imprifoned in Newgate, and thence carried on fhip-board. It was likewife debated in the houfe of commons, whether he fhould be fent to America; but this motion being rejected, he was removed to Ely-house in Holborn, where he remained till about a year before his death. He died June 12, 1647, aged 72; and was buried in the chancel of Sevenoaks, where, fome time after, this infcription was fixed over his grave: " P. M. Viri Ornatisfimi Thomæ Farnabii Armigeri, caus " olim Regiæ Reique Publicæ fed Literariæ vindicis acerrimi." He was twice married, and had children by both his wives. His first wife was a gentleman's daughter in Cornwall, by whom he had a fon, who was a captain in Charles the First's army, and inherited his eftate in Suffex; where he lived in good efteem, and died about 1673. His fecond, was the daughter of Howson bishop of Durham, by whom he had several children: one named Francis, who inherited his eftate in Kent, and from whom Wood received these memoirs of his life.

Farnaby's works are, 1. "Notæ ad Juvenalis et Persii Sa-"tiras, 1612." He dedicated this to prince Henry, James the First's eldest fon; and, when he presented it, was very kindly received by the prince, who in some measure even commanded him to write such commentaries on all the Latin poets. He was so vexed at the censures of some critics, that he he refolved, though against his own inclination, to discontinue that kind of labour. However, he afterwards altered his refolution, and wrote, 2. " Notæ ad Senecæ Tragœdias, 1613." Ben Jonson had written epigrams, by way of panegyric, upon his notes of Juvenal and Perfius: and his Seneca was ufhered in with commendatory verfes by Daniel Heinfius and others. 3. "Notæ ad Martialis Epigrammata, 1615." 4. "Notæ ad "Lucani Pharfalia, 1618." To which are prefixed, commendatory verfes in Latin by Mr. Selden. 5. " Index Rhetoricus " Scholis accommodatus, 1625." Afterwards were added to it, Formulæ Oratoriæ et Index Poeticus." In the preface to this work he informs us, that he had published about twenty years before, without his name, his scheme " of Tropes;" which meeting with fuccefs, and being claimed by a certain plagiary, put him upon composing his Index Rhetoricus. M. Baillet has passed a favourable judgment upon it; and father Vavaffor, though he reckons Farnaby's Latin to be fometimes exceptionable, allows him to be a diligent and learned writer. 6. "Florilegium Epigrammatum Græcorum, eorum-" que Latino versu a variis redditorum, 1629." 7. " Notæ " ad Virgilium, 1634." 8. " Systema Grammaticum, 1641." King Charles I. ordered him to write a Latin grammar, for the use of all the schools, when that which had been established by law, and against which a great many complaints had been made, was to be reformed : and this we suppose to be it [P]. 9. "Notæ in Ovidii Metamorphoses." 10. "Phraseologia "Anglo-Latina." 11. "Tabulæ Græcæ Linguæ." 12. "Syn-" taxis." 13. "Notæ in Terentium." He had finished his notes upon Terence, as far as to almost the end of the fourth comedy only, when he died : but Dr. Meric Cafaubon completed the two last, and published the whole at London in 1651.

Farnaby was a very useful man: and many writers have fpoken with great approbation of his labours. Bayle, in particular, fays, that " his notes upon most of the ancient Latin " poets have been of very great use to young beginners; being " fhort, learned, and defigned chiefly to clear up the text."

FARNESE (PETER LOUIS), first duke of Parma and Placentia, was the fon of pope Paul III. by a fecret marriage, contracted before he became a cardinal. The pope conferred these dutchies upon him subject to an acknowledgment of 8000 crowns to the holy see. But the duke irritated his subjects against him by his debaucheries, and his tyranny, and was affassinated at Placentia in 1547, after having enjoyed his dignity only two years. His fucceffors, however, continued dukes of Parma and Placentia.

FARNESE (ALEXANDER), known by the title of cardinal Farnese, distinguished by his talents and his virtues, was the eldest fon of the preceding, born in 1520, long before his father was advanced to the dukedom. He was created bifhop of Parma by Clement VII. when only fourteen years old, and was fucceflively advanced to other bifhoprics. When he was dean of the facred college, Charles V. faid, that " if all " its members refembled Farnefe, it would be the most au-" gust affembly in the world." His grandfather, Paul III. advanced him to the purple in 1534, and employed him in various embassies in France, in Germany, and in the Low Countries. But with all his talents, he could not reconcile the jarring interefts of Charles V. and Francis I. His latter days were paffed at Rome, where he lived in splendor, a true patron of literature, and protector of men of letters. He died in 1589.

FARNESE (ALEXANDER), third duke of Parma, nephew of the preceding; was as famous in arms as his uncle in letters. He diftinguished himself first at the battle of Lepanto, and afterwards at the siege of Antwerp, which was taken by his means. In 1578, he succeeded Don John of Austria, as governor of the Low Countries, but neither his courage nor his counfels, could reftore Holland to Spain. He was afterwards employed by Philip II. against Henry IV. in France, but was obliged to return into Flanders. Having entered France a fecond time, when Henry was besieging Rouen, he there received a wound of which he died at Arras in 1592.

FARNEWORTH (ELLIS), diftinguished by translating fome capital authors, was born (as is prefumed) at Bonteshall in Derbyshire, where his father was rector [Q]. He was bred first at Chefterfield school under Mr. William Burrow, a celebrated master, and asterwards removed to Eton. He was adinited of Jesus college, Cambridge; and matriculated Dec. 17, 1730. In 1762, he was prefented by Dr. James Yorke, dean of Lincoln, to the rectory of Carsington in Derbyshire; but did not enjoy it long, as he died March 25, 1763. His publications were, 1. "The life of Pope Sixtus V. translated "from the Italian of Gregorio Leti, with a preface, prolegomena, notes, and appendix, 1754," folio. 2. Davila's "hittory of France; 1757," 2 vols. 4to. 3. "A translation "of the works of Machiavel, illustrated with annotations, "differtations, and feveral new plans on the art of war, 1761," 2 vols. 4to: reprinted in 4 vols. 8vo, 1775.

FARQUHAR -

FARQUHAR (GEORGE), an ingenious comic writer, was the fon of a clergyman in Ireland, and born at Londonderry in 1678 [R]. There he received the rudiments of education, and difcovered a genius early devoted to the mufes. When he was very young, he gave specimens of his poetry; and discovered a force of thinking, and turn of expression, much beyond his years. His parents, having a numerous isfue, could bestow on him no other fortune than a liberal and polite education : therefore, when he was qualified for the univerfity, he was fent to Trinity-college, in Dublin [s]. This was in 1694. He made great progrefs in his ftudies, and acquired a confiderable reputation: but his gay and volatile disposition could not long relish the gravity and retirement of a college life; and therefore, foon quitting it, he betook himfelf to the diversions of the ftage, and got admitted into the company of the Dublin theatre. He had the advantage of a good perfon, and was well received as an actor, though his voice was fomewhat weak : for which reafon he was refolved to continue on the stage, till fomething better should offer. But his resolution was soon broken by an accident, whereby he was near turning a feigned tragedy into a real one: for being to play the part of Guyomar, who kills Vafquez, in Dryden's "Indian Emperor," and forgetting toexchange his fword for a foil, in the engagement he wounded his brother tragedian, who reprefented Vafquez, very dangeroufly; and though the wound did not prove mortal, yet he was fo flocked at it, that he determined never more to appear on the stage.

Soon after this, having now no inducement to remain at Dublin, he went to London. After his arrival there, which was in 1696, the celebrated actor Wilks ceafed not to folicit him, till he had prevailed upon him to write a play: for Wilks, knowing his humour and abilities, affured him, that he was confidered by all in a higher light than an actor; and as fitter to furnish compositions for the stage, than to echo those of other writers upon it. But he was yet more fubftantially invited by a genteel accommodation, which fuffered him to exercife his genius at leifure: for the earl of Orrery, who was a patron as well as a master of letters, conferred a lieutenant's commission upon him in his own regiment in Ireland, which Farquhar held feveral years, and behaved himfelf well as an officer, giving feveral proofs both of courage and con-In 1698, his first comedy, called " Love in a Bottle," duct. appeared on the stage; and for its sprightly dialogue and busy fcenes, was well received by the audience, though Wilks had no part in it. It may not be amifs to remember, that the year after, Mrs. Oldfield was, partly upon his judgment and recommendation, admitted on the theatre; fhe being then fixteen years of age[T].

In 1700, he brought his " Constant Couple, or, Trip to the "Jubilee," upon the stage, it being then the jubilee year at Rome, when perfons of all countries flocked thither, for pardons or amusements. In the character of Sir Harry Wildair, our author drew fo gay and airy a character, fo fuited to Wilks's talents, and fo animated by his gefture and vivacity of fpirit, that the player gained almost as much reputation as the poet. Towards the end of this year, we meet with him in Holland, probably upon his military duty: and he has given a very facetious defcription of those places and people, in two of his letters, dated from the Brill and from Leyden: in a third, dated from the Hague, he very humoroufly relates how merry he was there, at a treat made by the earl of Westmorland; while not only himfelf, but king William, and others of his fubjects, were detained there by a violent ftorm. There is also among his poems, an ingenious copy of verfes to his miftrefs upon the fame fubject; which mistrefs is supposed to have been Mrs. Oldfield, whom he first recommended to the stage, on perceiving her strong talent for it. In 1701, he was a spectator, if not a mourner, at Dryden's funeral; but the defcription he has given of it in one of his letters, is not much calculated to infpire forrow.

Encouraged by the prodigious fuccels of his last play, he made a continuation of it, in 1701, in his comedy called, "Sir " Harry Wildair, or, The Sequel of the Trip to the Jubilee:" in which Mrs. Oldfield obtained as much reputation, and was as greatly admired in her part, as Wilks was in his. In 1702, he published his " Miscellanies, or, collection of Poems, Letec ters, and Effays," which contain a variety of humourousand pleafant fallies of fancy. It is faid, that fome of the letters were published from copies returned to him, at his request, by Mrs. Oldfield. There is at the end of them an effay, which is called, " A difeourfe upon Comedy, in reference to. i the English flage." There is one among the letters, which he calls, " The Picture," containing a defcription and character of himfelf, which begins thus: " My outfide is neither <sup>66</sup> better nor worfe, than my Creator made it; and the piece. <sup>66</sup> being drawn by fo great an artift, 'twere prefumption to fay, " there were many strokes amifs. I have a body qualified to anfwer all the ends of its creation, and that's fufficient. As se to the mind, which in most men wears as many changes as-"their body, fo in me 'tis generally dreffed like my perfon, in "black. In fhort, my conftitution is very fplenetic and very amorous, both which I endeavour to hide, left the former fhould offend others, and the latter incommode myfelf: and my reafon is fo vigilant in reftraining thefe two failings, that I am taken for an eafy-natured man by my own fex, and an ill-natured clown by yours.—I have very little eftate, but but what lies under the circumference of my hat; and fhould I by misfortune come to lofe my head, I fhould not be worth a groat. But I ought to thank providence, that I can by three hours ftudy live one and twenty, with fatisfaction to myfelf; and contribute to the maintenance of more families, than fome, who have thoufands a year." This, though not all, is enough for a fpecimen.

In 1703, he brought out another lively comedy called " The " Inconstant, or, The way to win him:" but now the fashion had begun to turn towards Italian and French operas, and this comedy therefore was received more coldly than the former, though not at all inferior to them in merit. Farquhar was married this year, and, as was at first reported, to a great fortune; which indeed he expected, but was miferably difappointed. The lady had fallen in love with him, and fo violent was her paffion, that fhe refolved to have him at any rate: and as the knew he was too much diffipated to fall in love, or to think of matrimony, unlefs advantage was annexed to it, fhe first caused a report to be spread of her being a great fortune, and then had him given to understand that she was in love with him. He married her : and though he found himfelf deceived, his circumstances embarrassed, and his family increasing, he never once upbraided her for the imposition, but behaved to her with all the delicacy and tenderness of an indulgent hufband.

Very early in 1704, a farce called, " The Stage-coach," in the composition of which he was jointly concerned with another, made its first appearance, and was well received. His next comedy, named " The Twin-Rivals," was played in 1705: and in 1706, his comedy, called " The Recruiting Officer." He dedicated this " to all friends round the Wrekin," a noted hill near Shrewfbury, where he had been to recruit for his company; and where; from his observations on country life, the manner in which ferjeants inveigle clowns to enlift, and the behaviour of the officers towards the milk-maids and country girls, whom they feldom fail to debauch, he collected matter fufficient to form a comedy; in which he was fo fuccessful, that even now it brings full houses. His last comedy was " The Beaux's Stratagem," of which he did not live to enjoy the full fuccefs. He was unhappily oppressed with some G 2 debts :

debts: and this obliged him to make application to a courtier, who had formerly made him many profeffions of friendfhip. His pretended patron advifed him to convert his commiffion into the money he wanted, and pledged his honour that in a fhort time he would provide him another. This circumftance appearing favourable, and unable to bear the thoughts of want, he fold his commiffion: but when he renewed his application, and reprefented his diftreffed fituation, his noble patron had forgot his promife, or rather, perhaps, had never the leaft intention to fulfil it. This diftracting difappointment fo preyed upon his miud, that it carried him off this worldly theatre, while his laft play was in the height of its fuccefs at Drury-lane. His death happened in April, 1707, before he was thirty years of age.

After his death, the following letter to Mr. Wilks was found among his papers: "Dear Bob, I have not any thing to leave "thee to perpetuate my memory but two helplefs girls; look "upon them fometimes, and think of him that was to the 'laft moment of his life, thine, George Farquhar." It would not be doing juffice to Mr. Wilks to conceal that this recommendation, which refembled the celebrated teftament of Eudamidas, was duly regarded by him; and that when they became of an age to be put out into the world in bufinefs, he procured a benefit for each of them, to fupply the neceffary refources.

The fuccefs of Farquhar's comedies, is faid, in general, far to have exceeded his own expectations; and of his merits as a writer, various opinions have been entertained. It may be faid, however, that he was usually happy in the choice of his fubjects, and adorned them with a great variety of characters and incidents: that his style is pure, and unaffected; his wit natural, and flowing; and his plots generally well contrived. Licentiousness has been justly objected to his comedies; but that was the fault of his time, in which he was by no means the worst offender. He seems on the whole to have possessed a genius lively rather than elevated or extensive, fertile rather than folid. His characters are natural, yet not marked with peculiar strength, nor coloured with much art. But his productions are fo pleafing, that many years ago his works had gone through eight editions; and to this day his comedies keep their rank upon the stage, and are among the liveliest and most popular representations.

Of his family, his wife died in circumstances of the utmost indigence; one of his daughters was married to an inferior tradefinan, and died soon after. The other in 1764 was living, in indigent circumstances, without any knowledge of refinement in sentiments or expences; she seemed to take no pride pride in her father's fame, and was in every respect fitted to her humble fituation.

FASTOLFF (SIR JOHN), knight and knight-banneret, a valiant and celebrated general, and nobleman in France, during our conquests in that kingdom; knight of the garter; and in all respects a most extraordinary person; was descended of an ancient and famous family in Norfolk, and is fuppofed to have been born at Yarmouth in that county about 1377. There is no doubt, but a man of his accomplishments must have been. carefully educated, though we do not find any account of it. His father, John Fastolff, esq. dying before he was of age, he became ward to fome great nobleman: and it is faid, that he was trained up according to the cuftom of those times, in the Norfolk family. About 1401, Thomas of Lancaster, afterwards duke of Clarence, and fecond fon of Henry IV. was fent lord lieutenant into Ireland; and Fastolff probably attended him: for it is affirmed, that he was with him in 1405, and 1406. It is almost certain too, that Fastolff was with him in 1408, becaufe at the end of that year he was married in that kingdom to a rich young widow of quality. Soon after, receiving some confiderable posts of trust, under the English regency in France, he went to refide' in that kingdom. Here he paffed through feveral offices of the highest importance, diffinguished himself most illustriously in all the arts of peace, and was fucceffively crowned with titles and honours.

He did not make his final return to England till 1440; and, loaded with the laurels he had gathered in France, he now laboured to raife a new plantation of them in his own country. At home he shone as bright in virtue, as he had in valour abroad; and became no lefs amiable in his private, than he had been admirable in his public character. All we meet with in his recess is elegant, hospitable, generous, whether we confider the places of his abode, or those perfons and foundations on which he showered his bounty. He was a benefactor to both the univerfities, bequeathing a confiderable legacy to Cambridge, for building the fchools of philosophy and civil law; and at Oxford, he was fo bountiful to Magdalen-college, through the affection he had for his friend Wainfleet, the founder, that his name is there commemorated in an anniverfary speech. It would carry us too far, if we should enumerate the many inftances of his munificence: fuffice it to fay, that no retirement could obfcure his reputation, no infirmities weaken him, even to the last, in the exercise of his generous spirit. He died in 1459, upwards of fourscore years of age, as we learn from his famous contemporary, William Caxton, our first printer, who fays, in the preface to Cicero's "Tract of " Old Age," which he printed in English in 1481, that it was franflated  $G_3$ * tranflated, and thyftoryes openly declared, by the ordenaunce " and defyre of the noble auncyent knyght, Sir Johan Fastolff, " of the countee of Norfolk, banneret, lyvynge the age of " fourfcore yere; exercyfing the warrys in the royame of " Fraunce and other countrees, for the difference and unyverfal welfare of both royames of England and Fraunce; by " fourty years endurying the fayte of armes hauntyng, and in " admynystryng justice and polytique governaunce, under thre " kynges; that is, to wete, Henry the fourth, Henry the " fyfthe, Henry the fyxthe; and was governour of the duchye " of Angeou, and the countee of Mayne; captayne of many " townys, castellys, and fortreffys, in the faid royame of " Fraunce; having the charge and faufgarde of them dyverfe " yeres; ocupyenge and rewlynge thre hondred fpeeres, and " the bowes accustomed thenne; and yeldyng good acompt of " the forfaid townes, castellys, and fortress, to the feyd " kynges," &c.

Shakspeare has been extremely blamed by some writers, for perverting, they fay, with an unaccountable licence, the character of this great and good man, under his Sir John Falstaff; while others will not allow, that he had any view of drawing his Falstaff from any part of Sir John Fastolff's character. Thefe latter urge, as arguments in their behalf, the difference of names, a difference in their ages, and, above all, that Falstaff's character was written and acted originally under the name of Sir John Oldcastle. Without doubt, nothing can be more different than the characters. The poet's Falstaff is an old, humourous, vapouring, cowardly, lewd, lying, drunken debauchee; while Fastolff was a young and grave, discreet and valiant, chafte and fober, commander abroad, and afterwards eminent for every act of virtue and goodnefs at home. Hence it is, that offence has been taken at Shakspeare, although, according to the strictness of the letter, the name of Falstaff is not to be found in hiftory. "The comedian," fays one author,"" is " not excufable by fome alteration of his name, feeing the " vicinity of founds intrench on the memory of that worthy " knight; and few do heed the inconfiderable difference in " spelling their names [v]." Then in regard to the fubstitution of one perfon for the other, he fays elsewhere; " Stage poets have theinfelves been very bold with, and " others been very merry at the memory of Sir John Oldcaftle, " whom they have fancied a boon-companion, a jovial royfter, " and yet a coward to boot; contrary to the credit of all " chronicles, owning him a martial man of merit. The best " is, Sir John Falstaff hath relieved the memory of Sir John

" Oldcaftle,

F ,

"Oldcastle, and of late is substituted buffoon in his place [x]. " But it matters as little what petulant poets, as what malicious " papifts, have written against him." It must be remembered, that Sir John Oldcastle was an early and eminent instrument of, and fufferer for, the reformation; and that the offence, conceived against Shakspeare for his freedem with so facred a name, obliged him to change it for Falstaff. He tells us himself of the change, in the epilogue to the fecond part of Henry IV. " If," fays he, "you be not too much cloyed with fat meat, '4 our humble author will continue the ftory with Sir John in it, " and make you merry with fair Catherine of France ; where, " for any thing I know, Falstaff shall die of a sweat, unless « already he be killed with your hard opinions; for Oldcafile " died a martyr, and this is not the man."

But to proceed. In another place, the above cited author has these words of Sir John Fastolff: "To avouch him by " many arguments valiant, is to maintain that the fun is bright; " though fince, the stage hath been over bold with his me-" mory, making him a thrafonical puff and emblem of mock-" valour. True it is, that Sir John Oldcastle was the make-" fport in all plays for a coward. It is eafily known, out of " what purfe this black penny came : the papifts railing on " him for a heretic, therefore he must be also a coward; " though, indeed, a man of arms every inch of him, and as " valiant as any in his age. Now, as I am glad that Sir " John Oldcaftle is put out, fo I am forry that Sir John Faf-" tolff is put in to relieve his memory in this base fervice to be " the anvil for every dull wit to strike upon." Rowe, in his life of Shakspeare, goes along with the opinion of thinking him to blame, in this his fecond choice of perfonating our knight, " being a name of diffinguished merit in the wars of " France," &c. and a later author still has faid, that " as of old se the reputation of Socrates was in his life-time fullied by " Aristophanes, in personating him on the stage, so the me-" mory of our hero," meaning Fastolff, " had in this last age " met with the same hard sate by interludes in plays."

That Sir John Oldcastle's character was thus misrepresented on the stage, is certain, from the prologue to the old play of that name, in which he is the hero. Left the audience from the title fhould expect the old buffoonery under that name, they are thus addressed:

The doubtful title, gentlemen, prefix'd Upon the argument we have in hand, May breed suspense, and wrongfully disturb The peaceful quiet of your fettled thoughts.

To ftop which fcruple, let this brief fuffice: It is no pamper'd glutton we present, Nor aged counsellor to youthful sin, But one, whose virtue shone above the rest,

A valiant martyr, and a virtuous peer.

When Shakspeare introduced Sir John Falstaff to perform the popular office of Sir John Oldcastle, much better, doubtles, than it had ever been done before, he perhaps made him Sir John, because that title was already familiar to his auditors; but when he invented the name of Falstaff, he most probably had no thought of Fastolff, and the refemblance was accidental. Modern critics do not allow that Shakspeare's Falstaff ever appeared under the name of Oldcastle.

FAVART (MARIE, JUSTINE, BENOITE), madame, a celebrated French actrefs, whofe maiden name was du Roncerai. She was always a great favourite with the public, from her first appearance to her death, in comedies, comic operas, and other lively pieces. Her character, for fensibility, generofity, mild disposition, and inexhaustible livelines, stood very high. She was born at Avignon in 1727, and died at Paris in 1772.

FAUCHET (CLAUDE), a French antiquary of great fame, whole laborious refearches into the earliest and most obfcure parts of the history of his country, obtained him more celebrity than profit. He was, however, president of one of the courts at Paris, and is faid by fome to have obtained a pension from Henry IV. with the title of historiographer. He died in 1601, at the age of 72, overwhelmed with debts. His works were collected in 4to at Paris, in 1610. The prin-cipal of them are, 1. "His Gaulish and French antiquities," the first part of which treats chiefly of matters anterior to the arrival of the Franks, the second is extended to Hugh Capet. 2. "A treatife on the liberties of the Gallican church." " On the origin of knights, armorial bearings, and heralds." 4. " Origin of dignities and magistracies in France." All these contain much curious matter, not to be found elfewhere, but are written in a harsh, incorrect, and tedious style. It is faid, that the perufal of his French antiquities gave Louis XIII. an invincible distaste to reading.

FAUCHEUR (MICHEL LE), a French protestant preacher of the highest estimation in his time. He preached originally at Montpellier, then at Charenton, and afterwards at Paris; where his eloquence was not less admired than in the provinces. After hearing one of his fermons on duelling, the marechal de la Force said, "If a challenge was sent to me I "would refuse it." His integrity was as great as his genius; and his death, at Paris, in 1667, was equally regretted by protestants and catholics. There are extant by him, I. "A treaus tile "tife on oratorical action," published originally under the name of Conrart, but much esteemed. 2. "Sermons," in 8vo. 3. "Christian prayers and meditations." 4. A controversial treatife on the eucharist, against cardinal Perron, published at Geneva in folio, by order of the national synod, and at the expence of the protestant churches.

FAULKNER (GEORGE), a worthy printer of no mean celebrity, is rather recorded in this work for the goodnefs of his heart, than from his excellence as an author  $\lceil y \rceil$ . It is, however, no small degree of praise to fay of him, that he was the first man who carried his profession to a high degree of credit in Ireland. He was the confidential printer of dean Swift; and enjoyed the friendship and patronage of the earl of Chesterfield, whose ironical letters to Faulkner, comparing him to Atticus, are perhaps the finest parts of his writings. He settled at Dublin as a printer and bookfeller, soon after the year 1726 (in which year we find him in London under the tuition of the celebrated Bowyer), and raifed there a very comfortable fortune by his well-known "Journal," and other laudable undertakings. In 1735, he was ordered into cuftody by the house of commons in Ireland, for publishing " a propofal for the better regulation and improvement of "quadrille;" an ingenious treatife by bifhop Hort; which produced from Swift " The legion club." Having had the misfortune to break his leg, he was fatirically introduced by Foote, who fpared nobody, in the character of "Peter Para-" graph," in " The Orators, 1762." He commenced a fuit against the mimic; and had the honour of lord Townshend's interference to arbitrate the difference. He died an alderman of Dublin, Aug. 28, 1775. His style and manner were finely ridiculed in "An epistle to Gorges Edmund Howard, esq. with " notes, explanatory, critical, and hiftorical, by George Faulk-" ner, efq. and alderman," reprinted in Dilly's " Repofitory," vol. iv. p. 175. But a fairer specimen of his real talents at epistle-writing may be feen in the "Anecdotes of Mr. Bow-" yer," or in the fecond volume of the " Supplement to " Swift;" whence it appears that, if vanity was a prominent feature in his character, his gratitude was no lefs conspicuous.

FAVOLIUS (Hugo), a Dutch phyfician and poet. His "Hodoeporicon Byzantinum," in three books, was published at Louvain in 1563. He died in 1585.

FAVORINUS, an ancient philosopher and orator, was born at Arles in Gaul, flourisched under the emperor Adrian,

and

and taught at both Athens and Rome with high reputation. Adrian had no kindnels for him; for, it feems fuch was the nature and temper of this emperor, that, not content with being the first in dignity and power, he would needs be the first in every thing elfe. This pedantic affectation led him, as Spartian relates, to deride, to contemn, to trample upon the professions of all arts and fciences, whom he took a pleasure in contradicting upon all occasions, right or wrong. Thus one day he reproved Favorinus, with an air of great superiority, for using a certain word; which, however, was a good word, and frequently used by the best authors. Favorinus submitted patiently to the emperor, without making any reply, though he knew himfelf to be perfectly right: which when his friends objected to, "Shall " not I easily suffer him," fays he, " to be the most learned " of all men, who has thirty legions at his command?"

This philofopher is faid to have wondered at three things; first, that being a Gaul he should speak Greek fo well; fecondly, that being an eunuch he should be accused of adultery; and thirdly, that being envied and hated by the emperor he should be permitted to live. Many works are attributed to him; among the rest a Greek work of " miscellaneous history," often quoted by Diogenes Laertius.

FAVORINUS (VARINUS), of Camerino in Italy, often written Phavorinus, but falfely, as he derived that name which he affumed, from a caftle near Camerino, called Favera. His real name was Guarini, which, according to the fashion of his time, he modified into Varinus, and added Favorinus. This, in Greek, became DaGapwos, whence arole the common orthography of the name. Favorinus was a favourite difciple of the celebrated Politian, who has addreffed both epigrams and epiftles to him; he then became a Benedictine monk, and was preceptor to John of Medicis (afterwards pope Leo X.) in 1512 he became keeper of the Medicean library at Florence, and in 1514, bishop of Nocera. He was present at the Lateran council in 1516, and died in 1537. It was in 1523 that he published his Greek lexicon at Rome, one of the earlieft modern lexicons of that language, and compiled from Suidas, the Etymologicum Magnum, Phrynicus, Hefychius, Harpocration, and other ancient lexicons, published and unpublisted; and from the notes of Eustathius, and the scholiasts. It is written entirely in Greek, and is now fuperfeded by other works of more popular use, though it may still be serviceable, in supplying various readings of Suidas and others, of which Favorinus probably confulted very ancient manufcripts. The best edition is that of Bartoli, fol. Venice, 1712. He wrote also Cornu Copiæ et Horti Adonidis, and a translation OI of the apophthegmata, collected by Stobzus, which he dedicated to Leo X.

FAUR (GUI DE), lord of PIBRAC, by which name he is much better known, was born at Toulouse, in 1528, and distinguished himself at the bar in that city. He perfected his knowledge of jurifprudence in Italy, and then returned to be advanced to honours in his own country. In 1560 he was deputed by his native city to the states-general held at Orleans, and there prefented to the king its petition of grievances which he had himself drawn up. By Charles IX. he was sent as one of his ambassadors to the council of Trent, where he eloquently fupported the interests of the crown, and the liberties of the Gallican church. In 1565 the chancellor de l'Hopital, appointed him advocate general in the parliament of Paris, where he revived the influence of reafon and eloquence. In 1570, he was made a counfellor of state, and two years afterwards, probably constrained by his superiors, wrote his defence of the maffacre of St. Bartholomew; a measure too repugnant to the mildnefs of Pibrac's character to be approved by him. For this, after the acceffion of Henry III. he made the best amends in his power, by proposing and bringing to a conclufion, a treaty of peace between the court and the protestants. While that prince was duke of Anjou, and was elected king of Poland, he attended him as minister in that country; but when the fucceffion to the crown of France, on the death of his brother, tempted Henry to quit that kingdom clandestinely, Pibrac was in danger of falling a facrifice to the refentment of the people. He afterwards tried in vain to preferve that crown to his master. His fervices were rewarded by being created one of the chief prefidents of the courts of law. He died in 1584, at the age of 56. The ftory of his falling in love with Margaret wife of Henry IV. is fuppofed to be chiefly owing to the vanity of that lady, who wished to have the credit of fuch a conquest. Pibrac published, besides his letter on the maffacre, which was in Latin, pleadings and fpeeches, and a difcourfe on the foul and the fciences. But the work by which he is best known, is his Quatrains, or moral stanzas of four lines, which were extravagantly admired, and translated into almost all languages, even Greek, Turkish, Arabic, and Perfian. They were rendered into English by Sylvester, the translator of du Bartas, in a manner not likely to give an advantageous notion of the original, which, though now antiquated, still preferves graces that recommend it to readers of taste. Pibrac was a claffical scholar; and to the taste he drew from that fource, his Quatrains owe much of their excellence.

FAVRE (ANTOINE), in Latin Faber. A profound lawyer, and an author; in a few inftances, a poet, for some quatrains by by him remain among those of Pibrac, and there is a tragedy of his extant, entitled, "The Gordians, or ambition." He was born in 1557, was promoted as a lawyer in his native towne of Bresse, afterwards became governor of Savoy, and was employed in confidential negotiations between that dukedom and France. He might have been further promoted in his own country, but refused. He died in 1624. His works, chiefly on jurisfprudence, and civil law, form ten vols. in folio.

FAVRE (CLAUDE). See VAUGELAS.

FAUST. See Fust.

FAUSTA (FLAVIA MAXIMIANA), the fecond wife of Constantine the Great; a strange and striking instance of a most extraordinary change of manners from great virtue to the excels of vice. She was the daughter of Maximian Hercules, and fifter to Maxentius. Her father having received the title of Augustus in 306, took her into Gaul, where he gave her in marriage to the emperor Conftantine. She was for a long time a most exemplary wife, attached to her husband, fludious of educating her children, and a strenuous advocate with the emperor for all acts of indulgence and liberality to his people. She even facrificed the life of her father to her attachment for Constantine, by discovering to him a plot laid for his destruction. After a time she changed unaccountably; her passions became ungovernable, she prostituted herself to the vilest of the people; endeavoured to folicit Crifpus, a fon of Constantine by a former wife, to incestuous commerce, and failing in that attempt, accufed him of trying to ravish her, and caufed him to be put to death. A fhort time after this horrible crime, her exceffes became known to the emperor, who revenged his own honour, and the murder of his fon, by caufing her to be fuffocated in the warm bath in the year 327. Her family was no lefs remarkable for its crimes than its elevation, and it is melancholy to think, that fhe, who began fo well, fhould in the end prove herfelf fo worthy of them. Some doubts, however, have been entertained on the truth of thefe latter circumstances, and even of her death.

FAUSTINA (ANNIA GALERIA), called the elder Faustina; was the daughter of Annius Verus, and the wife of the emperor T. Antoninus Pius. Her beauty and wit were of the highest order, but her conduct was diffolute in the extreme. The emperor admired her, and built temples and struck coins to her honour. Even when he knew of her debaucheries, he lamented without refenting them. She died in the year 141, at the age of about 37.

FAUSTINA (ANNIA), daughter of the former, and wife of the emperor Marcus Aurelius, imitated her mother, or rather ther went beyond her, in the diffolutenels of her manners. Without being fo regularly handfome, fhe was attractive, very lively, and full of wit; daughter of a prince, who, though he deeply regretted crimes, was very unwilling to punifh them, and wife to a philofopher who held it a duty to pardon all offences, fhe met with no reftraints to her inclinations : yet even the had her temples and her priefts. Marcus, in his meditations, thanks the gods that his wife was fo tractable, fo affectionate, and of fo fimple manners. She attended the emperor into Afia, when he went to fupprefs the revolt of Caffius, and there died near mount Taurus, in the year 175. There was a third Fauftina, grand-daughter of this, who was the third wife of Heliogabalus, but was foon neglected by him. She was very unlike her female anceftors, except in beauty.

FAUSTUS, an English monk of the fifth century; created abbot of a monastery in the Lerin islands about 433, and afterwards bishop of Riez in Provence, about 466. The time of his death is uncertain. He wrote a homily on the life of his predecessor in the set, Maximus; which is extant among those attributed to Eusebius Emisenus.

FAWKES (FRANCIS), an ingenious poet, and native of Yorkshire, was born about 1721, and had his school-education at Leeds [z]. He was thence transplanted to Jefus-college, Cambridge, where he took both the degrees in arts. Entering early into orders, he settled first at Bromham in Yorkshire, near the elegant feat of that name; which he celebrated in verse, 1745, in a quarto pamphlet, anonymous. His first poetical publications were "Gawin Douglas's defcriptions of "May and Winter, modernized." Removing afterwards to Croydon in Surrey, he recommended himfelf to archbishop Herring, then refident there for his health; to whom, befides other pieces, he addressed an ode upon his recovery in 1754. In 1755, the archbishop collated him to the vicarage of Orpington with St. Mary Cray, in Kent; and Mr. Fawkes, in 1757, lamented his patron's death in a pathetic elegy. He published a volume of poems by subscription, 1761, in 8vo; and feveral poems afterward. But his great strength is supposed to have lain in translation; as appears from his Anacreon, Sappho, Bion, Moschus, and Musaus, published 1760, in 12mo. He published also the " Idylliums of Theocritus," in an English version, 1767, in 8vo. His name is put to a " family bible, with notes, 1761," 4to; but this was done merely to repair his finances (for he was no ceconomist) with the bookfellers. April 1774, he exchanged his vicarage for the rectory of Hayes; and died August 26, 1777. His "Argo-" nautics of Apollonius Rhodius," were published in 1780. FAYDIT (ANSELME), one of the most celebrated of the Provençal poets or troubadours. He had a fine figure, abundance of wit, and a pleafing addrefs, and was much encouraged by the princes of his time. By reprefenting his comedice he foon acquired confiderable riches, which his vanity and his love of debauchery and expence did not fuffer him to keep. From a miferable state of poverty he was relieved by the liberality of Richard Cœur de Lion, who had a strong taste for the Provençal poetry. After the death of this protector, he returned to Aix, where he married a young woman of diftinguished wit and beauty; but she did not long furvive her marriage with this profligate husband. He died soon after, in the year 1220, at what age is not exactly known, but certainly early in life. Among the many pieces which he wrote, the following are mentioned : 1. A poem on the death of his benefactor, Richard I. 2. " The palace of Love," imitated afterwards by Petrarch. 3. Several comedies, one of which, entitled "Heregia dels Prestes," the herefy of the priest, a fatirical production against the corruptions of the church, was publicly acted at the caftle of Boniface, marquis of Montlerrat.

FAYDIT (PETER), a priest and an author of no great. fame, except for the irregularity of his doctrines, and the greatness of the characters which he attacked. He was born at Riom in Auvergne, where, after figuring as abovementioned at Paris, he died in 1709, probably about the age of 60. In one of his works, entitled "Telemacomanie," he gave a tasteless and unjust critique against the famous production of Fenelon; in another he fatirized the great Bossue. His other writings are fingular in style, not very excellent in matter, and feem not worthy of being enumerated.

FAYETTE (LOUISE DE LA), a lady celebrated for her friendship with Louis XIII. and for her felf-denial in that dangerous situation. She was of a noble family, and was maid of honour to the queen, Anne of Austria. The king, enflaved by cardinal Richelieu, sought consolation in the company of this lady, who took a fincere interest in his welfare, and was instrumental in reconciling him to his queen, and confequently in causing the birth of Louis XIV. When the found her regard for the king growing more tender than prudence allowed, the retired into a convent and took the veil. The king still visited her, till the disconst intrigues of Richelieu interrupted their friendship. The queen was still pressing her return to court, but the rejected all temptations, and continued in her convent, with the universal effection of France, to which the displayed the the extraordinary example of a young woman facrificing the most brilliant hopes and fituations, to the defire of fulfilling her duty, and preferving the happiness of a prince to whom the was fincerely attached.

FAYETTE (MARIE MADELEINE, Pioche de la Vergne, countefs of ), a French lady, daughter of Aymar de la Vergne, marechal-de-camp, and governor of Havre-de-Grace, but more diftinguished by her wit and literary productions than by her family. She was married to the count de Fayette in 1655, and died in 1693. She cultivated letters and the fine arts; and her hotel was the rendezvous of all who were most distinguished for them. The duke de la Rochefoucault, Huetius, Menage, La Fontaine, Segrais, were those the faw most frequently. The last, when obliged to quit the house of Mad. de Montpensier, found an honourable retreat with her. The author of "The " Memoirs of madam de Maintenon," hath not spoken favourably of this lady, nor represented her manners to be fuch as from her connections we should suppose. But madam de Sevigné, who had better opportunities of knowing her, and is more to be relied on than the author of the memoirs, hath painted her very differently. This lady fays, in a letter to her daughter, " Mad. la Fayette is a very amiable and a very esti-" mable woman; and whom you will love when you fhall " have time to be with her, and to enjoy the benefit of her " fense and wit; the better you know her, the more you will " like her."

The principal works of this lady are, 1. "Zaide," a romance, often printed, and read by perfons who do not ufually read romances. 2. " La princesse de Cleves," a romance also, which Fontenelle professed to have read four times. Mad. la Fayette was fo regardless of fame, that she published these works under the name of Segrais, who, however, is fuppofed to have been no farther concerned, than in aiding a little in the defign of them. 3. " La princesse de Montpensier," another romance. Voltaire fays, that the romances of Fayette were the first which exhibited the manners of people of fashion in a graceful, easy, natural way; all before having been pompous bombast, and fwelling every thing beyond nature and life. 4. " Memoires " de la cour de France pour les années 1688 & 1689. This work is written with addrefs and fpirit, and abounds with friking pictures and curious anecdotes. 5. "Hiftoire d'Hen-" riette d'Angleterre." 6. " Divers portraits de quelques perfonnes de la cour." All thefe works are still esteemed; and the drew up also other memoirs of the history of her times, which were lent to every body, and loft, by her fon the abbé de la Fayette. She understood Latin, which she learned in a very short time.

FEATLY

FEATLY (DANIEL), alias Fairclough, an English divine. the fon of John Featly, fometime cook to the prefident of Magdalen-college, Oxford, was born at Charlton in that county, March, 1582 [A]. He was educated in the grammar-school adjoining to Magdalen-college, admitted fcholar of Corpus Christi in 1594, and probationer-fellow in 1602, being then bachelor of arts. He became a fevere student in divinity : he read fathers, councils, and fchoolmen, and was deeply learned in every thing relating to them. His admirable way of preaching, his skill in disputation, and his other rare accomplishments, diftinguished him so much, that fir Thomas Edmunds, being difpatched by king James to be ambaffador in France, made choice of Featly for his chaplain. He lived three years there, and did great honour to the English nation, and the protestant religion, by disputing successfully against the most learned papifts; infomuch, that his antagonists could not forbear giving him the titles of acutiffimus and acerrimus.

Upon his return to England, he repaired to his college, took a bachelor of divinity's degree in 1613, and foon after became rector of Northill in Cornwall. But before he was fettled there, he was called to be chaplain to Abbot archbp. of Canterbury; and by him was preferred foon after to the rectory of Lambeth in Surrey. In 1617, he proceeded in divinity, and puzzled Prideaux the king's professor fo much with his arguments, that a quarrel commenced, which the archbishop himfelf was forced to compose. The archbishop of Spalato, Antony de Dominis, being also present at the disputation, was so greatly pleafed with our author's manner, that he immediately gave him a brother's place in the Savoy-hofpital, of which he was then mafter. About that time archbp. Abbot gave him the rectory of All-hallows, Bread-street, in London; which foon after he changed for the rectory of Acton, in Middlefex; and at length became the third and last provost of Chelfeacollege.

In 1625, being then married, he retired from the fervice of his grace of Canterbury, to Kennington near Lambeth, where his wife had a houfe. In 1626, he published his "Ancilla "Pietatis," or, "The handmaid to private devotion:" of which eight editions were printed off before 1676. With this was afterwards printed, "The practice of extraordinary de-"votion:" and Wood relates, that in one of these two he makes the story of St. George, the tutelar faint of England, a mere figment, for which he was forced to cry peccavi, and to fall upon his knees before Laud archbishop of Canterbury. From 1626, to the beginning of the civil war, he was chiefly employed in writing books, and in difputing against persons of a different way of thinking in matters of religion.

In 1642, after the king had encountered the parliament-army at Brentford, some of the foldiers took up their quarters at Acton. There they made fearch for Featly, whom they took to be a papift, at least to have, as they faid, a pope in his belly: but not finding him, they did him vast damage in destroying his house, stables, granaries, barns, &c. They sought him afterwards at Lambeth, in order to put him to death; but he happily escaped upon timely notice. In 1643, he was appointed a member of the affembly of divines, and was afterwards a witnefs against archbp. Laud. He there discovered more Calvinism than he was ever fuppofed to have; but Heylin has faid, that he was always a Calvinist in his heart, though he never shewed it openly till then. He was, however, a great oppofer of the covenant, and wrote a letter to archbp. Usher, then at Oxford, containing his reasons: which letter being intercepted, and carried first to the close committee, and then to the house of commons, he was judged to be a spy and betrayer of the parliament's cause. He was feized and committed prifoner to lord Petre's houfe in Aldersgate-street, 1643, his rectories being taken from him; and in this prison he continued till March, 1644. Being dropfical, he was reduced to a low and weak ftate; upon which he was removed for his health's fake to Chelfea-college, of which he was then provost; where spending a short time in devout exercises, he died in April, 1645. "He was esteemed," fays Wood, "by " the generality to be one of the most resolute and victorious " champions of the reformed protestant religion in his time, a " most finart scourge of the church of Rome, a compendium " of the learned tongue, and of all the liberal arts and sciences; " and though of fmall stature, yet he had a great foul, and " learning of all kinds compacted in him."

He was the author of near forty different works, chiefly of the polemic kind, and therefore of little use now, fince the occations of them are forgotten. He alfo published, in 1629, king James's "Cygnea Cantio;" in which may be seen, a scholastic duel between that king and the author.

FECHT or FECHTIUS (JOHN), of Brifgaw, a celebrated Lutheran divine and hiftorian, author of feveral learned works in Latin and in German. He was fettled first at Dourlach, and and afterwards at Rostock. Fechtius was born in 1636, and died in 1716. Among his works are a History of Cain and Abel, with notes critical, philological, historical, and theological, in 8vo, published at Rostock; a Treatife on the Religion of the modern Greeks; another against the Superstitions of the Mass, &c.

FECKENHAM (JOHN DE), fo called, becaufe he was born of poor parents in a cottage, near the foreft of Feckenham in VOL, VI. H Worcef-

Worcestershire, his right name being Howman, was the last abbot of Westminster B. Discovering in his youth very good parts, and a strong propensity to learning, the priest of the parish took him under his care, instructed him some years, and then got him admitted into Evesham monastery. At eighteen, he was fent by his abbot to Gloucester-college, in Oxford; from whence, when he had fufficiently improved himfelf in academical learning, he was recalled to his abbey; which being diffolved in 1535, he had an yearly penfion of an hundred florins allowed him for his life. Upon this he returned to Gloucestercollege, where he purfued his studies fome years; and in 1539, took the degree of bachelor of divinity, being then chaplain to Bell bishop of Worcester. That prelate refigning his fee in 1543, he became chaplain to Bonner bishop of London; but Bonner being deprived of his bishopric, in 1549, by the reformers, Feckenham was committed to the tower of London, becaufe, as fome fay, he refused to administer the facraments after the protestant manner. Soon after, he was taken from thence, to difpute on the chief points controverted between the protestants and papists; and he disputed feveral times in public before, and with, fome great perfonages.

He was afterwards remanded to the tower, where he continued till queen Mary's accession to the crown in 1553; but was then releafed, and made chaplain to the queen. He became also again chaplain to Bonner, prebendary of St. Paul's; then dean of St. Paul's; then rector of Finchley in Middlefex, which he held only a few months; and then rector of Greenford in the fame county. In 1554, he was one of the disputants at Oxford against Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, before they fuffered martyrdom; but he faid very little against them. During Mary's reign, he was conftantly employed in doing good offices to the afflicted protestants from the highest to the lowest. Francis Ruffel earl of Bedford, Ambrofe and Robert Dudley, afterwards earls of Warwick and Leicester, were benefitted by his kindnefs: as was also fir John Cheke. Nay, he interceded with queen Mary for the lady Elizabeth's enlargement out of prison, and that fo earnefly, that the queen was actually difpleafed with him for fome time. May, 1556, he was complimented by the univerfity of Oxford with the degree of doctor in divinity; being then in univerfal effeem for his learning, piety, charity, moderation, humility, and other virtues. The September following, he was made abbot of Westminster, which was then reftored by queen Mary; and fourteen benedictine monks placed there under his government, with epifcopal power.

[n] Athen. Oxon. vol. i.

Upon the death of Mary, in 1558, her fuccessor Elizabeth, not unmindful of her obligations to Feckenham, fent for him before her coronation, to confult and reward him; and, as it is faid, offered him the archbithopric of Canterbury, provided he would conform to the laws; but he refused. He appeared in her first parliament, taking the lowest place on the bishop's form; and was the last mitred abbot that fat in the house of peers. During his attendance there, he spoke and protested against every thing tending towards the reformation; and the strong opposition, which he could not be restrained from making, occasioned his commitment to the tower in 1560. He continued there till 1563, when he was taken from thence, and committed to the cuftody of Horne bishop of Winchester: but thefe two, having written against each other about the oath of fupremacy, could not agree to live together : fo that Feckenham was remanded to the tower in 1564. Afterwards he was removed to the marshalsea, and then to a private house in Holborn. In 1571, he attended Dr. John Storie before his execution. In 1578, we find him in free cuftody, with Cox bifhop of Ely, whom the queen had put upon using his endeavours with Feckenham, that he would acknowledge her fupremacy, and come over to the church: and he was at length induced to do the former, though he could never be brought to a thorough conformity. Soon after, the reftless spirit of some Roman catholics, and their frequent attempts upon the queen's life, obliged her to imprifon the most confiderable among them : upon which Feckenham was fent to Wisbich-castle in the isle of Ely, where he continued a prifoner to the time of his death, which happened in 1585. As to his character, Camden calls him, a " learned and good man, that lived long, did a great deal of " good to the poor, and always folicited the minds of his adver-" faries to benevolence [c]." Fuller styles him, " a man cruel " to none; courteous and charitable to all who needed his help " or liberality [D]." Burnet fays, " he was a charitable and " generous man, who lived in great efteem in England [E]." And Dart concludes his account of him in these words: "though " I cannot go fo far as Reyner, to call him a martyr; yet I " cannot gather, but that he was a good, mild, modest, charit-" able man, and a devout christian [F]."

Wood has given us the following catalogue of his works: 1. "A conference dialogue-wife held between the lady Jane "Dudley, and Mr. John Feckenham, four days before her "death, touching her faith and belief of the facrament, and "her religion, 1554." April, 1554, he was fent by the queen to this lady to commune with her, and to reduce her from the doctrine of Christ to queen Mary's religion, as Fox expresses it. The substance of this conference may be seen also in Fox's "Acts and monuments of martyrs [G]." 2. "Speech " in the house of lords, 1553." 3. "Two homilies on the first, second, and third articles of the creed." 4. " Oratio " funebris in exequiis duciffæ Parmæ," &c. that is, " A fu-" neral Oration on the Death of the duchefs of Parma, " daughter of Charles V. and governefs of the Netherlands." 5. "Sermon at the exequy of Joan queen of Spain, 1555." 6. "The declaration of fuch foruples and staies of confeience, " touching the oath of fupremacy, delivered by writing to Dr. " Horne bishop of Winchester, 1566." 7. " Objections or " affertions made against Mr. John Gough's fermon, preached " in the tower of London, Jan. 15, 1570." 8. " Caveat emp-" tor:" which feems to have been a caution against buying abbey lands. He had also written, "Commentaries on the " Pfalms," and a " Treatife on the Eucharift," which were loft among other things [H]. Thus far Wood: but another author mentions, 9. " A fermon on the funeral of queen Mary, on " Ecclesiastes, iv. 2."

FEITHIUS (EVERARD), a learned German, was born at Elburg in Guelderland. He studied philosophy for some time, and afterwards applied himself entirely to polite literature, in which he made a confiderable progress. He was a master of the Greek tongue, and even of the Hebrew; of which the professors of the protestant university of Bern gave him an ample testimonial. Being returned to his own country, from which he had been long absent, he was under great consternation, on account of the expedition of the Spaniards commanded by Spinola. This determined him to leave his native country; and he went to fettle in France, where he taught the Greek language, and was honoured with the friendship of Cafaubon, of M. Du Puy, and of the prefident Thuanus. When he was walking one day at Rochelle attended by a fervant, he was defired to enter into the houfe of a citizen: and after that day, it could never be difcovered what became of him, notwithstanding all the strictest enquiries of the magistrates. He was but young at the time of this most mysterious disappearing, "which," fays Bayle, " is to be lamented: for if he had lived to grow " old, he would have wonderfully explained most of the fub-" jects relating to polite letters." This judgement is grounded upon his manufcript works, one of which was published at Leyden in 1677, by Henry Bruman, principal of the college at

'Swo', and the author's grand-nephew, entitled, " Antiquitatum " Homericarum libri quatuor," 12mo. It is very learned, and abounds with curious and instructive observations. There are other works of his in being, as, " De Atheniensium repub-" lica, De antiquitatibus Atticis," &c. which the editor promifed to collect and publish; but we do not know that it was done.

FELIBIEN (ANDREW,) counfellor and historiographer to the king of France, was born at Chartres, in 1619. He finished his first studies there at the age of fourteen, and then was fent to Paris to improve himfelf in the fciences, and in the management of affairs: but his inclination foon made him devote himfelf entirely to the Muses, and he gained a great reputation by his knowledge in the fine arts. The marquis de Fontenay-Mareuil, being chofen for the fecond time ambaffador extraordinary to the court of Rome in 1647, Felibien was made fecretary to the embafiy, and perfectly answered the hopes which that minister had conceived of him. During his stay at Rome, his fondnefs for the liberal arts made him fpend all the time he could spare in visiting those who excelled in them; and especially the celebrated Pouffin, by whofe conversations he learned to understand all that is most beautiful in statues and pictures: and it was according to the exalted notions he then formed to himfelf of the excellence and perfection of painting, that he wrote those valuable works, which established his reputation.

On his return from Italy, he went to Chartres; and, as he defigned to fettle himfelf, he married a lady of confiderable family. His friends introduced him afterwards to Fouquet, who would have done fomething for him, had he not foon after loft the king's favour: but Colbert, who loved the arts and sciences, did not fuffer him to be useles. After he had defired him to make some draughts for his majesty, in order to engage him to complete the works he had begun, he procured him a commiffion of historiographer of the king's buildings, superintendant of them, and of the arts and manufactures in France: this commission was delivered to him March 10, 1666. The royal academy of architecture having been established in 1671, he was made fecretary to it. The king made him afterwards keeper of his cabinet of antiques, in 1673, and gave him an apartment in the palace of Brion. He was also one of the first members of the academy of inferiptions and medals. He became afterwards deputy comptroller general of the bridges and dykes of the kingdom. He died June 11, 1695, aged 76; and left five children.

His chief works are, 1. " Entretiens fur les Vies et fur les " Ouvrages des plus excellens Peintres anciens et modernes:" that is, " Dialogues concerning the Lives and Works of the most " excellent

"excellent Painters, ancient and modern." 2. " Les Principes 46 de l'Architecture, de la Sculpture, et de la Peinture, avec un " Dictionaire des Termes propres de ces Artes:" that is, "The " Principles of Architecture, Sculpture, and Painting, with a " dictionary of proper Words relating to those Arts." 3. " De " l'origine de la Peinture, avec plusieurs pieces detachées:" that is, " Of the Origin of Painting, with feveral other pieces." 4. "Several Descriptions, as that of Versailles, of several en-" tertainments given by the king, and of feveral pictures," collected into one vol. in 12mo. 5. "The Conferences of the " Royal Academy of Painting," in one vol. 4to. 6. " The De-" fcription of the Abbey de la Trappe," in 12mo. He alfo left some translations: viz. An Account of what passed in Spain, " when the count duke of Olivares fell under the king's Dif-" pleasure," translated out of Italian; " The Castle of the "Soul," written by St. Terefa, translated from the Spanish; " The life of pope Pius V." translated from the Italian.

In all that he has written, there appears a found judgment, an exquifite tafte, a great clearnefs and politenefs: but his "Dia-"logues upon the Lives of the Painters," is the work which has done him the greateft honour. It is elegant and profound; and the most excellent tafte is every where fhewn throughout the whole. But he fays too little in too many words, and is abfolutely without method. This is Voltaire's criticism upon him; who informs us alfo, that he was the first who gave Lewis XIV. the furname of GREAT [1], in the inforiptions in the hotel-de-ville.

It must be remembered alfo, that he had great virtues, was not ambitious, or greedy of wealth, but moderate in his defires and contented. He was a man of probity, of honour, of piety. Though he was naturally grave and ferious, and of a hasty, and fomewhat fevere temper, yet his conversation was always agreeable, and even merry, when there was occasion for it. He was a steady advocate for truth; and he used to encourage himself in it by this motto, which he caused to be engraved on his feal, "Bene facere, et vera dicere," that is, "To do good and speak the truth." He lived in a constant practice of these two duties, which form the character of an honest man and a christian.

FELIBIEN (JOHN FRANCIS), fon of the preceding, fucceeded his father in all his places, and feemed to inherit his tafte in the fine arts. He died in 1733. Some works written by him must not be confounded with those of his father: namely, 1. "An historical Collection of the Lives and Works of the most "celebrated Architects," 4to, Paris, 1687, frequently subjoined to his father's account of the painters. 2. "Description of [1] Siecle de Louis XIV.

· Verfailles,

<sup>44</sup> Verfailles, ancient and modern," 12mo. 3. "Defcription of the Church of the Invalids," fol. 1706, reprinted in 1756. There were alfo two more Felibiens, who were authors; James, brother of Andrew, a canon and archdeacon of Chartres, who died in 1716; and Michael, another of his fons, a benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, who was born in 1666, and died in 1719. The latter wrote a hiftory of the abbey of St. Denys, in folio, publifhed in 1706; and began the hiftory of Paris, which was afterwards continued and publifhed by Lobineau.

FELIX (MINUCIUS), a father of the primitive church, who flourished in the third century, about the year 220. He was an African by birth, which we collect from his ftyle, as well as from the use which he made of Tertullian's writings; and by profeffion a lawyer, as we learn not only from Lactantius and Jerome, who have expressly afferted it, but also from himfelf. 46 Ad vindemiam feriæ judiciariam curam relaxaverant [K];" the vacation of the vintage-time had releafed him, he fays, from the bufinefs of the bar: where we perceive, that he was not only a lawyer, but that he practifed at the bar after he became a convert to Christianity. He has written a very elegant dialogue in defence of the Christian religion, intitled, "Octavius," from the name of his Christian speaker, who disputes with Cæcilius, while himfelf fustains the part of a moderator. Cæcilius opens the conference, and urges all the topics he could recollect, in defence of paganism and against Christianity : Felix makes some observations upon what Cæcilius had advanced; after which, Octavius enters upon a particular refutation of the pagan; and concludes with fupporting and establishing the Christian religion : the refult of all which is, that Cæcilius becomes a convert. The dialogue is fprightly, elegant, and instructive; and shews us, as Lactantius fays, what an admirable defender of the truth he would have been, had he applied himfelf entirely to the ftudy of it. We will quote his words : " Minucius Felix non igno-" bilis inter causidicos loci suit. Hujus liber, cui Octavio ti-" tulus est, declarat, quam idoneus veritatis affertor este potu-" isset, si se totum ad id studium contuliiset [1]." We may observe by the way, that fomething like this has been faid of Lactantius himfelf; and that, elegant as he is, he has been ranked, by both ancient and moderns, among the number of those who have undertaken to defend christianity before they understood it.

This dialogue of Felix paffed a long time for the eighth book of Arnobius, adverfus gentes: for being found with the other feven, in an ancient manufcript of the Vatican, it was printed four times under his name, before any body fulpefted its true author. At length Balduinus, a celebrated lawyer, caufed it to be printed feparately at Heidelberg, in 1560, and prefixed to it a very learned differtation of his own, in which he detected the common error, and afcertained the book to its genuine author: although Urfinus, whether he had not feen Balduinus's edition, or whether he envied him the honour of the difcovery, printed it at Rome thirty years after, at the end of Arnobius's works again. However, it has fince been confidered, by the critics, as the work of Felix, and accordingly printed feparately from Arnobius: as it is in the beft edition of it at Cambridge, by Dr. Davis, in 1712, to which the differtation of Balduin is prefixed.

Jerome tells us, that in his time another book, intitled, "De "fato, vel contra mathematicos [M]," went about under the name of Minucius Felix; and that, though it was well written, yet from the diffimilarity of its ftyle from that of Octavius, he concluded it to be fpurious.

FELL (Dr. JOHN), an eminently learned divine, was the fon of Dr. Samuel Fell, dean of Christ-church in Osford, and born at Longworth in Berkshire, June 23, 1625. He was educated mostly at the free-school of Thame in Oxfordshire; and in 1636, when he was only eleven years of age, was admitted student of Christ-church in Oxford. Oct. 1640, he took the degree of bachelor of arts, and that of master, in June 1643; about which time he was in arms for Charles I. within the garrifon of Oxford, and afterwards became an enfign. In 1648, he was turned out of his place by the parliamentarian vifitors, being then in holy orders; and from that time till the reftoration of Charles II. lived in a retired and studious manner, partly in the lodgings of the famous phylician Willis, who was his brother-in-law, and partly in his own houfe opposite Merton-college, wherein he and others kept up the devotions and discipline of the church of England.

After the reftoration, he was made prebendary of Chichefter, and canon of Chrift-church, in which laft place he was inftalled July, 1660; and in Nov. following, was made dean, being then doctor of divinity, and chaplain in ordinary to the king. As foon as he was fixed, he earneftly applied himfelf to purge the college of all remains of hypocrify and nonfenfe, fo prevalent in the late times of confusion, and to improve it in all forts of learning as well as true religion. Nor was he more diligent in reftoring its difcipline, than in adorning it with magnificent buildings, towards which he contributed very great fums. Among other things, he built the handfome tower over the principal gate of the college; into which, in 1683; he caufed to be removed out of the fteeple in the cathedral, the bell called "Great Tom of "Chrift-church," faid to have been brought thither with the other bells from Ofeney-abbey. He took care to have it recaft with additional metal, fo that it is now one of the largeft bells in England. Round it is this infeription: "Magnus Thomas "Clufius Oxonienfis, renatus April viii. MDCLXXX, regnante "Carolo Secundo, Decano Johanne Oxon. Epifcopo, Subde-"cano Gulielmo Jane S. S. Theol. Profeffore, Thefaurario "Henrico Smith S. S. Theol. Profeffore, cura & arte Chrifto-"pheri Hodfon." Sixteen men are required to ring it; and it was firft rung out on May 29, 1684. From that time to this, it has been tolled every night, as a fignal to all fcholars to repair to their refpective colleges and halls; and fo it ufed to be before its removal.

In 1666, 1667, 1668, and 1669, Fell was vice-chancellor of the univerfity : during which time he used all possible means to restore the discipline and credit of the place; and such was his indefatigable spirit, that he succeeded beyond all expectation. In 1675-6, he was advanced to the bishopric of Oxford, with leave to hold his deanery of Chrift-church in commendam, that he might continue his fervices to his college and the university: and he was no fooner fettled in his fee, than he began to rebuild the episcopal palace of Cuddesden in Oxfordshire. He devoted almost his whole substance to works of piety and charity. Among his other benefactions to his college, it must not be forgot, that the best rectories belonging to it were bought with his money: and as he had been fo bountiful a patron to it while he lived, and, in a manner, a fecond founder, fo he left to it at his death an estate, for ten or more exhibitions for ever. It is faid, that he brought his body to an ill habit, and wasted his spirits, by too much zeal for the public, and by forming too many noble defigns; and that all these things, together with the unhappy turn of religion, which he dreaded under James II. contributed to shorten his life. Be this as it may, he died July 10, 1686, to the great lofs of learning, of the whole university, and of the church of England: for he was, as Wood has observed of him, " the " most zealous man of his time for the church of England; a " great encourager and promoter of learning in the university, " and of all public works belonging thereunto; of great refo-" lution and exemplary charity; of strict integrity; a learned " divine; and excellently skilled in the Latin and Greek lan-" guages." Wood relates one fingularity of him, which is, that he was not at all well-affected to the Royal Society, and that the noted Stubbs attacked that body, under his fanction and encouragement. He was buried in Christ-church cathedral; and over his tomb, which is a plain marble, is an elegant infcription, 2 infcription, composed by Aldrich, his fuccessor. He was never married.

It may eafily be imagined, that fo active and zealous a man as Fell had not much time to write books: yet we find him the author and editor of the following works. I. " The " Life of the most reverend, learned, and pious Dr. Henry Hammond, who died April 25, 1660." 1660, reprinted afterwards with additions at the head of Hammond's works. 2. " Alcinoi in Platonicam Philosophiam Introductio. 1667." 3. " In laudem Musices Carmen Sapphicum." Defigned probably for some of the public exercises in the university, as it was set to music. 4. "Historia et Antiquitates Universitatis " Oxoniensis, &c. 1674," 2 vols. fol. This history and antiquities of the univerfity of Oxford was written in English by. Antony Wood, and translated into Latin, at the charge of Fell, by Mr. Chriftopher Wafe and Mr. Richard Peers, except what he did himfelf. He was also at the expence of printing it, with a good character, on a good paper; but "taking to himfelf," fays Wood, "the liberty of putting in and out feveral things " according to his own judgment, and those that he employed " being not careful enough to carry the whole defign in their " head, it is defired that the author may not be accountable for " any thing which was inferted by him, or be cenfured for any " useles repetitions or omiffions of his agents under him." At the end of it, there is a Latin advertisement to the reader, containing an answer to a letter of Hobbes; wherein that author had complained of Fell's having caufed feveral things to be omitted or altered, which Wood had written in that book in his praise. 5. " The Vanity of Scoffing : in a letter to a gen-" tleman, 1674." 6. " St. Clement's two epistles to the Co-" rinthians in Greek and Latin, with notes at the end, 1677." 7. " Account of Dr. Richard Allestree's life :" being the preface to the doctor's fermons, published by our author. 8. " Of the Unity of the Church:" translated from the original of St. Cyprian, 1681. 9. " A beautiful edition of St. Cyprian's " works, revised and illustrated with notes, 1682." 10. " Se-" veral Sermons." II. The following pieces written by the anthor of the "Whole Duty of Man," with prefaces, contents, and marginal abbreviations, by him, viz. " The Lady's " Calling; the Government of the Tongue; the Art of Con-" tentment; the Lively Oracles," &c. He alfo wrote the general preface before the folio edition of that unknown author's works. There is another piece, which was afcribed to him, with this title, " The Interest of England stated : or, a faithful " and just account of the aims of all parties now prevailing; " diftinctly treating of the defignments of the Roman Catholic, " Royalist, Presbyterian, Anabaptist, &c. 1659," 4to, but it nat not being certainly known whether he was the author or not, we do not place it among his works. One thing in the mean time Wood mentions, relating to his literary character, which must not be omitted: that "from 1661, to the time of his death, viz. "while he was dean of Christ-church, he publiss death, viz. "while he was dean of Christ-church, he publiss or reprinted "every year a book, commonly a classical author, against new-"year's tide, to distribute among the students of his house; to "which books he either put an epistle, or running notes, or "corrections. These," fays Wood, "I have endeavoured to "recover, that the titles might be known and fet down, but in "vain."

We have just mentioned Dr. Samuel Fell, our author's father; but it feems neceffary to fay fomething more of him. He was born in the parish of St. Clement Danes, London, 1594; elected student of Christ-church, from Westminster-school, in 1601; took a master of arts degree in 1608; admitted bachelor of divinity in 1616; and about that time became minister of Freshwater in the isle of Wight [N]. May, 1619, he was installed canon of Chrift-church, and the fame year proceeded in divinity, being about that time domestic chaplain to James I. In 1626, he was made Margaret professor, and so consequently had a prebend of Worcester, which was about that time annexed to the professorship. He was then a Calvinist, but at length leaving that opinion, he was, through Laud's interest, made dean of Lichfield in 1637; and the year following, dean of Chrift-church. In 1647, he was ejected from his deanery by the rebels, who were fo exafperated at him for his loyalty to the king, and zeal for the church, that they actually fought his life : and being threatened to be murdered, he was forced to abfcond. He died broken-hearted, Feb. 1, 1648-9; that being the very day he was made acquainted with the murder of his royal mafter king Charles. He was a public-spirited man, and had the character Wood, though he supposes there were more, of a scholar. only mentions these two small productions of his, viz. " Pri-" mitiæ; five Oratio habita Oxoniæ in Schola Theologiæ, 9 " Nov. 1626," and, " Concio Latina ad Baccalaureos die ci-" nerum in Coloff. ii. 8." They were both printed at Oxford in 1627.

FELLER (JOACHIM FREDERIC), fon of Joachim Feller, who was alfo an author of fome repute. He was born at Leipfic in 1673, and passed a confiderable part of his life in travelling, to visit famous libraries, and men of learning. He was fecretary to the duke of Weimar. In 1708 he married, and died in 1726. The most celebrated of his works is, the "Mo-

FENELON (FRANCIS DE SALIGNAC DE LA MOTTE), archbishop of Cambrav, and author of Telemachus, was of an ancient and illustrious family, and born at the caltle of Fenelon, in the province of Perigord, August 6, 1651. At twelve years of age, he was fent to the univerfity of Cahors; and afterwards went to finish his studies at Paris, under the care of his uncle Anthony marquis of Fenelon, lieutenant-general of the king's armies. He foon made himfelf known at Paris, and at nineteen preached there with general applause : but the marquis, who was a very wife and good man, fearing that the good difpolition of his nephew might be corrupted by this early applause, perfuaded him to be filent for fome years. At twenty-four he entered into holy orders, and commenced the functions of his ministry in the parish of St. Sulpice, under the abbé Tronçon, the fuperior of that diffrict, to whose care he had been committed by his uncle. Three years after, he was chosen by the archbp. of Paris, to be fuperior to the newly converted women in that city. In 1686, which was the year after the edict of Nantes was revoked, the king named him to be at the head of those missionaries, who were fent along the coast of Saintonge, and the Pais de Aunis, to convert the protestants: though, indeed, there feems to have been but little for these missionaries to do. those protestants having been already converted by feven or eight hundred fufileers, fupported by four or five companies of dragoons.

Having finished his mission, he returned to Paris, and was prefented to the king: but lived two years afterwards without going to court, being again entirely occupied in the inftruction of the new female converts. That he might forward this good work by writings as well as lectures, he published, in 1688, a little treatife, intitled, "Education de Filles;" which the author of the Bibliotheque Universelle, calls the best and most useful book written upon the subject, in the French language. In 1688, he published a work, " Concerning the functions of the " Pastors of the Church ;" written chiefly against the protestants, with a view of fhewing, that the first promoters of the reformation had no calling, and therefore were not true pastors. In 1689, he was made tutor to the dukes of Burgundy, Anjou, and Berri; and in 1693, was chosen member of the French academy, in the room of Pelisson deceased. In this situation, he was in favour with all. His pupils, particularly the duke of Burgundy, improved rapidly under his care. The divines admired the sublimity of his talents; the courtiers the brilliancy of his wit. The duke, to the end of his life, felt the warmest regard for his illustrious preceptor. At the fame time, Fenelon preferved ferved the difinterestedness of an hermit, and never received or asked any thing either for himself or friends. At last the king gave him the abbey of St. Valery, and, some months after, the archbishopric of Cambray, to which he was confectated by Bofsufficient bishop of Meaux, in 1695.

But a ftorm now arose against him, which obliged him to leave the court for ever; and was occasioned by his book, entitled, "An Explication of the Maxims of the Saints concerning "the interior life." This book was published in 1697, and the occasion of his writing it was as follows. There was a lady, named madam Guyon, who pretended to a very high and exalted devotion. She explained it in fome books which the published, and wrote particularly a mystical exposition of Solomon's Song. Fenelon, whose gentle disposition was strongly actuated by the love of God, became a friend of madam Guyon, in whom he fancied he faw only a pure foul animated with feelings fimilar to his own. This occasioned feveral conferences between the bishop of Meaux, the bishop of Chalons, afterwards cardinal de Noailles, and Mr. Tronçon, superior-general to the congregation of St. Sulpicius. Into thefe conferences, in which madam Guyon's books were examined, Fenelon was admitted; but in the mean time began to write very fecretly upon the fubject under examination, and his writings tended to maintain or excufe madam Guyon's books without naming her. This examination lasted feven or eight months, during which he wrote feveral letters to the examiners, which abounded with fo many testimonies of submission, that they could not think God would deliver him over to a spirit of error [K]. While the conferences lasted, the fecret was inviolably kept with regard to Fenelon; the two bishops being as tender of his reputation, as they were zealous to reclaim him. He was foon after named archbilhop of Cambray, and yet continued with the fame humility to prefs the two prelates to give a final fentence. They drew up thirtyfour articles at Isi, and prefented them to the new archbishop, who offered to fign them immediately; but they thought it more proper to leave them with him for a time, that he might examine them leifurely. He did fo, and added to every one of the articles fuch limitations as enervated them entirely: however, he yielded at last, and signed the articles March 10, 1695. Bolfuet wrote foon after an instruction defigned to explain the articles of Isfi, and defired Fenclon to approve it; but he refused, and let Boffuet know by a friend, that he could not approve a book which condemned madam Guyon, because he himself did not condemn her. It was in order to explain the fystem of the Mystics, that he wrote his book already mentioned. There was a fudden and general outcry against it, and the clamours coming to the king's ear, his majefty expostulated with the prelates, for having kept fecret from him what they alone knew. The controverly was for fome time carried on between the archbp. of Cambray and the bishop of Meaux. But as the latter infifted upon a politive recantation, Fenelon applied to the king, and reprefented to his majesty, that there were no other means to remove the offence which this controverfy occasioned, than by appealing to the pope, Innocent XII. and therefore he begged leave to go himfelf to Rome. But the king fent him word, that it was sufficient to carry his cause thither, without going himfelf, and fent him to his diocefe in August, 1697. When the question was brought before the confultators of the inquifition to be examined, they were divided in their opinions: but at last the pope condemned the book, with twenty-three propolitions extracted from it, by a brief dated March 12, 1699. Yet, notwithstanding this cenfure, Innocent seems to have difapproved the violent proceedings against the author. He wrote thus to the prelates who diftinguished themselves as adversaries to Fenelon: " Peccavit exceffu amoris divini, fed vos peccâstis " defectu amoris proximi." Some of Fenelon's friends have pretended, that there was in this affair more court-policy than zeal for religion. They have obferved, that this ftorm was raifed against him at a time when the king thought of choosing an almoner for the dutchefs of Burgundy; and that there was no way of preventing him, who had been tutor to the duke her husband, and who had acquitted himself perfectly well in the functions of that post, from being made her almoner, but by raifing fufpicions of herefy against him. They think themfelves sufficiently justified in this opinion, by Bossuer's being made almoner, after Fenelon was difgraced and removed. Be this as it will, he fubmitted patiently to the pope's determination, and read his fentence, with his own recantation, publicly in his diocefe of Cambray, where he led a most exemplary life, acquitting himfelf punctually in all the duties of his station. Yet he was not fo much taken up with them, nor fo deeply engaged in his contemplative devotion, but he found time to enter into the controverfy with the Jansenists. He laboured not only to confute them by his writings, but also to oppress them, by procuring a bull from Rome against a book which the cardinal de Noailles, their chief fupport, had approved : the book was father Quesnel's "Reflections upon the New Testament." The Jefuits, who were refolved to humble that prelate, had formed a great party against him, and prevailed with the archbishop of Cambray to affist them in the affair. He engaged himself: wrote many pieces against the Jansenists, the chief of which is the "Four Pastoral Letters," printed in 1704, at Valenciennes:

lenciennes; and spared no pains to get the cardinal disgraced, and the book condemned, both which were at length effected.

But the work that has gained him the greatest reputation, and will render his name immortal, is his "Telemachus," written according to fome, at court; acording to others, in his retreat at Cambray. A fervant whom Fenelon employed to transcribe it, took a copy for himfelf, and had proceeded in having it printed, to about 200 pages, when the king, Louis XIV. who was prejudiced against the author, ordered the work to be stopped, nor was it allowed to be printed in France while he lived. It was published, however, by Moetjons, a bookfeller, in 1699, though prohibited at Paris; but the first correct edition appeared at the Hague in 1701. This elegant work, completely ruined the credit of Fenelon at the court of France. The king confidered it as a fatire against his government; the malignant found in it allusions which the author probably had never intended. Calyps, they faid, was madam de Montespan; Eucharis, mademoifelle de Fontanges; Antiope, the dutchefs of Burgundy; Protefilaus, Louvois; Idomeneus, king James II.; Sefostris, Louis XIV. The world, however, admired the flowing elegance of the ftyle, the fublimity of the moral, and the happy adoption and embellishments of ancient ftories; and critics were long divided, whether it might not be allowed the title of an epic poem, though written in profe. It is certainly a wonderful proof of the triumph of genius in executing admirably an injudicious plan: poetical profe being in itfelf the worft of all ftyles. Few works have ever had a greater reputation. Editions have been multiplied in every country of Europe; but the most esteemed for correctnefs is that published from his papers by his family in 1717. It is in two volumes, duodecimo. Splendid editions have been published in various places, and translations in all modern languages of Europe, modern Greek not excepted.

Fenelon passed the last years of his life in his diocefe, in a manner worthy of a good archbishop, a man of letters, and a Christian philosopher. The amiableness of his manners and character obtained for him a respect, which was paid even by the enemies of his country; for in the last war with Louis XIV. the duke of Marlborough expressly ordered the lands of Fenelon to be spared. He died in January, 1715, at the age of 63.

He was a man of great learning, great genius, fine tafte, and exemplary manners: yet many have fufpected that he was not entirely fincere in his recantation of his "Maxims of the "Saints:" a work composed by him with great care, and confifting, in great part, of extracts from the fathers. Yet if we confider the profound veneration of a pious catholic bifhop for the decifions of the church, the modesty and candour of his character, and even his precepts to the Mystics, we shall be inclined to acquit him of the charge. He had faid to these perfons in that very book, "that those who had erred in fundamental doc-"trines, should not be contented to condemn their error; but fhould confess it, and give glory to God; that they should "have no shame at having erred, which is the common lot of "humanity, but should humbly acknowledge their errors, which "would be no longer such when they had been humbly confessed." He has also been accused of ambition for his conduct in the controvers with the Jansenists, but the charge refts only on presumptive evidence, and is equally refuted by his general character.

Fenelon published several works besides his " Telemachus," and the " Explanation of the Maxims of the Saints," already mentioned, which first appeared in 1697. These were, 1. " Dialogues of the Dead," in two volumes, 12mo, composed for the use of the duke of Burgundy, and intended in general to cure him of some fault, or teach him some virtue. They were produced as the occasions arose, and not laboured. 2. " Dialognes on Eloquence in general, and that of the Pulpit in " particular," 12mo. published in 1718, after his death. He there difcuffes the question whether it is better to preach by memory, or extemporaneoully with more or lefs preparation. The rules of eloquence are also delivered in a neat and eafy manner. 3. "Abridgment of the Lives of the ancient Philo-" fophers," 12mo, rather a sketch than a finished work, written for the duke of Burgundy. 4. " A Treatife on the Education " of Daughters, 12mo, an excellent work. 5. " Philosophi-" cal works, or a Demonstration of the Existence of God, by " proofs drawn from Nature," 12mo, the best edition is of Paris, 1726. 5. " Letters on different subjects of Religion and Me-" taphysics," 12mo, 1718. 6. " Spiritual Works," 4 vols. 12mo. 7. " Sermons," printed in 1744, 12mo, the character of these discourses is rather pathetic writing than strong reasoning; the excellent heart of Fenelon appears throughout; but they are unequal and negligent. He preached extemporaneoully with facility, and his printed fermons are in the fame style. 8. Several works in favour of the bull "Unigenitus," against Jansenism. 9. " Direction for the Conscience of a " King," composed for the duke of Burgundy; a small tract, but much efteemed, published in 1748, and republished in 1774. It is faid, that fome other writings, and feveral letters still remain to be published.

FENESTELLA (LUCIUS), a Roman historian, who died in the year 20, at the age of 70. He is mentioned by Pliny, Gellius, and many other ancient authors. He wrote annals, in many books, the twenty-fecond book being cited by Nonius: also Archaics, and other works. A book on the magistrates of Rome, Rome, falfely attributed to him, is now known to be the production of Dominic Floccus, a Florentine, in the 15th century.

FENTON (Sir GEOFFREY), an eminent writer and statefman during the reigns of Elizabeth and James I. was descended from an ancient family in Nottinghamshire; but the time of his birth does not appear. He was certainly educated liberally, though we cannot tell where ; fince, while a young man, he gave many proofs of his acquaintance with ancient and modern learning, and of his being perfectly verfed in the French, Spanish, and Italian languages. He is well known for a translation from the Italian of "The Hiltory of the Wars of Italy, by Guic-" ciardini;" the dedication of which to queen Elizabeth bears date Jan. 7, 1579. This was however his last work; as he had published before, 1. "An Account of a dispute at Paris, be-" tween two Doctors of the Sorbonne, and two Ministers of "God's Word, 1571;" a translation. 2. "An Epistle, or " Godly Admonition, fent to the Pastors of the Flemish Church " in Antwerp, exhorting them to concord with other Ministers: " written by Antony de Carro, 1578;" a translation. 3. " Golden Epistles: containing variety of discourses both moral, " philosophical, and divine, gathered as well out of the re-" remainder of Guevara's works, as other authors, Latin, " French, and Italian. Newly corrected and amended. Mon " heur viendra, 1577.". In order to understand this title-page clearly, it is necessary to inform the reader, that the familiar epistles of Guevara had been published in English, by one Edward Hellowes, in 1574; fo that this collection of Fenton's confifted of fuch pieces of the fame author as were not contained in that work. The epiftle dedicatory is to the right honourable and vertuous lady Anne, countefs of Oxenford; and is dated from the author's chamber in the Blackfriers, London, Feb. 4, 1575. This lady was the daughter of William Cecil, lord Burleigh: and it appears from the dedication, that her noble father was our author's best patron. Perhaps his chief purpose in translating and publishing this work was, to testify his warm zeal and absolute attachment to that great minister.

What the inducements were, which engaged him to leave his own country, in order to ferve the queen in Ireland, cannot eafily be difcovered: it is however certain, that he went thither well recommended; and that, being in particular favour with Arthur, lord Grey, then lord deputy in that kingdom, he was fworn of the privy council about 1581. It is more than probable that his intereft might be confiderably ftrengthened by his marriage with Alice, the daughter of Dr. Robert Wefton, fometime lord chancellor of Ireland, and dean of the arches in England, a man of great parts, and who had no fmall credit with the earl of Leicefter, and other ftatefmen in the court of Elizabeth: and Vol. VI. I when he was once fixed in the office of fecretary, his own great abilities and fuperior underftanding made him fo ufeful to fucceeding governors, that none of the changes to which that government was too much fubject, in those days, wrought any alteration in his fortune. One thing, indeed, might greatly contribute to this, which was the ftrong interest he found means to raife, and never was at a loss to maintain, in England; fo that whoever was lord lieutenant in Ireland, fir Geoffry Fenton continued the queen's counfellor there, as a man upon whom she depended, from whom the took her notions of state-affairs in that island, and whose credit with her was not to be shaken by the artifices of any faction whatever.

In 1603, fir Geoffry married his only daughter Katherine to Mr. Boyle, afterwards the great earl of Corke; and died at his houfe in Dublin, Oct. 19, 1608. He was interred with much funeral folemnity at the cathedral church of St. Patrick, in the fame tomb with his wife's father, the lord chancellor Weston; leaving behind him the character of a polite writer, an accomplished courtier, an able states and a true friend to the English nation, and protestant interest in Ireland.

FENTON (ELIJAH), defcended from an ancient family, and born at Shelton, near Newcastle under Line, in Staffordshire, being the youngest of twelve children. As he was intended by his parents for the ministry, he was fent to Cambridge, where he embraced principles very opposite to the government, and became difqualified for entering into holy orders. On quitting the university, he was for some time usher to Mr. Bonwicke, a celebrated fchoolmafter at Headley in Surrey; and afterwards became fecretary to the earl of Orrery, who placed his only for lord Boyle under his tuition from 1714 to 1720. Between this amiable poet and his noble pupil a conftant and free friendship fubfifted; and his lordship always spoke of him after his deceafe, and often with tears, as one of the worthiest and most modeft men that ever adorned the court of Apollo. After he quitted the fervice of this nobleman, it was his cuftom to pay a yearly vifit in the country to his brother, who poffeffed an eftate of 1000l. per annum. About the time when this engagement terminated, he was recommended by Pope to a fituation which promised great advantage, that of assisting Mr. Craggs, then fecretary of flate, in the fludies which he found neceffary to fupply the defects of his education; but the early death of this patron intercepted these pleasing prospects. He was a man of great tendernels and humanity, and bore the fairest reputation. He quitted a life, the close of which was spent in ease and tranquillity, on July 13, 1730, at East-Hamstead, Berks, the feat of lady Trumbal; who had invited him thither, by Pope's recommendation, to educate her fon, and afterwards detained him him with her as the auditor of her accounts. His death was much regretted by all men of tafte, as, what is very fingular, he had never been obnoxious to the enmity of his brother-poets. He published in 1709 a volume, under the title of "Oxford " and Cambridge Verses," printed for Lintot, without a date. In 1717 he published a volume of his own poems; and in 1723 introduced upon the stage his tragedy of Mariamne, built upon the ftory related of her in the third volume of the Spectator, which the ingenious author collected out of Josephus. Fenton was employed by Pope to translate the 1st, 4th, 19th, and 20th books of the Odyffey. The 11th, which he had before tranflated into blank verse, Fenton did not take, but committed it to Brocme. He published also a fine edition of Waller's works, illustrated with useful notes of his own; and wrote a life of Milton, which Dr. Johnfon very handfomely commends. Mr. Fenton was much beloved by Mr. Pope, who honoured him with the following epitaph:

" This modelt stone, what few vain marbles can,

" May truly fay, Here lies an honeft man :

" A Poet, blefs'd beyond a Poet's fate,

"Whom Heaven kept facred from the proud and great #

" Foe to bud praise, and friend to learned ease,

" Content with science in the vale of peace.

" Calmly he look'd on either life, and here

" Saw nothing to regret, or there to fear:

" From Nature's temperate feast role fatisfy'd,

" Thank'd Heav'n, that he had liv'd, and that he dy'd." Several of his poems, omitted in the last edition of his works, are preferved in Nichols's "Select Collection, 1780."

FERDOUSI (HASSAN BEN SCHARF), the most celebrated of the Persian poets, whose epic poem entitled, "Schanameh," that is, The History, is of the highest fame throughout the East. It contains the annals of the kings of Persia, and confists of fixty thousand verses, each of which is what we should call a distich. Ferdouss composed this poem at the command of the fultan Mahmoud, fon of Sebecteghin, and was employed upon it for thirty years; after which, receiving only fixty thousand drachmas of filver for his trouble, he quitted the court of Mahmoud in disgust, and wrote fatirical verses against him. He died at his native place, Thous, (from which he is often called Ferdouss Thouss) in the 411th year of the Hegira, or A. D. 1020.

FERGUSON (JAMES), an extraordinary phænomenon of the felf-taught kind, particularly in aftronomy and mechanics, was born in Bamffshire, Scotland, 1710. At the earlieft age his genius began to exert itfelf: neverthelefs, the circumftances of his parents obliged him to fervice. He kept fheep for four years; and, during this fituation, learned to mark the polition of the stars with a thread and a bead. Mr. Gilchrift, minister of Keith, encouraged and affifted his growing genius; and Thomas Grant, efq. received him for inftruction into his family, whofe butler, Alexander Cantley (a very extraordinary perfon, as defcribed by Fergufon) became his tutor, and taught him decimal arithmetic, algebra, and the elements of geometry. Yet, even after this, he went into two very hard fervices; one of which was that of a miller, wherein he very nearly perifhed. When he was too weak for labour, he made a wooden clock, and afterwards a watch, from a cafual fight of one. His ingenuity introduced him to fir James Dunbar, when he learned to draw, and began to take portraits: an employment, by which he fupported himfelf and family many years, both in Scotland and England. In his 29th year he married: and the year after, invented his Aftronomical Rotula, a machine for shewing the new moons and eclipfes, which acquired him the friendship of Mr. Mac Laurin.

About 1744, he went to London; and foon made his way among fuch great men as were lovers of science and uncommon merit. A delineation of the complex line of the moon's motion recommended him to the Royal Society, of which he was elected fellow, without paying for admission; a very uncommon favour. He had a pension of 50l. a year from the present king at his accession; who had heard lectures from him, and frequently converfed with him upon curious topics. He made instruments, and published differtations, from time to time. In 1773, he published "Select Mechanical Exercises," with an account of his life. His " Introduction to Electricity" had appeared in 1770; his " Introduction to Aftronomy" in 1772. His great work, " Aftronomy explained on fir Ifaac Newton's " Principles," had gone through four editions in 1770: his " Lectures' on felect subjects in Mechanics, Hydrostatics, Hy-" draulics', Pneumatics, and Optics," five in 1776. His last-published work was a "Treatife on Perspective," in 1775. He died Nov. 16, 1776. He was a man of the clearest judgment and most unwearied application; yet humble, courteous, benevolent, and of the utmost innocence and simplicity of manners.

FERMAT (PETER), a very celebrated French mathematician, though by profettion a lawyer. He is confidered by the writers of his own country as having rendered no lefs fervice to mathematical fcience than Defcartes, and as having even prepared the way for the doctrine of infinites, afterwards difcovered by Newton and Leibnitz. He was not only the reftorer of the ancient geometry, but the introducer of the new. He was born at Touloufe in 1590, educated to the law, and advanced to the dignity of counfellor to the parliament of Touloufe. As a magiftrate, magistrate, his knowledge and integrity were highly esteemed. As a man of science he was connected with Defcartes, Huygens, Pascal, and many others. He is faid also to have cultivated poetry. He died in 1664. His mathematical works were publissed at Toulouse in 1679, in two volumes, folio. The first volume contains the treatife of arithmetic of Diophantus, with a commentary, and several analytical inventions. The second comprises his mathematical discoveries, and his correspondence with the most celebrated geometricians of his age. His fon, Samuel Fermat, was also eminent as a literary man, and wrote fome learned differtations.

FERNEL (JOHN FRANCIS), or Fernelius, phyfician to Henry II. of France, was born at Mont-Didier in Picardy, in the year 1506. He was not very young when he was fent to Paris, to study rhetoric and philosophy; but made fo quick a progress, that, having been admitted master of arts after two years time, the principals of the colleges strove who should have him to teach logic, and offered him a confiderable ftipend. He would not accept their offers; but chose to render himself worthy of a public profeffor's chair by private studies and lectures. He applied himfelf therefore in a most intense manner. All other pleasure was infipid to him. He cared neither for play, nor for walking, nor for entertainment, nor even for conversation. He read Cicero. Plato, and Aristotle. The reading of Cicero procured him this advantage, that the lectures he read on philosophical fubjects were as eloquent, as those of the other masters of that time were barbarous. He also applied himself very earnestly to the mathematics.

This continual study drew upon him a long fit of fickness, which obliged him to leave Paris. On his recovery, he returned thither with a defign to study physic; but before he applied himfelf entirely to it, he taught philosophy in the college of St. Barbara. After this, he spent four years in the study of physic; and taking a doctor's degree, confined himself to his closet, in order to read the best authors, and to improve himself in mathematics; that is, as far as the business of his profeffion would fuffer him. Never was a man more diligent than Fernel. He used to rife at four o'clock in the morning, and ftudied till it was time either to read lectures or to vifit patients. He then examined the urine that was brought him; for this was the method of those times with regard to the poor people, who did not fend for the phyfician. Coming home to dine, he fhut himfelf up among his books, till they called him down to table. Rifing from table, he returned to his fludy, which he did not leave without neceffary occasions. Coming home at night, he did just as at noon : he staid among his books till they called him to supper; returned to them the moment he had supped; and did not leave them till eleven o'clock, when he went to bed.

In the courfe of these studies, he contrived mathematical instruments, and was at great expence in having them made, His wife, however, was alarmed at those expences, by which even a part of her fortune was wasted. She murmured, cried, and complained to her father, who was a counfellor at Paris. Fernel submitted at last, sent all his instrument-makers away, and applied himfelf ferioufly to the practice of phyfic. But, as visiting patients did not employ his whole time, he refumed the fame office in which he had been engaged already, of reading public lectures upon Hippocrates and Galen. This foon gained him a great reputation through France, and in foreign countriés. His business increasing, he lest off reading lectures; but as nothing could make him ceafe to fludy in private, he fpent all the hours he could fpare in composing a work of physic, intitled, "Phyfiologia," which was foon after published. He was prevailed upon to read lectures on this new work, which he did for three years: and undertaking another work, which he published, "De venæ sectione," he laid himself under a neceffity of reading lectures some years longer; for it was paffionately defired that he would also explain this new book to the young students.

While he was thus employed, he was fent for to court, in order to try whether he could cure a lady, whole recovery was defpaired of. He was fo happy as to cure her, which was the first cause of that esteem which Henry II. who was then dauphin, and was in love with that lady, conceived for him. This prince offered him even then the place of first physician to him; but Fernel, who infinitely preferred his studies to the hurry of a court, would not accept the employment, and had even recourse to artifice, in order to obtain the liberty of returning to He represented first, that he was not learned enough to Paris. deferve to be entrusted with the health of the princes; but that, if he were permitted to return to Paris, he would zealoufly employ all means to become more learned, and more capable of ferving the dauphin. This excuse not being admitted, he pretended, in the next place, to be fick, and fent to the prince a furgeon, who was accustomed to speak familiarly to him, and who told him, that Fernel had a pleurify, which grief would certainly render mortal; and that his grief was occasioned by being absent from his books and from his family, and by being obliged to difcontinue his lectures, and lead a tumultuous life. The prince, giving credit to this falfe ftory, permitted Fernel to retire. A man, as Bayle observes, must be excessively in love with his studies, and a philosophical life, when he employs fuch tricks to avoid what all others are defirous to obtain ! When

When Henry came to the throne, he renewed his offer; but Fernel reprefented, that the honour was due, for feveral reafons, and as an hereditary right, to the late king's phylician; and that, as for himfelf, he wanted fome time for experiments concerning feveral discoveries he had made relating to physic. The king admitted this: but as foon as Francis the First's physician died, Fernel was obliged to go, and fill his place at Henry the Second's court. Here just the contrary to what he dreaded came to pass: for he enjoyed more reft and more leifure at court than he had done at Paris; and he might have confidered the court as an agreeable retirement, had it not been for the journies, which the new civil war obliged the king to take. Being returned from the expedition of Calais, he made his wife come to Fontainbleau: but this good woman was fo afflicted at being obliged to leave her relations, that fhe fell fick foon after, and died delirious; and her death grieved Fernel to fuch a degree, that he died within a month after she was buried, in 1558. He was the author of many works befides those which have been mentioned; as, " De abditis rerum causis," seven books of Pathology, a book on Remedies, " Medicina Universa," 4to, Utrecht, 1656; " An edition of the Greek writers on Fever," solio, Venice, 1594, &c. They have been printed feveral times: and before all the editions of them is prefixed his life, written by Plantius his disciple, from which this account of him is taken.

Fernel acquired a vast estate by his business. Plantius tells us, that while he was with him, his gains amounted often to above 12000 livres a year, and feldom under 10000. He is confidered as one of the great reftorers of medicine, and the first after Galen who wrote ably on the nature and cause of difeases. ' His posterity were long respected on his account.

FERRACINO (BARTOLOMEQ), a celebrated felf-taught mechanic, born at Baffan in the territory of Padua, in the year 1692. His first occupation being that of a fawyer, he invented a faw which worked by the wind : he went on progreffively to feveral more curious inventions, till he was noticed by the great men of Italy. In his native town of Baffan, he constructed a famous bridge over the Brenta, remarkable for the boldnefs of its defign, and the folidity of its construction. He died foon after the completion of this work. An hiftory of his life and inventions was published at Venice in 1764, by a writer whose name was Memo.

FERRAND (JAMES), a French phylician, and a native of Agen, wrote a book, " De la Maladie d'Amour," that is, " Of " the Diftemper of Love," which was printed at Paris in 1622. Though his design was only to confider Love, as it often turns into a bodily difeafe, and becomes a phrenzy, or melancholy, yet he fays a great many things, which relate to Love in general; and particularly particularly fets forth the uneafineffes, which attend the pleafures of it. The dedication of this book abounds with learning, by which it appears that there is nothing upon which the heathen poets had philofophized fo deeply as they had upon Love. Bayle takes notice, that this book has not yet been mentioned in the "Lin-" denius Renovatus," or, " Catalogue of Phyficians and their " writings;" yet fays, that it deferves to have a place there, more than feveral that are in it: which is one reafon why we have taken occafion thus to mention it and its author.

FERRAND (LOUIS), a French lawyer, born at Toulon in 1645, became an advocate in the parliament of Paris, and died in that city in the year 1699. Though a layman, he lived with the rigour of a ftrict ecclefiaftic; and though a phyfician, his works turn chiefly upon fubjects of facred learning. They are full of erudition, but not remarkable for brilliancy or clearnefs. They are, 1. "A large Commentary on the Pfalms," in Latin, 4to, 1683. 2. "Reflections on the Chriftian Religion," 1679, 2 vols. 12mo. 3. "A Pfalter," in French and Latin. 4. Some controverfial writings againft the Calvinifts, and others. 5. "A Letter and Difcourie to prove that St. Auguftin was "a Monk," an opinion which feveral learned men have rejected.

FERRAND (ANTONY), a counfellor alfo, but celebrated in a very different line, for elegant fongs, madrigals, and epigrams. He died at Paris, the place of his birth, in 1719, at the age of 42. He was confidered as a rival of the poet John Baptiste Rouffeau, in his style of writing.

FERRAND (JAMES PHILIP), a French painter in enamel, on which art he wrote a treatife, published at Paris in 1732, 12mo, with another small tract on miniature painting. He was born at Joigni in Burgundy, in 1653, and died at Paris in 1732.

FERRANDUS (FULGENTIUS), a deacon of the church of Carthage, in the fixth century, a difciple of St. Fulgentius; one of the first who declared themselves against the condemnation of the three chapters; of which see a particular account under the title FACUNDUS. Several of his works are enumerated by Cave. He died before the year 551.

FERRARI (ANTONY, MARY, ZACHARY, BARTHOLOMEW), joint founder, with James Morigia, of the regular clerks of the congregation of St. Paul, called Barnabites, eftablifhed at Milan, about 1520, and confirmed by pope Paul III. in 1535. Many colleges of this order were afterwards eftablifhed in Italy and Germany, and received great privileges and diffinctions from the emperors. Ferrari died, fuperior of his own foundation, in the year 1544.

FERRARI

FERRARI (OCTAVIAN), an Italian author, was born of a noble family at Milan, 1518. After he had studied polite learn-ing, philosophy, and physic, in the universities of Italy, he was chofen professor of ethics and politics, in the college founded by Paul Canobio at his infligation; and held this place eighteen years. The fenate of Venice engaged him afterwards to remove to Padua, where he explained the philosophy of Aristotle; and he did this with fo much skill and elegance, that Vimerat, who was professor at Paris under Francis I. returning to Italy upon the death of that king, fixed upon him, preferably to all others, for the publication of his works. He continued at Padua four years, and then returned to Milan; where he continued to teach philosophy till his death, which happened in 1586. Though he was excellently skilled in polite literature, yet he was principally famous for philosophy, being efteemed a fecond Aristotle. He was no less illustrious for his probity than for his learning.

He was the author of feveral works; as, 1. " De Sermon-" ibus Exotericis. Venet. 1575." Ferrari treats here of that part of Ariftotle's doctrine, which was intended for all forts of people, without meddling with the Acroamatics, which were only for the ufe of his fcholars. This book was reprinted at Francfort, 1606, with a new differtation of " Ferrari de difci-" plina Encyclica," under the general title of " Clavis Philofo-" phiæ Peripateticæ Ariftotelicæ." 2. " De Origine Roma-" norum. Milan, 1607." Though death prevented Ferrari from putting the laft hand to this work, Grævius thought proper to infert it in the first volume of his " Roman An-" tiquities," and added his own corrections to it. 3. He translated Athenæus into Latin, and wrote fome notes upon Ariftotle.

FERRARI (FRANCISCO BERNARDINO), of the fame family with the former, was born at Milan about 1577. He applied with great fuccefs to philofophy and divinity, as well as to the Latin, Greek, Spanifh, and French languages, and was admitted a doctor of the Ambrofian college. His vaft knowledge of books, and abilities in all kinds of learning, induced Frederic Borromeo, archbifhop of Milan, to appoint him to travel into divers parts of Europe, in order to purchafe the beft books and manufcripts, with a defign to form a library at Milan. Ferrari paffed over part of Italy and Spain, and collected a great number of books, which laid the foundation of the famous Ambrotian library. About 1638, he was appointed director of the College of the Nobles, lately erected at Padua; which office he difcharged two years, and then, on account of indifpofition, returned to Milan. He died in 1669, aged 92.

He

He wrote, 1. " De Antiquo Ecclesiasticarum Epistolarum " Genere, libri tres. Milan, 1613." 2. " De Ritu Sacrarum " Ecclesiæ Catholicæ concionum libri tres. Milan, 1620." This work is very curious, and was afterwards printed at Utrecht, 1692, cum præfatione Joannis Georgii Grævii. 3. " De Veterum acclamationibus et plausu libri septem. Milan, " 1627." It is likewife reprinted in the fixth volume of Grævius's "Roman Antiquities." Ferrari began feveral other works upon various points of antiquity, both ecclefiastical and profane; and it is remarkable that, though he lived forty-two years after the publication of the last-mentioned book, he should not have published any more [L]. All his writings are full of learning and curious refearches into antiquity; he wrote with great clearness and method, is very judicious in his conjectures, and exact in his quotations.

FERRARI (OCTAVIO), of the fame family with the former, was born at Milan in 1607. "He went through his studies in the Ambrofian college; and after he had done with philofophy and divinity, applied himfelf entirely to polite literature. He made fo great a progrefs in it, that cardinal Frederic Borromeo procured him a professorship of rhetoric in that college, when he was but one and twenty years old. Six years after, the republic of Venice invited him to Padua, to teach eloquence, politics, and the Greek language, in that univerfity, which was then extremely in its decline; but Ferrari restored it to its former flourishing state. The republic rewarded him by enlarging his penfion every fix years, which from five hundred ducats was at last raifed to two thousand. After the death of Ripamonte, historiographer of the city of Milan, Ferrari was appointed to write the hiftory of that city; and a penfion of two hundred crowns was settled on him for that purpose. He began, and composed eight books; but finding that they would not communicate to him the neceffary materials, which were reposited in the archives of Milan, he defifted, and left what he had done to his heir, on condition that he fhould not publish it. His reputation procured him prefents and penfions from foreign princes. Christina of Sweden, in whose honour he had made a public difcourse upon her mounting the throne, prefented him with a golden chain, and honoured him with her letters. Louis XIV. of France gave him a penfion of five hundred crowns for feven years. He died in 1682, aged 75. He was remarkable for the fweetnefs, fincerity, and affability of his temper; and had for happy a way of mitigating perfons exafperated against each other, that he acquired the title of "the Reconciler, or Pacificator."

His works are, 1. " De Re Vestiaria libri tres. Padua, 1642." In 1654, he added four books more to a fecond edition. 2. " Analecta de re vestiaria, sive exercitationes ad Alberti Rube-" nii Commentarium de re vestiaria et lato clavo. Accessit " Differtatio de veterum lucernis sepulchralibus. Padua, 1670." This was afterwards, in 1685, subjoined to his book, " De re " vestiaria." The seven books of Ferrari, " De re vestiaria," are inferted in the fixth book of Grævius's "Roman Antiqui-" ties," and that upon the ancient fepulchral lamps in the twelfth. 3. "Pallas Suecica: Panegyricus Suecorum Reginæ "imperium aufpicanti dictus." 4. "De laudibus Francisci " Putei." 5. " Prolufiones xxvi.-Epiftolæ.-Formulæ ad ca-" pienda Doctoris infignia .- Infcriptiones .- Fanegyricus Lu-" dovico Magno Francorum Regi dictus." All these little pieces, and feveral others which had been printed feparately, were collected and difposed into proper order by John Fabricius, who published them at Helmstad, 1710, in two vols. 8vo. 6. " Veneta Sapientia, seu de optimo civitatis statu prolusio." 7. " Electorum libri duo." In this work our author treats of feveral points of antiquity. 8, "Origines Linguæ Italicæ. " Padua, 1676," folio. The author of the "Journal des Sça-" vans, for April, 1677," gives the following judgment of this work: "Scaliger had before treated of this fubject in twenty-" four books, which are unfortunately loft. Though Ferrari " has not taken fo great an extent, yet we find a great deal of " learning in him. But he appears fo jealous of the language " of his country, that he thinks every other origin, but what he if gives it, as well as the French and Spanish from the Latin tongue, would be injurious to it. This hinders him from " affenting to the opinion of cardinal Bembo, who supposes " that the Italian owes many of its words to the jargon of " Languedoc and Provence." Menage has written a book upon the fame fubject, to correct the errors of Ferrari. 9. " De Pantomimis et Mimis Differtatio." 10. " Differtationes " duæ; altera de balneis, de gladiatoribus altera." Thefe two works are posthumous, and were published by John Fabricius, the former at Wolfenbuttel, 1714, in 8vo; the latter at Helm-Itad, 1720, in 8vo.

FERRARI (JOHN BAPTIST), a Jesuit of Sienna, author of a Syriac dictionary, published in 1622, in 4to, under the name of "Nomenclator Syriacus." The chief object of the author is to explain the Syriac words in the Bible, in which he was affisted by fome learned Maronites. He wrote also, "De Ma-"lorum aureorum cultura," 1646; and "De Florum cul-"tura," 1633, both published at Rome. He died in 1655.

FERRARS (GEORGE), a learned lawyer, a good historian, a celebrated poet, and a most accomplished courtier, in the reigns reigns of Henry VIII. Edward VI. Mary, and Elizabeth, was defcended from an ancient family in Hertfordshire, and born in a village near St. Alban's, about 1512. He was bred at Oxford, and removed thence to Lincoln's-lnn; where he applied himfelf with fo much fuccels to the fludy of the law, that he was foon taken notice of in Westminster-hall as an advocate, at the fame time that he was much admired at court for his wit and good-breeding. His first rife in his profession, and at court, was owing to Cromwell earl of Effex, who was himfelf a man of great parts, and took a pleafure in countenancing and advancing others who had talents. Upon the fall of this patron, he quitted the public exercife of his profellion as a lawyer; not however before he had given evident teltimonies of his knowledge and learning, as appears from, 1, " The double transla-"tion of Magna Charta from French into Latin and English. " 2. Other laws enacted in the time of Henry III. and Edw. I. " translated into English."

Afterwards he became the king's menial fervant, whom he attended in war as well as in peace; and ferved alfo with his pen, and with his fword. In fhort, he was a very gallant man in all fenses of the word, and so much in favour with Henry, as to receive from that monarch a very confiderable. grant in his native county, out of the king's private estate. This was in 1535; yet he managed fo ill, that some years after, when member of parliament for Plymouth, he had the misfortune, during the feffion, to be taken in execution by a fheriff's officer, and carried to the compter. This, however, being reprefented to the houfe of commons, occasioned such a disturbance there, as not only produced his discharge, but a settled rule with respect to privilege. He continued in high favour with Henry all his reign, and feems to have flood upon good terms with the protector Somerfet, in that of king Edward; fince he attended him, as a commissioner of the army, into Scotland, in 1548. Edward also had a fingular kindness for him, as appeared afterwards at a very critical juncture: for when the unfortunate duke of Somerfet lay under fentence of death, the people murmuring on the one hand, and the king uneafy and melancholy on the other, it was thought expedient to do fomething to quiet and amufe the people, and if possible to entertain and divert the · fovereign. In order to this, at the entrance of Christmas holidays, George Ferrars, esq. was proclaimed LORD OF MIS-RULE, that is, a prince of fports and pastimes; which office he discharged for twelve days together at Greenwich, with great magnificence and addrefs, and entirely to the king's fatisfaction. In this character, attended by the politest part of the court, he made an excursion to London, where he was very honourably received by officers created for that purpose, splendidly entertained tained by the lord mayor, and when he took leave, had a handfome prefent made him in token of refpect.

But although he made fo great a figure in the diversions of a court, he preferved at the fame time his credit with all the learned world, and was no idle spectator of political affairs. This appears from the history of the reign of Mary, which though inferted in the chronicle, and published under the name of Richard Grafton, was actually written by Ferrars; as Stow expressly tells us. Our author was an historian, a lawyer, and a politician, even in his poetry; as appears from pieces of his, inferted in the work entitled, " The Mirror for Magistrates," &c. The first edition of this work was published in 1559, by William Baldwin, who prefixed an epiftle before the fecond part of it, wherein he fignifies, that it had been intended to reprint " The Fall of Princes," by Boccace, as translated into English by Lidgate the monk; but that, upon communicating his defign to feven of his friends, all of them fons of the Mufes, they diffuaded him from that, and proposed to look over the English Chronicles, and to pick out and drefs up in a poetic habit fuch flories as might tend to edification. To this collection Ferrars contributed the following pieces: 1. "The Fall of Robert " Trefilian, Chief Juffice of England, and other his fellows, " for mifconstruing the Laws, and expounding them to serve " the Prince's affections." 2. The Tragedy, or unlawful mur-" der, of Thomas of Woodstock, duke of Gloucester." 3. " Tragedy of king Richard II." 4. " The Story of dame " Eleanor Cobham, dutchefs of Gloucefter :" much altered and augmented in the fecond edition of 1587, in which are added, to the four already mentioned, 5. " The Story of Humphrey " Plantagenet, duke of Gloucester, protector of England." 6. " The Tragedy of Edmund duke of Somerfet."

As to our author's religion, it is very probable, if not certain, that he was a fixed, perhaps a zealous proteflant. This may reafonably be collected from his coming into the world under the protection of the lord Cromwell, who was undoubtedly of the proteflant religion; and from the high credit in which he flood with the protector Somerfet and king Edward, which it is fcarce poffible he could have attained, if he had not been fo. In his hiftory alfo of the reign of Mary, though he writes with much caution and moderation, and fpeaks highly of the perfonal virtues of that princefs, yet he fhews himfelf clearly of the reformed religion; more efpecially in the large account he gives of the death of Cranmer, and of fir Thomas Wiat's infurrection [M]. He died in 1579, at Flamftead in Hertfordthire.

[M] Grafton's Chronicle, p. 1350.

There flourished also at the fame time with him Edward Fertars, a Warwickshire gentleman of good family, bred at Oxford, a celebrated poet likewise, and much in the good graces of Henry VIII. Wood calls him a very ingenious man; and fays, that he wrote several tragedies and comedies. He died in 1564.

There was a Henry Ferrars too, of the fame county and family, bred at Oxford, and afterwards famous for his knowledge and fkill in heraldry, genealogies, and antiquities. Wood fays, that out of the collections of this gentleman, Dugdale laid part of the foundation of his elaborate work, intitled, "The Antiqui-" ties of Warwickshire illustrated;" and that, after Dugdale's death, feveral of Ferrars's collections, that had come into his hands, were reposited in the Ashmolean Museum. Ferrars was well known to and respected by Camden, who, in his discourse of the antiquity of Coventry, makes this honourable mention of him: " Thus much of Coventry; yet have you not all this of " me, but, willingly to acknowledge by whom I have profited, " of Henry Ferrars of Baldefly, a man both for parentage and ** knowledge of antiquity very commendable, and my fpecial " friend; who both in this place, and alfo elfewhere, hath at " at all times courteously shewed me the right way when I was se out, and from his candle, as it were, hath lightened mine." Henry Ferrars had alfo, in his younger days, a good talent at poetry, fome specimens of which, Wood tells us, he had feen fcattered in divers books, printed in the reign of Elizabeth. He died in 1633, aged 84; " leaving behind him," fays Wood, " the character of a well-bred gentleman, a good neighbour, " and an honeft man."

FERREIN (ANTONY), an eminent French anatomist and furgeon, author of two works; one entitled, "Lectures on "Medicine," the other, "Lectures on the Materia Medica;" each in three volumes, 12mo, which were published after his death, and proved the foundness of his knowledge. He was born in 1693, and died at Paris in 1769.

FERRERAS (DON JOHN OF), a Spaniard, was born at Labanezza, in 1652. After having gone through his fludies at the univerfity of Salamanca, he took orders, and obtained the cure of St. James of Talavera, and afterwards was removed to that of St. Peter at Madrid. He now became diffinguifhed by his wit and learning. He refufed two bifhoprics, although he was preffed by the court to accept them. The academy of Madrid chofe him for one of its members in 1713, the year of its foundation; and the king confirmed this unanimous approbation of the literati, by appointing him his librarian. Ferreras was very ufeful to this growing academy. He ferved it exceedingly by his contributions in composing a Spanish Dictionary, which was undertaken undertaken and published by the academy, 1739, in fix volumes, folio. He died, four years before, in 1735. He left feveral works in theology, philosophy, and history: the most confiderable of which was a general history of Spain, written in Spanish, and translated into French by Hermilly, in ten volumes, 4to. Though Mariana's history is more elegantly written, yet all the Spanish literati agree, that it is not so exact and faithful as Ferrera's. It ends in the reign of Philip II.

FERRETI (or FERRETUS), of Vicenza, a poet and hiftotian in the fourteenth century, and one of those who contributed to revive good taste in Europe, and to banish barbarism. He wrote a history of his own times, from 1250 to 1328, in seven books, which was inferted by Muratori, in the ninth volume of the writers on the history of Italy. A Latin poem by him, on the actions of Can de la Scala, is also extant. He is faid to have produced many other works in prose and verse.

FERRETI (EMILIO), an Italian lawyer, a native of Castelfranco in the territory of Bologna, born in 1489. He was fecretary to pope Leo X. afterwards employed by him at Avignon, where, on the bench of jurisprudence, which he put up at his own expence, he put this excellent motto: "Peritum orno, im-"peritum dedecoro." His "Opera Juridica," were publissed in 1598, long after his death, which happened in 1552, at Avignon. An epitaph written for him by Antonius Goveanus, speaks of him in the most extravagant terms of encomium.

FERRETI (GIOVANNI BATISTA), of the fame city as the first Ferreti, was a Benedictine monk, and eminent as an antiquary. In 1672, he published, at Verona, his "Musæ Lapi-"dariæ," in solio : which is a collection, though by no means a complete one, of the verses found inferibed on ancient monuments. Burman the younger, in his preface to the Anthologia Latina, seems to confound this Ferreti with him who flourished in the fourteenth century, speaking of his history of his own times. The exact periods of this author's birth and death are not known.

FERRI (PAUL), in Latin, Ferrius, a most learned divine of Germany, was born of a confiderable family at Metz, in 1591 [N]. He was fent to study divinity at Montaban, and made fo uncommon a progress, that he was admitted a minister at Metz, in 1610. Though he was but nineteen, he had then published a book of poems; the advertisement to which he finished in these words, "fat ludo nugisque datum." He had eminent talents for preaching. His noble prefence, his venerable countenance, and fine delivery, added great force to his eloquence, which was very powerful and moving. His enemies reported, falfely, that he was one of the ministers whom cardinal Richelieu had bribed to procure a coalition of the two religions: however, it is certain that he was grieved at the division of the protestants, and hoped that he could contribute fomewhat to forward a re-union; and, it is fuppofed, that with this view he kept a correspondence with Dury [0]. His death happened in 1669; and there was found above fourfcore stones in his bladder, which occafioned it. He had a very fine library, which he increafed by feveral works of his own. In 1616, he published, "Scholastici Orthodoxi Specimen," in which he shews, that the protestant doctrine of grace has been taught by the school-. men. This treatife gained him the efteem of Du Pleffis Mornay, who wrote him a letter upon it, in which he advifed him about another work he was upon, entitled, " Le dernier desef-" poir de la Tradition," &c. In 1630, he published at Ley-den, "Vindiciæ pro Scholastico Orthodoxo," against Perinus, an eminent Jesuit, who had published in 1619, a book, entitled, " Thrafonica Pauli Ferrii Calvinista." In 1654, he published, "General Catechisme de la Reformation," which was anfwered by Boffuet.

FERRI (CIRO), a skilful painter, was descended of a good family, and born at Rome in 1634. Eafy circumstances did not hinder him from purfuing his inclination and tafte for painting. He was a true and faithful imitator of Peter da Cortona, under whom he had been bred; and to whom he came fo near in his ideas, his invention, and his manner of painting, that his cielings particularly are often mistaken for Cortona's. Though he fet great prices on his works, he was in continual employ. Pope Alexander VII. had a great effeem for him; and his three fucceffors were no lefs favourable to him. The Great Duke fent for him to Florence, and affigned him a large penfion to finish the works which Cortona had left imperfect. He entered fo well into the fpirit of them, and acquitted himfelf fo worthily, that the whole work feems to be of the fame hand. The Great Duke nominated him chief of the fchool of Florence; and fo he continued for a long time. Ferri returned to Rome, where he appeared a great architect as well as a good painter. Several palaces and grand altars, as St. John of the Florentines, and that of the Chiefa Nuova, were raifed from his defigns. He diverted himfelf more with drawing than painting. He was much importuned for devices, figures for breviaries, and titles of books: feveral of which have been engraved by Spierre and Bloemart. The pope employed him in making cartoons for the Vatican; and no man has worked in more different ways than he. The cupola of St. Agnes, in the palace of Navona, was his laft work. The chagrin he felt in feeing the angels of Bacici, a Genoefe painter, which were directly under it, the force of whofe colouring made his appear too weak, is faid to have been the caufe of his death. One day, he told Lazaro Baldi, his companion, that his cupola appeared very different on the fcaffold, from what it did from below, and that the angels of Bacici gave him great pain; and, falling fick foon after, he died in 1689, at the age of 55.

FERRIER (ARMAND DE), an eminent lawyer, called fometimes the Cato of France, was born at Toulouse in 1506. He was admitted a doctor of law at Padua; and from a professor in the univerfity of Touloufe, was raifed to be a counfellor in the parliament of the fame city. It is remarkable of him, that though he was a protestant in his heart for a good part of his life, he did not profess himself to be so, till a little before his death. He had indeed often difcovered that he was no very found papift; and he was fo ftrongly fuspected of herefy, after the famous Mercuriale of 1559, that he would have been imprisoned, if he had not made his escape. He harangued in 1562 in the council of Trent [P], whither he was fent ambaffador by the most Christian King; and he expressed himself in so bold a manner in favour of the interests of France, that the Italian priefts were highly offended at him. He went afterwards ambaffador to Venice, where he continued feveral years; and took occasion to affist father Paul, in collecting materials for his "History of the Council of Trent." On his return from Venice, Du Pleffis Mornay, who knew his thoughts, preffed him fo earnestly to declare the truth, that Ferrier openly professed himself a protestant: and the king of Navarre made him his chancellor. He was about 76 years old at the time of his renouncing popery; and he only lived to 79. It has been faid that he confpired with the chancellor de l'Hofpital, to break the . knot, which united the most Christian King with the Holy See; to affemble a national council, in which the king of France, after the example of the king of England, should be declared head of the Gallican Church; and to usurp all the estates of the church of France. He was reckoned among the greatest men in Europe; and was the author of fome literary works.

FERRIER (JEREMY), a minister and professor of divinity at Nismes, is, contrary to his namesake in the preceding article, memorable for becoming a papist, even after having maintained in public disputation in 1602, that, "Pope Clement the "VIIIth was properly the Antichrist." Yet he was the first, who began to yield in the political assemblies of the reformed in France. Many circumstances in his behaviour had made him fulpected as a penfioner of the court, as a falle brother, and a traitor to the churches. He did not, however, openly change his religion, till a popular tumult arofe against him, in which his houfe was plundered, and himfelf fo near being murdered, that, for the fake of escaping, he was obliged to lie three days concealed in a tomb: fo that, as Bayle obferves, though " many * have been compelled to come in, yet he may certainly be looked " upon as one who was compelled to go out." After this, he fettled at Paris, where he endeavoured to make his fortune. He published in 1614, the year after his conversion, a book of controverfy upon the fubject of antichrift. The king employed him in feveral important affairs; and in 1626, he was commanded to attend his majefty to Britanny, where he was honoured with the title of state and privy counfellor. Cardinal de Richelieu had a particular efteem for him. He died of a hectic fever in 1626. His family was numerous; yet there was but one daughter among them. He made all his children promife, that they would live and die in the Catholic Faith. His daughter married M. Tardieu, lieutenant-criminel of Paris, concerning which couple fome curious anecdotes are recorded in Boileau's tenth fatire, and in the notes of St. Marc.

Ferrier was the reputed author of a famous political work, entitled, " Catholique d'Etat," published in 1625, in answer to some libels, which the king of Spain's partizans had written against France, upon allying herself with the protestant powers to the injury of the catholic religion.

FERRIER (LOUIS), a poet, and a native of Avignon; who was put into the inquifition in that city for the following verfe in his "Préceptes Galantes," though the poem was not then published.

L'amour, pour les mortels, est le souverain bien.

Love is alone the fovereign good to men.

He was, however, acquitted by intereft, and retired to Paris, where he published the poem in 1678. His tragedies, Anne of Britany, Adrastus, and Montezuma, are represented as written in an incorrect style, and with seeble versification, yet they had also marks of genius, and traits of nature; and the first of them continued to be acted occasionally as long as the monarchy subfisted. The pompous opening of his Montezuma is represented by Voltaire as the only striking passage in it. The king on his throne, fays to his prostrate caciques, > Levez-vous: votre roi vous permet aujour d'hui Et de l'envifager, & de parler à lui.

Arife: this day your monarch's will allows, To view his perfon, and addrefs his throne.

Ferrier

Ferrier was for fome time preceptor to the fons of the duke of St. Aignan. He died in Normandy, where he had purchafed an eftate, in the year 1721, at the age of 69.

FERRIERES (CLAUDE DE), a doctor of civil law in the univerfity of Paris, who, as a refource for the wants of his family, composed many works in jurifprudence, which were nevertheles in confiderable estimation. The bookfellers of Paris, for whom he worked, were enriched, but he was not. His talents were confiderable; but a certain arrogance of manner, and bigotry to his own opinions, prevented him from being diftinguished in his profession. His works are, 1. "The Jurif-" prudence of the Justinian Code." 2. "Of the Digest." 3. "Of the Novellæ." And feveral Compilations on French law. He died in 1715, aged 77. His fon Claude Joseph Ferrieres, published a dictionary of law, in two volumes, 4to, in 1771.

FERRON (ARNAULD DU), a lawyer of Bourdeaux, born in 1515. He was an elegant writer in Latin, an imitator of the ftyle of Terence, admired by Scaliger, and honoured by him with the name of Atticus. He continued the hiftory of France in Latin, (which Paulus Æmilius, a writer of Verona, had given from the reign of Pharamond to the year 1488) as far as the end of the reign of Francis I. This work was publifhed at Paris, by Vafcofan, in 1555. It is copious, but not too long, and abounds with curious anecdotes, and very exact details. He had confiderable employments. His death happened in the year 1563, when he was no more than 48.

FERTE' (the MARESCHAL DE), whole family name was Henry de Sennecterre, was a very celebrated French general, in the reigns of Louis XIII. and his fucceffor. He first fignalized himfelf at the fiege of Rochelle, in 1626, and afterwards in many battles, particularly that of Rocroi in 1647, and Lens in 1648. In 1650, he defeated the duke of Lorraine, in the battle of St. Nicholas, with great flaughter, and the next year was advanced to the dignity of mareschal of France. He afterwards diftinguished himself greatly on many occasions, but in 1656, had the misfortune to be taken prisoner by the Spaniards at the siege of Valenciennes; yet without any imputation on his courage or conduct, which he again displayed in 1657 and 1658. He died in 1681, at the advanced age of 82. He was a rigid disciplinarian, and in all respects an excellent general, but envious of the glory of Turenne, whom, great as he was, he could not equal.

FESTUS (POMPEIUS), a celebrated grammarian of antiquity, who abridged a work of "Verrius Flaccus de fignificatione "verborum." Flaccus lived under the emperors Augustus and Tiberius; and his work has been greatly commended by Pliny, Aulus Gellius, Prifcian, and other ancient writers. Feftus took the pains to abridge it; not however without using great liberties: for he was not content with striking out a vast number of words, but pretended to criticize the reft, and in a manner, as Voffius has observed [Q], not favourable to the reputation of Another writer, however, afterwards revenged this Flaccus. treatment of Flaccus, by fhewing the fame to Festus. For in the eighth century, Paul the deacon, undertaking to make a fecond abridgment of the first, fo maimed and disfigured poor Festus, that it was scarce possible to know him. He lay in this miserable state, till a considerable fragment of him being found in the library of cardinal Farnese, some pains were taken to put him again into a little order. Scaliger, Fulvius Urfinus, Aldus Minucius, and others, have published these fragments of Festus; but the most complete edition is that of Paris, 1681, in 4to. published by Mr. Dacier, for the use of the dauphin. This work is alfo to be found among the Auctores Latinæ Linguæ, collected by Gothofredus in 1585, and afterwards reprinted with emendations and additions at Geneva, in 1622. Scaliger fays that Festus is an author of great use to those who would attain the knowledge of the Latin tongue with accuracy.

FETTI (DOMENICO), an eminent painter, was born at Rome in 1589, and educated under Lodovico Civoli, a famous Florentine painter. As foon as he quitted the school of Civoli, he went to Mantua; where the paintings of Julio Romano afforded him the means of becoming a great painter. From them he took his colouring, the boldnefs of his characters, and a beautiful manner of thinking: and it were to be wished, that he had copied the nice correctness of that master. Cardinal Ferdinand Gonzaga, afterwards duke of Mantua, discovered the merit of Fetti, retained him at his court, furnished him with means of continuing his studies, and at last employed him in adorning his palace. Fetti painted with great force, but fometimes, as is faid, too darkly; was very delicate in his thoughts; had a grandeur of expression, and a mellowness of pencil, that relished with the connoisseurs. His pictures are fcarce, and much fought after. He painted very little for churches. Going to Venice, he abandoned himfelf to diforderly courfes, which, breaking his constitution, put an end to his life in its very prime; for he was only in his 35th year. The duke of Mantua regretted him exceedingly, and fent for his father and fifter, whom he took care of afterwards. The fister painted well. She became a nun, and exercised her talent in the convent, which the adorned with feveral of her works. Other religious houses in Mantua were also decorated with her paintings.

FEVAR-

FEVARDENTIUS, or FEU-ARDENT (FRANCIS), a Franciscan friar, was born at Coutances in Lower Normandy, in 1541; and might have inherited a large eftate, had he not chosen to wear a monk's habit rather than a fword. However, he feems to have judged rightly of himfelf and his talents; for he obtained, fays Bayle, a much greater reputation under this drefs, than he would have done in that of a foldier. Mr. Daille observes, that " he deserved his name perfectly wella " for that he was fo transported with anger, hatred, and fury, " as to be feldom in his right fenfes." Feu-ardent in French, fignifies a brifk fire; and, indeed, he was as fiery a zealot, and as bitter a perfecutor, as the protestants ever had. He was one of the most feditious preachers who raised the disturbances against Henry III. and Henry IV. nor did he fpare even the chief of the leaguers, when he thought him guilty of fomething that might prejudice the caufe of the rebels. He wrote commentaries on fome books of scripture, and translated some works of the fathers into French. He published at Paris in 1576, " The five books of Irenæus, revifed and corrected in fèveral places from an ancient manuscript, with an addition of five entire chapters, which were in his manufcript at the end of the fifth book. He has added, at the end of each chapter, fuch notes as he thought necessary for the better understanding of his author. They are for the most part useful and learned: but there are some which go beyond the bounds that a commentator ought to fet to himfelf; fince his defign must not be to appear learned, or to treat controverted subjects, but only to explain his author. The fecond edition printed at Cologne in 1596, and again in 1630, and at Paris in 1639, is better than the first, because it contains the Greek paffages of Irenæus, which were in Epiphanius, and fome other ancient writers." Thus the impartial Dupin, in his account of Irenzus. Feuardent published also fome books of controverfy, which the catholics themfelves own to have been written with too much passion. He died at Paris in 1610.

FEUILLEE (LOUIS), a French naturalist, was born in Provence 1660. He was of the academy of sciences, and botanist to the king. He undertook, by order of Louis XIV. several voyages into different parts of the world, and did much honour to his monarch; who caused an observatory to be built for him at Marseilles, and settled upon him a pension. He died at this place in 1732. There is by him a "Journal des Observations "Physiques, Mathematiques, & Botaniques," made upon the coasts of South America and New Spain, in three volumes, 4to. This Journal is faid to be very exact and curious, though written harshly and inelegantly. Upon his return from the South Sea, he prefented the king with a large volume in folio; in which he had defigned or drawn from nature all the curiofities  $K_3$  of of that vaft country. This interefting work is reposited in the king's library; as is also the Journal of his voyage to the Canaries, in order to fix the first meridian line. At the end of this Journal is a short history of these islands.

FEVRE (JACQUES LE), or Jacobus Faber, Stapulenfis. A very little man, fays Bayle, and of mean extraction, but a great genius, supported by much learning, was born at Estaples in Picardy, about 1440; and was one of those who began to expel the barbarifin which reigned in the univerfity of Paris. He became fulpected of Lutheranifm, and was obliged to give way to the outrage of certain ignorant zealots, who fuffered him not to reft. He quitted the field, and retired from Paris to Meaux; where the bishop was William Briconnet, a lover of the sciences and learned men. The perfecution raifed by the Franciscans at Meaux obliging the bifhop, against his inclination, to be a good, catholic, Faber was forced to retire to Blois, and from thence to Guienne. Margaret queen of Navarre, fister to Francis I. honoured him with her protection; fo that he enjoyed full liberty at Nerac till his death, which happened in 1537, when he was little short of a hundred.

He was one of those, who, like Erasmus, though they did not outwardly depart from the church of Rome, and alfo difapproved in fome things the conduct of those who established the reformation in Germany, yet at the bottom were very indifferent papists. He took a journey to Strasburg, by the queen of Navarre's order, to confer with Bucer and Capito, concerning the reformation of the church. He published, so early as 1512, a translation of St. Paul's epistles, with critical notes and a commentary, wherein he frequently cenfures the Vulgate. He published, in 1522, the like notes and commentary upon the other parts of the New Testament. Natalis Bedda, a divine of Paris, cenfured his divinity, as well as that of Erafmus: and the inquifitors of Rome under Clement VIII. put his commentary on the whole New Testament in the catalogue of prohibited books, till it should be corrected and purged from its errors. Father Simon has passed a judgement on this work of Faber's, which he concludes by observing, that " he ought to be " placed among the most able commentators of the age. But " Erafmus, who wrote at the fame time, and with infinitely " more politenefs, greatly leffened his reputation. The works " of Faber are no longer read at Paris; whereas those of Eraf-" mus are highly effeemed even at this day [R]."

His natural moderation left him, when he wrote against his friend Erasinus, and the quarrel did not end at all to his advantage. Faber was angry at Erasmus for no other reason, but because he had not adopted all his opinions upon certain passages of fcripture, when he published his notes on the New Testament. He rudely attacked him, and accused him of having advanced impious notions. Erafmus defended himfelf; and when he had faid what was fufficient for that purpole, begged of his adverfary the continuance of his friendship, affuring him, that he had always loved and efteemed him. The letter he wrote him on this occasion is dated April 1517; the very year that Luther began to preach. Erafmus was very fincere in his professions to Faber; and, accordingly, was much difpleafed with the compliments which he received from his friends on his victory, defiring them not to change their opinion of Faber, on account of this quarrel. What Erasmus wrote on this head to Tonstal, the English ambassador at Paris, in 1517, does fo much honour both to himfelf and Faber, that it is but right to transcribe it. " Quæ scribis de nostra ad Fabrum Apo-" logi, &c." that is, " What you write concerning my answer " to Faber, though I know you wrote it with a most friendly. " intention, yet gave me uneafiness on a double account: be-" caufe it revives my past grief, and becaufe you feem, on this " occasion, to speak with less esteem than I could wish of "Faber; a man, who for integrity and humanity has fcarcely " his equal among thoufands. In this fingle inftance only has " he acted unlike himfelf: in attacking a friend, who deferved 45 not fuch ufage, in fo violent a manner. But what man was " ever wife at all times? And I wifh I could have fpared my " adversary [s]: but now I am afflicted for two reasons; both " because I am constrained to engage with such a friend, and " because I perceive some to think less candidly of Faber, for " whom it is my earnest defire that all should entertain the " utmost esteem [T]." Can there, fays Bayle, be more heroic sentiments than these? They had their effect on Faber, who repented of his attack, and made no reply.

Some very fingular things are related of his laft hours. Margaret of Navarre was very fond of Faber, and vifited him often. He and other learned men, whofe converfation greatly pleafed the queen, dined with her one day; when, in the midft of the entertainment, Faber began to weep. The queen afking the reafon, he anfwered, That the enormity of his fins threw him into grief: not that he had ever been guilty of debaucheries, or the like; but he reckoned it a very great crime, that having known the truth, and taught it to perfons who had fealed it with their blood, he had had the weaknefs to keep himfelf in a place of refuge, far from the countries where crowns of martyrdom were diffributed. The queen, who was eloquent, comforted him; yet, going to bed, he was found dead a few hours after. Bayle fays, it is hard to doubt the truth of this ftory, and hard not to doubt it, and canvaffes the point. He wrote feveral works in divinity, befides those above-mentioned, but they are not much efteemed at prefent.

FEVRE (NICOLAS LE), or Nicolaus Faber, a very ingenious, learned, and pious man, was born at Paris, June 2, 1544 [U]; and liberally educated by his mother, his father dying in his infancy. During the course of his studies, a terrible accident happened to him. As he was cutting a pen, a piece of the quill flew into his eye, and gave him fuch exceffive pain, that hastily lifting up his hand to it, he struck it out with the knife. Having finished his application to the languages, he was sent to study the civil law at Tholouse, Padua, and Bologna. He did not come back till he had travelled through Italy: and he refided eighteen months in Rome, about 1571, where he cultivated a friendship with Sigonius, Muretus, and other learned men. He there acquired his tafte for antiquity, and brought away with him many curiofities. Upon his return to France, he applied himfelf wholly to letters, and would hear no mention of marriage. His mother and brother dying in 1581, he lived with Peter Pithœus, with whom he was very intimate; and having no occupation but ftudy, he employed himfelf in reading the ancients, in correcting them by MSS. of which he had a great number in his own library, and in writing notes upon them. He laboured particularly on Seneca, whom he publisted in 1587, with a learned preface and notes. He applied himfelf also to studies of a different kind, to the mathematics particularly; in which he fucceeded fo well, that he difcovered immediately the defect in Scaliger's demonstration of the Quadrature of the Circle. When Henry the Fourth of France became at length the peaceable poffeffor of the crown, he appointed Faber preceptor to the prince of Condé. During this important truft, he found time to labour upon fome confiderable works; and composed that fine preface to the fragments of Hilary, in which he difcovered fo many important facts relating to the hiftory of Arianism, not known before. After the death of Henry IV. he was chosen, by the queen, preceptor to Louis XIII. He died in 1611.

Though he laboured intenfely all his life, he was one of those learned men, who are not ambitious of the character of author, but content with studying for themselves and their friends. He applied himself in his youth to the belles lettres and history, which he never neglected. Civil law, philosophy, and morality, were afterwards his occupation: and at the latter part of life, he fpent his time chiefly among ecclefiaftical antiquities. As he kept up a correspondence with all the learned of Europe, fo when he heard of any perfon about to publish an author, or to compose a work of his own, he took care to affist him with MSS. and to furnish him with memoirs, but without fuffering any mention to be made of his name, though his injunctions upon this point were not always observed. His own works, which were but few, were collected after his death by John le Begue, his friend, and printed at Paris, 1614, in a simall volume, 4to. They consist of pieces in Latin and French.

The praifes beftowed on Nicolas le Fevre, by Baillet, and almost all the critics of the time, are of the most exalted kind; an advantage which his very great merits would not perhaps have gained, had they not been fet off by his modesty. He was admired and loved, but not feared. Lipsius pronounced him a perfect critic, almost the only one capable of correcting and polishing the works of others; and whose learning, judgement, and diligence, knew no other bounds than what his modesty prefcribed. Of the fame cast are the eulogies of others upon him.

FEVRE (TANNEGUI LE) or Tanaquil Faber, a very learned man, father of Madame Dacier, was born at Caen in Normandy in 1615. His father determined to educate him to learning, at the defire of one of his brothers, who was an ecclefiaftic, and who promifed to take him into his houfe under his own care. He had a genius for mufic, and early became accomplifhed in it; but his uncle proved too fevere a preceptor in languages, he therefore fludied Latin with a tutor at home, and acquired the knowledge of Greek by his own efforts. The Jefuits at the college of La Fleche were defirous to detain him among them, and his father would have perfuaded him to take orders, but he refifted both.

Having continued fome years in Normandy, he went to Paris; where, by his abilities, learning, and addrefs, he gained the friendship of perfons of the highest distinction. M. de Noyers recommended him to cardinal de Richelieu, who fettled on him a penfion of 2000 livres, to infpect all the works printed at the Louvre. The cardinal defigned to have made him principal of the college which he was about to erect at Richelieu, and to fettle on him a farther stipend: but he died, and Mazarine who fucceeded not giving the fame encouragement to learning, the Louvre prefs became almost useles, and Faber's pension was very ill paid. His hopes being thus at an end, he quitted his employment; yet continued some years at Paris, pursuing his studies, and publishing various works. Some years after he declared himfelf a protestant, and became a professor in the univerfity of Saumur; which place he accepted, preferably to the professorfhip profefforship of Greek at Nimeguen, to which he was invited at the fame time. His great merit and character foon drew to him from all parts of the kingdom, and even from foreign countries, numbers of scholars, fome of whom boarded at his house. He had afterwards a contest with the university and confistory of Saumur, on account of having afferted in one of his works, that " he could pardon Sappho's paffion for those of her own fex. " fince it had infpired her with fo beautiful an ode upon that " fubject." Upon this difpute he would have refigned his place, if he could have procured one elfewhere: and at last, in 1672, he was invited upon advantageous terms to the univerfity of Heidelberg. He was preparing to remove thither, but was feized with a fever, of which he died Sept. 12, 1672. He left a fon of his own name, author of a finall tract " De futilitate Poetices," printed 1697 in 12mo, who was a minister in Holland, and afterwards lived in London, then went to Paris, where he embraced the Romish religion; and two daughters, one of whom was the celebrated madam Dacier, and another married to Paul Bauldri, professor at Utrecht. Huetius tells, that " he had al-<sup>46</sup> molt perfuaded Faber to reconcile himfelf to the church of " Rome," from which he had formerly deferted ; " and that ** Faber fignified to him his refolution to do fo, in a letter writ-" ten a few months before his death, which prevented him from " executing his defign." Voltaire, if he may be credited, fays he was a philosopher rather than a Hugonot, and defpised the Calvinists though he lived among them.

T. le Fevre was agreeable in his perfon, and his ftature above the common ftandard; but a little ftiff in his behaviour. He was good-natured, but fomewhat blunt in his converfation. He had a ftrong averfion to falfhood, and loquacity. He was always very elegant in his drefs, and fo expensive in this article, that he is faid to have fent conftantly to England for whole boxes of gloves, filk ftockings, &c. and to Paris, and even to Rome, for all forts of effences, perfumes, and powders. He was fubject to fudden ftarts of paffion in his family, which however were foon over. His books, his children, and his garden, in which he cultivated all kinds of flowers himfelf, were his ordinary diverfions. He eat and flept little.

He published, 1. "Luciani de morte Peregrini libellus, cum "notis, 1653," 4to. He thought this the best of Lucian's pieces; and having a design to give an edition of all his works, which, however, he never executed, he published this by way of specimen. 2. "Diatribe, Flavii Josephi de Jesu Christo teftimonium suppositum esse, 1655," 8vo. 3. "Luciani Timon," with a Latin version and notes. 4. "Epistolarum pars prima, "1659," 4to. "Pars secunda: cui accedunt Aristophanis "Concionatrices, Græcè & Latinè cum notis, 1665," 4to. 5. "Journal

5. "Journal du Journal, ou, Cenfure de la Cenfure ;" and afterwards, 6. "Seconde Journaline," both in 1666, 4to. 7. " Abregé des Vies des Poetes Grecs, &c." that is, " A short " Account of the Lives of the Greek Poets. The marriage of " Belphegor. The Life of Thefeus, from Plutarch, 1665." in 12mo. 8. " Convivium Xenophontis." 9. " Platonis Al-" cibiades primus." 10. " Plutarchus de Superstitione :" all in French translations, 1666; as was the year after, 11. "Arif-" tippi Vita à D. Laertio." This last was inferted by De Sallengre, in his " Memoirs de Literature, tom. ii. p. 2." In the fame volume of the fame work was published, 12. "Methode " pour commencer les humanités Grecques et Latines :" tranflated in English, and published in a book, entitled, "A com-" pendious way of teaching ancient and modern languages, for-" merly practifed by the learned Tanaquil Faber, in the edu-" cation of one of his fons, and of his daughter, the celebrated " madam Dacier. To which are added, fome tracts and obser-" vations on the fame fubject by feveral eminent men, namely, " Roger Afcham, Richard Carew, Milton, Locke, &c. With " an account of the education of the dauphin, by Boffuet bifhop " of Meaux, 1723," 12mo. 13. "Fabulæ ex Locmanis Ara-" bico Latinis verfibus redditæ, 1673," 12mo; and fubjoined, the year after, to the first volume of the second edition of his " Epistolæ." 14. He published notes upon several Greek and Latin authors of antiquity : namely, Apollodorus, Longinus, Anacreon, Aristophanes, Ælian, Lucretius, Phædrus, Virgil, Horace, Terence, Utropius, Justin, Dionysius Perigetes, and others. He was undoubtedly a man of tafte and genius, and has been justly and highly commended by many critics.

FEVRET (CHARLES), an eminent French civilian, was born in 1583. In 1602, he went into Germany to attend the celebrated Bongars, who was fent by Henry IV. refident from France, into the empire : but foon left him, to fludy the law at Heidelberg, where the well-known Godefroy was at that time law-professor. Godefroy paid great attention to Fevret, who was recommended by feveral perfons of quality : he received him into his house, and caused him to hold public disputations, which he did with great applause. In 1607, Fevret returned to Dijon, where he married Mrs. Anne Brunet of Beaulne, by whom he had nineteen children; fourteen of which they brought up together during eight years. After his wife's death, which happened in 1637, he caused his bed to be made one half narrower, and never would marry again. He gained great reputation at the bar at Dijon; and was chosen counfellor to the three estates of the province. In 1629, Lewis the XIIIth being come to Dijon, in order to punish a popular infurrection, Fevret was chosen to petition the king, that he would graciously be pleafed to to pardon the guilty. He spoke for all the corporations, and made fo elegant a difcourfe, that the king commanded him to print it, and to fend it to him at Lyons. His majefty pardoned the authors of the fedition, and granted to Fevret the place of counfellor in the parliament of Dijon: but not being permitted to fill it by a deputy, he refused it, because he would not quit his profession of an advocate, and contented himself with the posts of king's counfellor and fecretary to the court, with a pension of 900 livres. He wrote a history of this infurrection, which was published some time after. As he was frequently fent a deputy to the court, he was known to de Morillac, keeper of the feals of France, who honoured him with his friendship. As early as 1626 and 1627, Monsieur, the king's brother, had chosen him for his counsellor in ordinary in all his affairs: and the prince of Condé had made him intendant of his house, and of his affairs in Burgundy. He was continued in the fame post by his son Louis de Bourbon prince of Condé; and, during the life of these two princes, he was honoured with their favour in a diftinguished manner. Frederic Casimir, prince palatine of the Rhine, and his confort Amelia Antwerpia, born princefs of Orange, chofe him alfo their counfel and intendant for their affairs in Burgundy. He had a particular correspondence with all the learned civilians in his time. He died at Dijon 1661, in his 78th year.

He published in 1645, a small Latin treatise, intituled, "De "Claris Fori Burgundici Oratoribus;" and his "Traité de "l'Abus" in 1653. This last celebrated work was written at the folicitation of the second Lewis de Bourbon prince of Condé. He enlarged it afterwards by one half, which occasioned a second edition of it after his death, in 1667. It was reprinted a third time ten years after; but the best edition is that of Lyons, 1736, in two volumes, folio. He made an excellent translation of Pibrac's Quatrains, in Latin verses, printed at Lyons, 1667, with a commentary under this title, "De officiis vitæ humanæ, sive, " in Pibraci Tetrasticha Commentarius." Several authors have mentioned him and his works in a very honourable manner.

FEVRET de Fontette (CHARLES, MARIE) great grandfon of the former, was born at Dijon in 1710, and educated to the profeffion of the law. By diftinguishing himfelf in fome great causes he obtained a pension from the government. He laboured for feveral years with a view to publish a new edition of Le Long's "Bibliothéque Historique de la France," and compiled fo much matter as to extend that work from a single volume in folio, to four vast folios, besides a fifth containing indexes, &c. At the time of his death, which happened in 1772, he was a member of the French Academy of Belles-Lettres, and director of the

the University of Dijon. He was a man pleasing in society, and of much zeal, both literary and patriotic.

FEYDEAU (MATTHEW,) born at Paris in 1616, a doctor of the Sorbonne, a great defender of M. Arnauld, which attachment brought him into many difficulties, infomuch that he died in exile from Paris, at Annonai in Vivares, in 1694. He wrote "Meditations on Providence, and on the Mercy of God," under the feigned name of the Sieur de PRESSIGNY; "the "Catechifin of Grace," published in 1659, 12mo. and fome other works.

FICHARD (JOHN,) a lawyer, of Frankfort on the Maine, and Syndic of that town, where he died in 1581, at the age of 69. He was author of feveral works, of which the most famous was his "Virorum, qui superiori nostroque seculo eruditione "et doctrina illustres atque memorabiles suerunt, Vitæ." Frankfort, 4to. 1536. This was his first work ; he afterwards published, 2. "Vitæ Jurisconsultorum," 1565. 3. "Onomasticon philosophico-medico synonymum." 1574. 4. "De "Cautelis," 1577. 5. "Concilium Matrimoniale," 1580.

FICINUS (MARSILIUS), a celebrated Italian, was born at Florence in 1433, and educated at the expence of Lorenzo de Medicis. He attained a perfect knowledge of the Greek and Latin tongues, and became a great philosopher, a great physician, and a great divine. He was in the highest favour with Lorenzo and Cosmo de Medicis, who provided him plentifully with every thing he wanted, and made him a canon of the cathedral church of Florence. He applied himfelf intenfely to the fludy of philosophy; and, while others were striving who fhould be the deepest read in Aristotle, who was then the philofopher in fashion, he devoted himself wholly to Plato. He was indeed the first who restored the Platonic Philosophy in the West; for the better effecting of which, he translated into Latin the whole works of Plato. There is a story, of uncertain authority, that when he had finished his translation, he communicated it to his friend Marcus Musurus, to have his approbation of it : but that Musurus difliking it, he composed it all over again. He had no fooner ended his translation of Plato, but he was informed by John Picus earl of Mirandula, that Cofmo defired to have Plotinus translated. This task Ficinus undertook and finished. He not only translated Plotinus, but also made summaries and analyfes of each book. He translated alfo the works. or part of them at least, of Proclus, Jamblicus, Porphyrius, and other celebrated Platonifts.

In his younger years, Ficinus lived like a philosopher; and too much so, as is faid, to the neglect of piety. However, Savanorola coming to Florence, Ficinus went with every body else to hear his sermons; and while he attended them for the fake of the preacher's eloquence, he imbibed a ftrong fense of religion, and devoted himfelf henceforward more efpecially to the duties of it. To the liberality of the Medicis, he was indebted for a delightful retreat near Florence, where he refided as much as he could, and enjoyed his friends, having occasion for the benefit of country air. His conftitution was feeble, and his life was protracted to the age of 66, only by great attention, and much art. He was addicted to judicial astrology. He died at Correggio in 1499, and, as Baronius assures us upon the testimony of what he calls credible authors, appeared immediately after his death to his friend Michael Mercatus : to whom, it feems, he had promifed to appear, in order to confirm what he had taught concerning the immortality of the foul. His writings; facred and prophane, are very numerous. Among the former are his Treatife of the Christian Religion, dedicated to Lorenzo de Medicis; eight books of the Immortality of the Soul and Eternal Happiness; a Commentary upon St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, &c. Among the latter, " De Sole liber " Allegoricus et Anagogicus; De Lumine liber; De Vita; " De Voluptate," &c. His works were all collected and printed at Venice in 1516, and at Bafil in 1561 and 1576, and at Paris 1641, in two volumes, folio. Twelve books of his Epistles, among which are many Treatifes, were printed separately in folio at Venice, 1495, and at Nuremberg, 1497, in quarto.

FICORONI (FRANCESCO), a famous Roman Medallift, Antiquary, and Cicerone, author of many works on those fubjects in the Italian language, particularly "Avertimenti delle "Medaglie antiche," mentioned by Menckenius, and written about 1694. 2. "Offervazioni fopra l'antichità di Roma de-"fcritte nel Diario Italico," &c. 1709. 3. "Della Bolla d'oro "de' Fanciulli nobili Romani," &c. 1732. 4. "De' Tali ed "altro Strumenti lusori degli antichi Romani," 1734. 5. "Le "Maschere Sceniche e figure Comiche de' antichi Romani," 1736. 6. "i Piombi antichi," 1740, all published at Rome. The two latter were translated into Latin, the first entitled "De "Larvis Scenicis et figuris comicis antiquorum Romanorum," 1750. The fecond "De Plumbeis antiquorum numissus, "tam facris quam profanis," 1750, both by Dominicus Cantagallius, whose real name, Winckelman feems to fay, was Archangelo Contucci. He wrote also, 7. "Le Vessigia è "Rarita di Roma antica, richercate et spiegate," 1744: a fecond book entitled "La Singolarità di Roma moderna," and fome other tracts. He was born in 1664, and died in 1747.

FIDANZA (JOHANNES), generally called St. Bonaventure; an Etruscan Theologist, Philosopher, and Poet; styled also doctor Seraphicus, born 1221; died 1274.

FIDDES (RICHARD), an English divine, and an ingenious and polite writer, was born of reputable parents, at Hunmanby near Scarborough in Yorkshire in 1671. After being instructed at a private school in that neighbourhood, he was admitted of Corpus Chrifti, and then of University-college, in Oxford; where by his parts and addrefs he gained many friends. He did not, however, continue there; but, after taking a batchelor of arts degree in 1693, returned to his relations, and married, in the fame year, a gentlewoman of good family and fortune. In 1694, he was ordained priest by Dr. Sharp, archbp. of York; and, not long after, prefented to the rectory of Halfham in that county. Halfham, being fituated in a marsh, proved the occafion of much ill health to Fiddes and his family; and he had the misfortune, while there, to be fuddenly fo deprived of his speech, as never after to be able to utter words very articulately, unlefs, which is rather extraordinary, he was elevated with two or three glaffes of wine more than usual. His diocefan, however, dispensed with his residence upon his benefice for the future; upon which he removed to Wickham, and continued there fome months. Being no longer able to difplay his talents in preaching, which before were confelledly great, and having a numerous family, he refolved to devote himfelf entirely to writing. He was not the first who had been forced to augment out an infufficient maintenance, by applying to that way of life: Bayle and Le Clerc, much greater men, had felt the fame neceffity. For this purpose, he went to London in 1712; and, by the favour of dean Swift, was introduced to the earl of Oxford, who received him kindly, and made him one of his chaplains. The dean had a great efteem for Fiddes, and recommended his caufe with the warmth and fincerity of a friend. The queen foon after appointed him chaplain to the garrifon at Hull, and would probably have provided handfomely for him, had not death prevented her. Lofing his patrons upon the change of the ministry in 1714, he lost the above-mentioned chaplainship; and the expences of his family increasing, as his ability to fupply them leffened, he was obliged to apply himfelf to writing with greater affiduity than ever. Neverthelefs, he continued in high efteem with contemporary writers, especially those of his own party; and was encouraged by fome of the most eminent men of those times. By the generofity of his friend and relation Dr. Radcliffe, he took the degree of batchelor of divinity; and was afterwards honoured by the university with that of doctor, partly in confideration of his abilities as a writer, and partly, no doubt, on account of his politics. He died in 1725, aged 54 years, at Putney, leaving behind him an unhappy family; confifting of a wife and fix children; and was buried in Fulham church church-yard, near the remains of bishop Compton, to whom he had been much obliged.

We fhall have occasion to mention other particulars, relating to his life and character, in the catalogue of his works, which is now to follow. His first publication appears to have been, 1. " A Prefatory Epistle concerning fome Remarks to be pub-" lifhed on Homer's Iliad: occafioned by the propofals of Mr. " Pope towards a new English version of that Poem, 1714," 12mo. It is addreffed to Dr. Swift. But the first work by which he diftinguished himfelf in any confiderable degree, was, 2. " Theologia Speculativa: or the first part of a body of " divinity under that title, wherein are explained, the princi-" ples of Natural and Revealed Religion, 1718," folio. This met with a favourable reception from the public: neverthelefs, when Stackhouse afterwards executed a work of a similar nature, he could not avoid fpeaking lightly of it. " Dr. Fiddes," fays he, " was a polite rather than a learned man: and his want " of books, and other proper encouragements, put him under " the neceffity of entertaining us with a fine ftyle and manner " of expression, whereof he was certainly a very great master, " when he knew himfelf infufficient to go to the bottom of " his argument. It is a melancholy reflection, that a perfor " of his genius should be fo far neglected by the world, as to " live in want of any thing : but, while we lament his mis-" fortune in this respect, we cannot but at the fame time con-" dole with his reader, who, in the latter part of his work " more efpecially, to his great joy, will meet with an abun-" dance of excellent words, but to his great furprife and " difcontent, will meet with words only." Dr. Fiddes's fecond part is entitled, " Theologia Practica, wherein are ex-* plained the duties of Natural and Revealed Religion;" and was pulished in 1720, folio. The fame year also he published in folio, 3. "Fifty-two practical Discourses on several Sub-" jects, fix of which were never before printed." Thefe, as well as his Body of Divinity, were published by fubscription.

But the work which was most noticed, which gained him the most friends, and certainly the most enemies, was, 4. "The "Life of Cardinal Wolfey, 1724," in folio. It is dedicated to the chancellors, vice-chancellors, doctors, and other members of the two universities; and the subscription for it was large. This work was attacked with great feverity in "The "London Journal," and the author charged him with being a papist: who thereupon published, 5. "An Answer to Britan-"nicus, Compiler of the London Journal, 1725." This answer consists of two letters; in the first of which he endeavours to obviate the charge of popery; in the fecond, to shew his impartiality impartiality in the life of this cardinal. Neverthelefs, Dr. Knight, in the "Life of Erasinus," published a little after our author's death, attacked him in the severest terms, accusing him of fpeaking irreverently of Erafmus, " probably," fays he, " because he had by his writings favoured the Reformation."-Dr. Fiddes, he fays, villifies the Reformation, depreciates the instruments of it, and palliates the absurdities of the Romish church. He declares alfo that the life was written at the folicitation of bishop. Atterbury, on the occasion of the dispute in which he was then engaged with archbp. Wake: and that Atterbury fupplied him with materials, fuggested matter and method, entertained him at his deanery, procured him fubfcribers, and " laid the whole plan for forming fuch a life as might blacken the Reformation, cast lighter colours upon popery, and even make way for a popish pretender." Fiddes, indeed, had given occasion for part of this surmise, by faying, that "a very learned prelate generoufly offered to let me compile the life of cardinal Wolfey in his houfe." Sufpicion was likewife heightened by the eulogium he made on Atterbury, a little before his deprivation. Though it may be difficult to determine; how far this author was at the bottom an enemy to the Reformation, yet all who have read his life of Wolfey, must allow that it was undertaken, and written, under the influence of a partyspirit.

The great encouragement which the life of Wolfey obtained. prompted him to undertake the lives of fir Thomas More and bishop Fisher: but when he had gone through a great part of this work, he lost his manuscript. He published, 6. "A General Treatife of Morality, formed upon the principles of Natural Reafon only; with a preface in anfwer to two Effays lately published in the FABLE OF THE BEES, and some incidental remarks upon an INQUIRY CONCERNING VIRTUE, by the right honourable Anthony earl of Shaftesbury;" in 1724, 8vo. In his preface, he defends fome opinions of Shaftesbury against the author of the "Search into the Nature of Society;" and afterwards vindicates Dr. Radcliffe from the aspersions of the same author, on account of his benefactions to the univerfity of Oxford. 7. "A Preparative to the Lord's Supper." 8. "A Letter in answer to one from a Freethinker, occasioned by the late duke of Buckingham's epitaph: wherein certain passages in it that have been thought exceptionable are vindicated, and the doctrine of the foul's immortality afferted. To which is prefixed, a version of the Epitaph, agreeably to the explication given of it in the Answer;" in 1721, Svo. The epitaph and version, which are here fubjoined, will fatisfy the reader that Fiddes mifunderstood it, without being at the trouble to read his pamphlet :

VOL. VI.

Pra

Pro Rege fæpe, pro Republica femper-Dubius, non improbus vixi. Incertus morior, fed inturbatus. Humanum est errare, & nescire. Christum adveneror, Deo consido, Omnipotenti, benevolentissimo. Ens Entium, miserere mei.

Much for the prerogative, ever for my country. I lived irregular, not profligate.
Though going to a flate unknown, I die refigned. Frailty and Ignorance attend on human life. Religioufly I worfhip Chrift, in God confide, Almighty, and most merciful.
O thou principle of all Beings, and first of Caufes, have compassion on me."

To conclude with a short character of Dr. Fiddes. He was an ingenious, not a very learned man. He had fo happy a memory, that he retained every thing he read, and never made ufe of notes in preaching. He was far from being a nervous writer, abounding in matter: he was, on the contrary, wordy; more for than probably he would have been, if his neceffities would have, allowed him time to contract his thoughts into a narrower compafs. It is reasonable to suppose, that he was sincere in his professions concerning the hierarchy; and as reasonable to suppofe, that he had no affection for popery. His misfortunes, in the latter part of his life, were chiefly owing to his strong attachment to a party: nevertheles, his application to his ftudies was fo intenfe, that he would frequently pafs whole nights in writing, which, together with his misfortunes, is fuppofed not a little to have hastened his death. He was reckoned, upon the whole, a good kind of man, but rather wanting in point of prudence, and by no means a manager of his money.

FIELD (RICHARD), an eminent divine of the church of England, was born of a reputable family at Hempftead in Hertfordihire, 1561; and at fixteen, admitted of Magdalen-college in Oxford: but, after taking his first degree, removed to Magdalen-hall. He continued feven years in this fituation, diftinguissed as a great divine, a great preacher, and a prodigious disputant: and then in 1594, being batchelor of divinity, was chosen reader in that faculty to the fociety of Lincoln's-Inn in London. There he was so much admired, that one of the members of the house became his patron, and gave him the living of Burrowclere in Hampshire. Soon after, he had the offer of St. Andrew's in Holborn, London, a living of greater value, and more in the way to preferment: but he chose to continue where he was, liking a referved life, where he might, fays' fays Wood, ferve God, and follow his studies. In 1598, being then doctor in divinity, he was made chaplain to queen Elizabeth; and about that time commenced a friendship with the famous Hooker, whom he refembled in his great learning and humility. Upon the accession of James, he was made chaplain in ordinary to him; and, by the king's own appointment, was fent for to Hampton-court. In 1604, he became canon of Windfor; and the fame year, when the king was to be entertained at Oxford with scholastic exercises, was sent for out of the country to bear a part in the divinity-act. In 1609, he became dean of Gloucester; and the year after, published a second edition, augmented with a fifth book, and an appendix, of his " Four Books of the Church." This work is dedicated to Villiers, afterwards duke of Buckingham; and confirmed all men in the high notions they had conceived of Field's great abilities and learning. He was confulted as an oracle; and the most learned divines feldom went to him, without having many queftions to fubmit to his opinion. When king James heard him preach the first time, he faid, " This is a FIELD for God to dwell in:" an expression like that of Fuller, who, citing something out of his books upon the church, styles him "that learned divine, whofe memory fmelleth like a FIELD which the Lord hath bleffed [x]." The king had once an intention to fend him into Germany, with a view of composing the differences between the Lutherans and Calvinist; but something prevented it. His majesty, however, retained the same good opinion of him to the last, and defigned to make him a bishop. Salisbury was the fee first intended for him, but that being otherwise bestowed at the folicitation of great perfonages, the king was refolved to give him Oxford; and fir George Villiers, in a letter dated July 11, 1616, told him, that "if he was minded to take that fee upon him, he fhould repair to the court, kifs the king's hand, and hold his benefices in commendam with it." God, however, was pleafed, as Wood fays, to prefer him to a better place; for, Nov. 21st following, he died, aged 55 years. He was esteemed, fays the fame author, " a principal maintainer of protestancy, a powerful preacher, a profound schoolman, exact difputant, and fo admirably well-knowing in the controversies between the protestants and papists, that few, or none, went beyond him. He had a great memory; and any book he read he was able to carry away the fubiliance of. He was one that much laboured to heal the breaches of Christendom, was ready to embrace truth, wherefoever he found it. His defire, his prayers, his endeavours, were for peace, to make up the breaches of the church, not to widen differences, but a to compose them. He was a good and faithful pastor, and his care reached unto all churches. He was a loving hufband, a tender father, a good master and neighbour, and ready and willing to do good to all," &c. A very great and amiable character!

His books upon the church were reprinted at Oxford in 1628, folio. Befides thefe, he published a fermon preached before the king at Whitehall, upon Jude 3, in 1604; and a little before his death he had almost composed a book, entitled, "A View of the Controversies in Religion, which in these last times have caused the lamentable Divisions of the Christian World." But this book, not being finished, was never published, though a preface was written to it by its author.

FIELDING (HENRY), a well-known and justly celebrated writer, was born at Sharpham-Park in Somersetshire, April 22, 1707. His father, Edmund Fielding, elq. was grandfon to an earl of Denbigh, served under the duke of Marlborough, and towards the close of king George the First's reign, or the acceffion of George II. was promoted to the rank of a lieutenant-general. His mother was daughter to the first judge Gould, and aunt to fir Henry Gould, lately one of the judges of the Common Pleas. This lady, befides Henry, who feems to have been the eldest, had four daughters, and another fon named Edmund, who was an officer in the fea-fervice. Afterwards, in confequence of his father's fecond: marriage, Fielding had fix half-brothers, George, James, Charles, John, William, and Bafil. Of these nothing memorable is recorded, except of John, who will be the fubject of a fubsequent article : as will also Sarah, the fister of Henry Fielding."

H. Fielding received the first rudiments of his education at home, under the care, of the Rev. Mr. Oliver, for whom he feems to have had no great regard, as he is faid to have defigned a portrait of him, in the very humorous yet unfavourable character of parfon Trulliber, in his "Jofeph Andrews." From this fituation, he was removed to Eton school, where he had an opportunity of cultivating a very early intimacy and friendship with feveral young men, who afterwards became the first perfons in the kingdom, fuch as lord Lyttelton, Mr. Fox, Mr. Pitt, fir Charles Hanbury Williams, &c. who ever through life retained a warm regard for him. But thefe were not the only advantages he reaped at that great feminary of education; for, by an alliduous application to fludy, and the poffession of ftrong and peculiar talents, he became, before he left that fchool, uncommonly verfed in Greek authors, and a mafter of the Latin classics. Thus accomplished, at about eighteen years of age he left Eton, and went to Leyden, where he studied under the moit most celebrated civilians for about two years, when, the remittances from England not coming fo regularly as at first, he was obliged to return to London.

General Fielding's family being very greatly increased by his second marriage, it became impossible for him to make fuch appointments for this his eldest fon as he could have wished; his allowance was therefore either very ill paid, or entirely neglected. This unhappy fituation foon produced all the ill confequences which could arife from poverty and diffipation. Poffessed of a strong constitution, a lively imagination, and a dispofition naturally but little formed for œconomy, Henry Fielding found himfelf his own mafter, in a place where the temptations to every expensive pleasure are numerous, and the means of gratifying them eafily attainable. From this unfortunately pleafing fituation sprang the source of every misfortune or uneasinefs that Fielding afterwards felt through life. He very foon found that his finances were by no means proportioned to the brifk career of diffipation into which he had launched; yet, as difagreeable impressions never continued long upon his mind, but only rouzed him to struggle through his difficulties with the greater spirit, he flattered himself that he should find refources in his wit and invention, and accordingly commenced writer for the stage in the year 1727, at which time he had not more than attained the completion of his twentieth year.

His first dramatic attempt was a piece called " Love in feveral Mafques," which, though it immediately fucceeded the long and crowded run of the " Provoked Hufband," met with a favourable reception, as did likewife his fecond play, " The Temple Beau," which came out in the following year. He did not, however, meet with equal fuccefs in all his dramatic works, for he has even printed, in the title-page of one of his farces, as it was damned at the Theatre-royal Drury-lane; and he himfelf informs us, in the general preface to his mifcellanies, that for the "Wedding-Day," though acted fix nights, his profits from the house did not exceed fifty pounds. Nor did a much better fate attend some of his earlier productions, so that, though it was his lot always to write from neceffity, he would, probably, notwithstanding his writings, have laboured continually under that neceffity, had not the feverity of the public, and the malice of his enemies, met with a noble alleviation from the patronage of feveral perfons of diftinguished rank and character, particularly the late dukes of Richmond and Roxburgh, John duke of Argyle, the first lord Lyttelton, &c. the last-named of which noblemen, not only by his friendship foftened the rigour of our author's misfortunes while he lived, but alfo by his generous ardour has vindicated his character, and done justice to his memory, after death.

About

About fix or feven years after Fielding had begun to write for the ftage, he fell in love with and married mifs Craddock, a young lady from Salifbury, posselled of a very great fhare of beauty, and a fortune of about 1500l. and about the fame time his father dying, an eftate at Stower in Dorfetshire. of fomewhat better than 2001: per annum, came into his poffeffion. With this fortune, which, had it been conducted with prudence and occonomy, might have fecured to him a flate of independence for life, and, affisted by the productions of a genius unincumbered with anxietics and perplexity, might have even afforded him an affluent income, he determined to retire to his country feat. For his wife's fake, whom he loved to diffraction, he had also formed the resolution of bidding adjeu to all the follies and intemperances to which he had addicted himfelf in his fhort but very rapid career of a town life, and of living in domestic regularity.

But here one folly only took place of another, and family pride now brought on him all the inconveniencies in one place, that youthful diffipation and libertinifin had done in another. Fond of fhew and magnificence, he incumbered himfelf with a large retinue of fervants; and led by natural difposition to enjoy fociety and convivial mirth, he threw open his gates for hospitality, and fuffered his whole patrimony to be devoured up by hounds, horfes, and entertainments. Thus, in lefs than three years,

- " By fhewing a more fwelling port
- " Than his faint means would grant continuance,"

he diffipated those means: and from the mere passion of being esteemed a man of great fortune, reduced himself to the unpleafant fituation of having no fortune at all. He had thus, at the age of thirty, undermined his own supports, and had now no dependence but on his abilities. Not discouraged, however, he determined to exert his talents vigorously, applied himself closely to the study of the law, and, after the cuttomary time of probation at the Temple, was called to the bar, and made no inconfiderable figure in Westminster-hall.

To the practice of the law Fielding now adhered with great affiduity, both in the courts in London, and on the circuits, as long as his health permitted, and it is probable would have rifen to a confiderable degree of eminence in it, had not the intemperances of his early life put a check, by their confequences, to the progrefs of his fuccefs. Though but a young man, he began now to be molefted with fuch violent attacks from the gout, as rendered it impoffible for him to give fuch conftant attendance at the bar as the laborioufneis of that profeffion requires. Under thefe united feverities of pain and want, he purfued his refearches with an eagernefs peculiar to him: him: and, as a proof of the degree of eminence to which he might have rifen, he left two MS. volumes, in folio, on the crown law; to which branch he had most affiduously applied. It gives us an idea of the great force and vigour of his mind, if we confider him purfuing fo arduous a fludy under the exigencies of family diftrefs, with a wife and children whom he tenderly loved, looking up to him for fublistence, with a body, torn by the acutest pains, and a mind distracted by a thousand avocations, yet obliged, for immediate fupply, to produce almost extempore, a play, a farce, a pamphlet, or a newspaper. large number of fugitive political tracts, which had their value when the incidents were actually passing on the great scene of bufinefs, came from his pen. The periodical paper, called " The Champion," owed its chief support to his abilities. poetical epistie to the right honourable sir Robert Walpole, written in 1730, shews at once his acquaintance with diffress, and the firmnefs of mind with which he fupported it. Such other works, as were produced before his genius was come to its full growth, were, "An Effay on Conversation;" "An 66 A Effay on the Knowledge and Characters of Men;" Journey from this World to the next;" " The Hiftory of Jonathan Wild the Great;" &c.

But his genius is feen in full and vigorous exertion, first in " Joseph Andrews," and more completely in his "Tom Jones;" which are too well known, and too justly admired, to leave any room for expatiating on their merits. Soon after the publication of "Joseph Andrews," his last comedy was exhibited on the stage, entitled, " The Wedding-Day," which was attended with but an indifferent share of success. The repeated fhocks of illnefs, more and more difqualified him from purfuing the law: from business, therefore, he derived little or no fupplies, and his profpect grew every day more gloomy and melancholy. To these discouraging circumstances, if we add the infirmity of his wife, and the agonies he felt on her account, the measure of his affliction may be confidered as nearly full. That fortitude of mind, with which he met all the other calamities of life, deferted him on this most trying occasion; and her death, which happened about this time, brought on fuch a vehemence of grief, that his friends began to think him in danger of losing his reason. At length, when the first emotions of forrow were abated, philosophy administered her aid, his refo-lution returned, and he began again to struggle with his fortune. He engaged in two periodical papers fucceflively, with a iaudable and spirited defign of rendering fervice to his country. The first of these was called, " The True Patriot," which was undertaken during the rebellion of 1745. Precarious, however, as fuch means of subsistence unavoidably must be, it was fearcely L4 poffible poffible he should be thus enabled to recover his shattered fortunes, and was therefore at length obliged to accept of the office of an acting magistrate in the commission of the peace for the county of Middlefex, in which station he continued till near the time of his death. This office, however, feldom fails of being hateful to the populace, and of courfe is liable to many infamous and unjust imputations, particularly that of venality; a charge which the ill-natured world, not unacquainted with Fielding's want of œconomy and passion for expence, were but too ready to cast upon him. From this charge Mr. Murphy, in the life of this author, prefixed to a late edition of his works, has taken great pains to exculpate him; as likewife has Fielding himfelf, in his "Voyage to Lifbon," which may, with fome degree of propriety, be confidered as the last words of a dying man. Amidit all the laborious duties of his office, his invention could not lie still; but he found leifure to amuse himfelf, and afterwards the world, with "The Hiftory of Tom Jones." His " Amelia," was entirely planned and executed, while he was distracted by a multiplicity of avocations which furround a public magistrate; and his constitution, now greatly impaired and enfeebled, was labouring under feverer attacks of the gout than he had before felt: yet the activity of his mind, was not to be fubdued. At length, however, his whole frame was fo entirely shattered by continual inroads of complicated diforders, and the inceffant fatigue of bufinefs in his office, that, by the advice of his phyficians, as a last effort to preferve life, and support a broken constitution, he set out for Lisbon. Even in this distressful condition, his imagination still continued making the ftrongeft efforts to difplay itfelf; and the laft gleams of his wit and humour fparkled in the " Journal" heleft behind him of his "Voyage" to that place : which was published, in 1755, at London, in 12mo. In 1754, about two months after his arrival at Lifbon, he died, in his 48th. His works have been published in feveral fizes, with year. 4. An Effay on the Life and Genius of the Author, by Arthur. Murphy, esq."

Fielding's genius excelled most in those streated natural paintings of the characters of mankind, and the movements of the human heart, which constitute the basis of his novels; yet, as comedy bears the closest affinity to this kind of writing, his dramatic pieces, every one of which is comic, are far from being contemptible. His farces and ballad pieces, more especially, have a sprightlines of manner, and a forciblenes of character, by which it is impossible not to be agreeably entertained; and in those which he has in any degree borrowed from Moliere, or any other writer, he has done great honour and justice to his original, by the manner in which he has treated the the fubject. His dramatic works (26 in number) are particularized in the Biographia Dramatica. Having married a fecond time, he left a wife and four children, who were educated under the care of their uncle, with the aid of a very generous donation given annually by Ralph Allen, efq. the celebrated man of Bath. His frame was naturally very robult, and his height rather above fix feet. No picture was taken of him while he lived, but there is extant a fketch drawn from memory, by his friend Hogarth. His character as a man, may in great measure be deduced from the incidents of his life, but cannot perhaps be delineated better than by his biographer Mr. Murphy, with whofe words this article may properly be closed.

" It will be an humane and generous office to fet down to the account of flander and defamation, a great part of that abufe which was discharged against him by his enemies in his life-time; deducing however from the whole this useful leffon, that quick and warm paffions fhould be early controuled, and that diffipation and extravagant pleafures are the most dangerous palliations that can be found for difappointments and vexations in the first stages of life. We have seen," adds he, " how Mr. Fielding very foon fquandered away his fmall patrimony, which, with æconomy, might have procured him independence ;- we have feen how he ruined, into the bargain, a conftitution, which in its original texture, feemed formed to last much longer. When illness and indigence were once let in upon him, he no longer remained the mafter of his own actions; and that nice delicacy of conduct which alone conftitutes and preferves a character, was occasionally obliged to give way. When he was not under the immediate urgency of want, those who were intimate with him are ready to aver. that he had a mind greatly fuperior to any thing mean or little; when his finances were exhausted, he was not the most elegant in his choice of the means to redrefs himfelf, and he would inftantly exhibit a farce or a puppet-fhew, in the Haymarket theatre, which was wholly inconfistent with the profession he had embarked in. But his intimates are witness how much his pride fuffered when he was forced into measures of this kind; no man having a juster fense of propriety, or more honourable ideas of the employment of an author and a scholar." Many years after the death of Fielding, the French conful at Lifbon, le Chev. de Meyrionnet, wrote an elegant epitaph for him, and proposed to have erected a monument; but the English factory, stimulated by this generofity in a foreigner, took the matter into their own hands.

FIELDING (SARAH), the third fifter of Henry Fielding, and herfelf a writer of fome celebrity, was born in 1714, lived unmarried, and died in 1768. She gave proofs of a lively and penetrating penetrating genius in many elegant productions, particularly in the novel entitled David Simple, and in the Letters afterwards published between the principal characters in that work. She appeared alfo with applaufe, as a learned lady, in her translation of Xenophon's Memorabilia.

FIELDING (Sir JOHN), half brother, as above-mentioned, to Henry Fielding, and his fucceffor in the office of justice for Westminster, in which, though blind from his youth, he acted with great fagacity and activity for many years. He received the honour of knighthood for his fervices in October 1761; and died at Brompton in September 1780. He published at various times, the following works : I. " An account of the Origin and Effects of a Police, fet on foot by his grace the duke of Newcastle, in the year 1753, upon a Plan prefented to his grace by the late Henry Fielding, elq. To which is added, a Plan for preferving those deferted Girls in this Town who become Proftitutes from Necessity. 1768." This was a finall tract in 8vo. 2. " Extracts from fuch of the Penal Laws as particularly relate to the Peace and good Order of the Metropolis," 8vo, 1761; a larger publication. 3. " The Universal Mentor; containing, Effays on the most important Subjects in Life; composed of Obfervations, Sentiments, and Examples of Virtue, felected from the approved Ethic Writers, Biographers, and Hiftorians, both ancient and modern," 12mo, 1762. This appears to have been the difcharge of his common-place book. 4. "A Charge to the Grand Jury of Westminster," 4to, 1763. This is stated to have been published at the unanimous request of the magistrates and jury, when he was chairman of the quarter feffions. 5. " Another Charge to the Grand Jury on a fimilar Occafion," 4to, 1766. 6. " A brief Description of the Cities of London and Westminster, &c. To which are added, fome Cautions against the Tricks of Sharpers," &c. 12mo, 1777. Nothing in this appears to have proceeded from fir John, except the Cautions; and the use of his name was perhaps a bookfeller's trick.

FIENNES (WILLIAM), lord Say and Sele, a perfon of literary merit, but not fo eminent on that account, as for the part he bore in the Grand Rebellion. He was born at Broughton in Oxfordfhire, in 1582, being the eldeft fon of Sir Richard Fiennes, to whom James I. had reftored and confirmed the dignity of baron Say and Sele: and, after being properly inftructed at Winchefter fchool, was fent in 1596 to New-College in Oxford, of which, by virtue of his relationship to the founder, he was made fellow. After he had spent fome years in fludy, he travelled into foreign countries, and then returned home with the reputation of a wife and prudent man. When the war was carried on in the Palatinate, he contributed largely to it, according to his eftate, which was highly pleasing to king James; but, indulging Indulging his neighbours by leaving it to themfelves to pay what they thought fit, he was, on notice given to his majesty, committed to custody in June 1622. He was, however, soon releafed; and, in July 1624, advanced from a baron to be vifcount Say and Sele. At this time, fays Wood, he stood up for the privileges of Magna Charta; but, after the Rebellion broke out, treated it with the utmost contempt: and when the Longparliament began in 1640, he fhewed himfelf fo active that, as Wood fays, he and Hampden and Pym, with one or two more, were efteemed parliament-drivers, or fwayers of all the parliaments in which they fat. In order to reconcile him to the court, he had the place of maftership of the Court of Wards given him in May 1641 : but this availed nothing, for, when arms were taken up, he acted openly against the king. Feb. 1642, his majesty published two proclamations, commanding all the officers of the Court of Wards to attend him at Oxford; but lord Say refufing, was outlawed and attainted of treafon. In 1648, he opposed any perfonal treaty with his majesty, yet the fame year was one of the parliament commissioners in the Ifle of Wight, when they treated with the king about peace: at which time he is faid to have urged against the king this paffage out of Hooker's " Ecclefiaftical Polity," that " though the king was singulis major, yet he was universis minor :" that is greater than any individual, yet lefs than the whole community. After the king's death, he joined with the Independents, as he had done before with the Prefbyterians; and became intimate with Oliver, who made him one of his house of lords. " After the Restoration of Charles II. when he had acted," fays Wood, "as a grand rebel for his own ends almost twenty years, he was rewarded forfooth with the honourable offices of lord privy feal, and lord chamberlain of the houthold; while others, that had fuffered in eftate and body, and had been reduced to a bit of bread for his majesty's cause, had then little or nothing given to relieve them; for which they were to thank a hungry and great officer, who, to fill his own coffers, was the occasion of the utter ruin of many." Wood relates alfo, with fome furprife, that this noble perfon, after he had fpent eighty years mostly in an unquiet and discontented condition, had been a grand promoter of the Rebellion, and had in some respect been accessary to the murder of Charles I. died quietly in his bed, April 14, 1662: and was buried with his anceftors at Broughton [y]. Whitlock fays, that " he was a perfon of great parts, wifdom, and integrity:" and Clarendon, though of a contrary party, does not deny him to have had these qualities, but only supposes them to have been wrongly directed,

directed, and greatly corrupted. He calls him, " a man of a close and referved nature, of great parts, and of the highest ambition; but whose ambition would not be satisfied with offices and preferments, without fome condefcentions and alterations in ecclesiastical matters. He had for many years been the oracle of those who were Puritans in the worft fense, and had fteered all their counfels and defigns. He was a notorious enemy to the church, and to most of the eminent churchmen, with fome of whom he had particular contests. He had always opposed and contradicted all acts of state, and all taxes and impolitions, which were not exactly legal, &c .- In a word, the had very great authority with all the discontented party throughout the kingdom, and a good reputation with many who were not difcontented ; who believed him to be a wife man, and of a very uleful temper in an age of licence, and one who would ftill adhere to the law | z]."

Befides feveral speeches in parliament, he published, 1. "The Scots defign discovered; relating their dangerous attempts lately practifed against the English nation, with the fad confequence of the fame. Wherein divers matters of public concernment are disclosed; and the book called, Truths Manifest, is made apparent to be Lies Manifest, 1653." 4to. 2. "Folly and Madnels made manifest: or, fome things written to shew, how contrary to the word of God, and practice of the Saints in the Old and New Testament, the doctrines and practices of the Quakers are, 1659." 4to. 3. "The Quakers Reply manifested to be railing: or, a pursuance of those by the light of the Scriptures, who through their dark imaginations would evade the Truth, 1659." 4to. It feems, the Quakers were pretty numerous in his neighbourhood of Broughton; and he either was, or pretended to be, much troubled with them.

FIENNES (NATHANAEL), fecond fon of lord Say juft mentioned, was born at Broughton in Oxfordshire in 1608; and, as his father before him, after a proper education at Winchefter school, was admitted of New College in Oxford, and also made fellow in right of kinship to the founder. After passing fome years there, he travelled to Geneva, and among the Cantons of Switzerland, where he increased that disaffection to the church, which had been infused into him with his milk. From his travels he returned through Scotland, at the time when the Rebellion was in the bud; and, in 1640, was elected to fit in parliament for Banbury, when it was quickly discovered, that as he was the darling of his father, so he was ready to join in all his measures. Afterwards he became colonel of horse under the earl of Effex, and was made governor of Bristol, when first taken for the use of the parliament; but, surrendering it too. eafily to prince Rupert, in July 1643, he was thereupon tried by a council of war, and fentenced to lofe his head. He had afterwards, by the interest of his father, a pardon granted him for life, but he could not continue any longer in the army; and the fhame of it affected him fo much, that he went for fome time abroad, " retaining still," fays Clarendon, " the same full difaffection to the government of the church and state, and only grieved that he had a lefs capacity left to do hurt to either [A]." When the Prefbyterians were turned out of parliament, he became an Independent, took the engagement, was intimate with Cromwell; and, when Cromwell declared himfelf Protector, was made one of his privy-council, lord privy-feal in 1655, and a member of his house of lords. Though he had fufficiently shewn his aversion to monarchical government, yet when he faw what Oliver aimed at, he grew mighty fond of it: fo that, in 1660, he published a book with this title, "Monarchy afferted to be the best, most ancient, and legal form of Government, in a conference held at Whitehall with Oliver Lord Protector, and Committee of Parliament, &c. in April 1657." He published also several speeches and pamphlets, fome of which were a defence of his own conduct at Briftol. After the Restoration, he retired to Newton Tony near Salifbury in Wiltshire, where he had an estate that came to him by his fecond wife; and here continued to his death, which happened in 1669. Clarendon has spoken of his abilities in very high terms. "Colonel Fiennes," fays he, " besides the credit and reputation of his father, had a very good flock of estimation in the house of commons upon his own score : for truly he had very good parts of learning and nature, and was privy to, and a great manager in, the most fecret defigns. from the beginning; and if he had not incumbered himfelf with command in the army, to which men thought his nature not fo well difpofed, he had fure been fecond to none in those councils, after Mr. Hampden's death."

FIENUS (THOMAS), a very ingenious and learned phyfician, was born at Antwerp in 1566, and went into Italy to fludy phyfic under Mercurialis and Aldrovandus. Upon his return, he diftinguished himfelf fo much in the university of Louvain, that he was chosen professor of physic there. Asterwards he was made physician to the duke of Bavaria. He died at Louvain in 1631, aged fixty-four years. He composed feveral works, among which was one, 1. " De viribus imaginationis." In this performance, he relates a story of an hypocondriac, whose delufions represented his body so large, that he thought it impossible for him to get out of his room. The physician, fancying there could be no better way of rectifying his imagination than by letting him fee that the thing could be done, ordered him to be carried out by force. Great was the ftruggle: and the patient no fooner faw himfelf at the outfide of the door, than he fell into the fame agonies of pain, as if his bones had been all broken by being forced through a paffage too little for him; and died immediately after. Fienus does not relate this upon his own knowledge, but he does not feem in the leaft to queftion the reality of the fact. His other works were, 2. " De formatione et animatione feetus." 3. " Apologia pro eodem." 4. " De Cauteriis." 5. " Libri Chirurgici."

FIESCHI (JOHN LOUIS), count of Lamagna, and of one of the greatest families in Genoa, was a young man of great talents and qualities, but no lefs ambition, which cut thort his life. Jealous of the power and credit of Andrew Doria, he confpired against him, first endeavouring to restore Genoa tothe French, then with a view of rendering it fubject to himfelf. His conspiracy broke out in the night of January 1, 1547, when his first attempt was to seize the gallies, but, in passing from one galley to another, he accidentally fell from the plank and was drowned. The confederates gave up their enterprife on the death of their chief, and the family of Fiefchi was banished from Genoa to the fifth generation. He was only 22 years old at the time of his death. The hiftory of his confpiracy was written in Italian by Mascardi, from which the cardinal de Retz formed one in French, which was little more than an abridgement of the former.

FIGRELIUS (EMUNDUS), a learned Swede, a Profeffor of Hiftory, and an antiquary at Upfal, published in 1656, a workof much refearch, entitled, "De Statuis illustrium Romanorum," which he dedicated to Charles Gustavus king of Sweden. He had passed fome months at Rome in his youth, and this work was partly the refult of his studies and observations there. He died in 1676.

FILICAJA (VENCENTIO DI), an Italian poet, a native of Florence, where he was a fenator. He was a member of the academy della Crusca, and that of the Arcadi. As he was by no means affluent, Christina queen of Sweden had the generosity to furnish him fecretly with occasional supplies. He was born in 1642, and died in 1707. His poems are of a delicate and refined cast. They were first collected by his fon in folio, in the year of his death, and reprinted at Venice in 3 vols. 12mo. in 1747.

FILMER (Sir ROBERT), fon of Edward Filmer of Eaft Sutton in Kent, by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of Richard Argall, efq. was born in the beginning of the feventeenth century, and educated in Trinity-college in Cambridge. His works are, 1. "The Anarchy of a limited and mixed Monarchy." 2. "Patriarcha," in which he endeavours to prove, that all government Was was monarchical at first, and that all legal titles to govern are originally derived from the heads of families, or from such, upon whom their right was transferred, either by cession or failure of the line. He also wrote, "The Freeholders Grand Inquest, &c."

FINÆUS (ORONTIUS), in French Finé, professor of mathematics in the Royal-college at Paris, was the fon of a phyfician, and born at Briançon in Dauphiné in 1494. He went young to Paris, where his friends procured him a place in the college of Navarre. He there applied himself to polite literature and philosophy; yet devoted himself more particularly to mathematics, in which, having a natural inclination for them, he made a confiderable progrefs, though without the afliftance of a master. He acquired a great knowledge in mechanics; and having both a genius to invent instruments, and a skilful hand to make them, he gained high reputation by the fpecimens he gave of his ingenuity. He first made himself known by correcting and publishing Siliceus's "Arithmetic," and the "Margareta Philosophica." He read afterwards private lectures in Mathematics, and then taught that fcience publicly in the college of Gervais: by which he became fo famous, that he was recommended to Francis I. as the most proper man to teach mathematics in the new college, which that prince had founded at Paris. He omitted nothing to support the glory of his profession; and though he instructed his scholars with great astiduity, yet he found time to publish a great many books upon almost every part of the Mathematics. In order to have a notion of his skill in Mechanics, we need only consider the clock which he invented in 1553, and of which there is a defcription in the Journal of Amsterdam for March 29, 1694. Neverthelefs, his genius, his labours, his inventions, and the efteem which an infinite number of perfons shewed him, could not fecure him from that fate which fo often befalls men of letters. He was obliged to ftruggle all his life with poverty; and, when he died, left a wife and fix children and many debts. However, as merit must always be esteemed in fecret, though it feldom has the good fortune to be rewarded openly, Finæus's children found patrons, who for their father's fake aflisted his family. He died in 1555, aged 61. Like all the other mathematicians and altronomers of those times, he was greatly addicted to Astrology; and had the misfortune to be a long time imprisoned, because he had foretold fome things, which were not acceptable to the court of France. He was one of those, who vainly boafted of having found out the Quadrature of the circle. His works were collected in 3 vols. folio, in 1532, 1542, and 1556.

FINCH (HENEAGE), earl of Nottingham, and fon of Sir Heneage Finch, knt. recorder of London, was born in 1621, educated at Westminster school, and became a gentleman commoner of Christ-church in Oxford, 1635. After he had profecuted his studies there for two or three years, he removed to the Inner Temple, where, by diligence and good parts, he became remarkable for his knowledge of the municipal laws, was successfully barrister, bencher, treasurer, reader, &c. Charles II. on his restoration, made him solicitor general, and advanced him to the dignity of a baronet. He was reader of the Inner Temple the next year, and chose for his subject the statute of 39 Eliz. concerning the payment and recovery of the debts of the crown, at that time very season and necessary; and he treated it with great strength of reason, and depth of law.

In April 1661, he was chosen a member of parliament for the university of Oxford; but, fays Wood, he did us no good, when we wanted his affiftance for taking off the tribute belong-In 1665, after the parliament then fitting at ing to hearths. Oxford had been prorogued, he was in full convocation created doctor of civil law; and, the creation being over, the vice-chancellor, in the prefence of feveral parliament-men, flood up and fpoke to the public orator to do his office. The orator made an admirable harangue; and faid, among other things, to this effect, That the university withed they had more colleges to entertain the parliament men, and more chambers, but by no means more chimnies; at which Sir Heneage was observed to change countenance, and draw a little back. When the difgrace of lord Clarendon drew on, in 1667, and he was impeached in parliament for fome fuppofed high crimes, Sir Heneage, still folicitor general, shewed himself very active against him, and very frequently fpoke in those debates, which ended at last in his banishment. In 1670, the king appointed him attorney general; and, about three years after, lord keeper. Soon after he was advanced to the degree of a baron, and upon the furrender of the great feal to his majesty, Dec. 19, 1675, he received it immediately back again, with the title of lord high chancellor of England.

He performed the office of high steward at the trial of lord Stafford, who was found guilty of high treason by his peers, for being concerned in the popifh plot. In 1681, he was created earl of Nottingham, and died, quite worn out, the year after. Though he lived in very troublefome and difficult times, yet he conducted himfelf with fuch even steadines, that he retained the good opinion of both prince and people. He was diffinguished by his wisdom and eloquence; and was such an excellent orator, that fome of his cotemporaries have ftyled him the English Roscius, the English Cicero, &c. Burnet, in the preface to his "Hiftory of the Reformation," tells us, that his great parts and greater virtues were fo confpicuous, that it would be a high prefumption in him to fay any thing in his commendation; being in nothing more eminent, than in his zeal for and care of the church of England. His character is deferibed by Dryden 4

Dryden, in his "Abfalom and Achitophel," under the name of Amri.

Under his name are published, 1. Several speeches and difcourfes in the trial of the judges of Charles I. fee the book entitled, " An exact and most impartial account of the Indictment, Arraignment, Trial, and Judgment (according to law) of twenty-nine regicides, &c. 1660," 4to. 1679, 8vo. 2. Speeches to both Houses of Parliament, 7th Jan. 1673; 13th of April and 13th of Oct. 1675; 15th of Feb. 1676; 6th of March, 1678; and 30th of April, 1679." These were spoken while he was lord keeper and chancellor. 3. "Speech at the Sentence of William Viscount Stafford, 7th Dec. 1680," printed in one sheet, solio; and in the trial of the said Viscount, p. 212. 4. "Anfwers by his Majesty's Command, upon seve-ral Addresse presented to his majesty at Hampton Court, the 19th of May, 1681," in one sheet, in folio. 5. "His Arguments: upon which he made the Decree in the caufe between the honourable Charles Howard, efq. plaintiff, Henry late duke of Norfolk, Henry lord Mowbray his fon, Henry marquis of Dorchester, and Richard Marriott, esq. defendants; wherein the feveral ways and methods of limiting a trust of term for years are fully debated, 1615," folio. 6. " An Argument on the claim of the Crown to pardon on Impeachment," folio. He alfo left behind him, written with his own hand, " Chancery Reports," MS. in folio.

FINCH (DANIEL), earl of Nottingham, fon of the former, was born in 1647. He fucceeded his father in his honours and estates, and on the death of Charles II. was one of the privy council who figned the order for proclaiming the duke of York; but though his name continued on the lift of privy counfellors, he never went to the board, but kept at a distance from the court during that whole reign. When the convention met on king James's abdication, he was the principal manager of the debates in favour of a regent, against the setting up another king; yet observed that if one was made, he would be more faithful to him than those who made him could be, according to their own When William and Mary were advanced to the principles. throne, though he declined the office of lord chancellor, he accepted that of fecretary of state, in which station he continued on the accession of queen Anne, when both lords and commons voted him highly deferving the truft her majefty reposed in him. He nevertheless went out of office in 1704, and accepted no other during that reign, though large offers were made him on. the change of the ministry in 1710. When George I. succeeded to the crown, he was one of the lords justices for the administration of affairs until his arrival, when he was declared lord prefident of the council; but in 1716, he finally retired from VOL. VI.  $\mathbf{M}$ all all public bufinels to a studious course of life, the fruits of which appeared in his elaborate reply to Mr. Whiston's letter to him on the subject of the Trinity. He died in 1730.

FINCH (EDWARD), vicar of Chrift Church, in London, and brother to the lord keeper, appears, according to Walker, to have been the first parochial clergyman who was ejected from a benefice by the reforming parliament. It was the misfortune of this gentleman to live in an age, when rational piety was deemed iniquity, and when orthodoxy, conformity, and cultivated manners, were inrolled in the black list of crimes. Some of the most flagrant among the articles exhibited against him were, that he preached in a surplice; that he wore this abominable vestment in his perambulations; that he worst his abominable ciated with women. He died foon after his fequestration, Feb. 1, 1642, happy in this circumstance, that he only tasted of the bitter cup, of which many of his brethren were doomed to exhaust the dregs.

FINET (Sir JOHN), a man confiderable enough to be remembered, was fon of Robert Finet of Soulton near Dover in Kent, and born in 1571. His great grand-father was of Sienna in Italy, where his family was ancient; and coming into Eng-land a fervant to cardinal Campegius, legate à latere from the Pope, married a maid of honour to queen Catherine, confort to Henry VIII. and fettled here. He was bred up in the court, where by his wit, mirth, and uncommon skill in composing fongs, he very much pleafed James I. In 1614, he was fent into France about matters of public concern; and the year after was knighted. About the fame time, he was made affiftant to the master of the ceremonies; and had that office conferred upon him in 1626, being then in good efteem with Charles I. He died in 1641, aged 70. He wrote a book with this title, "Fineti Philoxenus: Some choice observations touching the reception and precedency, the treatment and audience, the punctilios and contefts of foreign ambaffadors in England, 1656:" 3vo. Published by James Howel, and dedicated to lord L'Isle. He translated from French into English, " The Beginning, Continuance, and Decay of Estates, &c. 1606;" written originally by R. de Lufing.

FIRENZUOLA (ANGELO), fo called from his native city Florence, (in Italian Firenze) though his family name was Nannini, was celebrated in his time as a poet, but his works are now fcarce. He originally practifed as an advocate at Rome, then became an ecclefialtic of the congregation of Vallombrofa. He was perfonally efteemed by pope Clement VII. who was alfo an admirer of his works. He died at Rome foon after, in 1545. His works in profe were published in 8vo. at Florence in in 1548, and his poetry, the fame fize, in 1549. Thefe, as well as his translation of the Golden Afs of Apuleius, are scarce. He wrote also some comedies, and other productions.

FIRMICUS MATERNUS (Julius); an ancient Christian writer, and author of a piece, entitled, " De Errore Profanarum Religionum;" which he addreffed to the emperors Constantius and Constans, the fons of Constantine. It is supposed to have been written after the death of Constantine, the eldest fon of Constantine the Great, which happened in the year 340, and before that of Constans, who was flain by Magnentius in the year 350: for it being addressed to Constantius and Constans, there is reason to believe, that Constantine their eldest brother was dead, and it is evident that Conftans was then alive. It is remarkable, that no ancient writers have made any mention of Firmicus; fo that we do not know what he was, of what country, or of what profession. Some conjecture that he was by birth a Sicilian, and in the former part of his life an heathen. His treatife, "Of the Errors of the Pro-phane Religions," fhews great parts, great learning, and great zeal for Christianity. It has been often printed, fometimes separately, sometimes with other fathers. It was printed by itself at Strasbourg, in 1562, at Heidelberg, 1599, at Paris, 1610, all in 8vo; afterwards it was joined with Minucius Felix, and printed at Amsterdam, 1645, at Leyden, 1652, and again at Leyden, at the end of the fame father, by James Gronovius, in 1709, 8vo. It is likewife to be found in the "Bibliotheca Patrum;" and at the end of Cyprian, printed at Paris in 1666.

There are, " Eight Books of Aftronomy, or Mathematics," which bear the name of this author, and which have been feveral times printed, particularly at Basil in 1551, at the end of the astronomical pieces of Ptolemy and some Arabians. There is nothing in this work that relates to the real fcience of aftronomy, the author amufing himfelf altogether with aftrological calculations, after the manner of the Babylonians and Egyptians; on which account Baronius was of opinion, that it could not be written by fo pious a man and fo good a Christian as this Firmicus, who no doubt would have thought it very finful to have dealt in fuch profane and impious speculations. But suppose, fays Cave, that he wrote these books in his unconverted state, which might eafily be the cafe; for though Baronius will have them to be written about the year 355, yet Labbæus, as he tells us, affirms them to be between 334 and 337. There is not light enough, however, to determine who is in the right.

FIRMIN (THOMAS), a perfon memorable for public benefactions and charities, was born at Ipfwich in Suffolk, in June, 1032.

1632 [B]. His parents were puritans, but very reputable and fubitantial people; and at a proper age put out their fon to an apprenticefhip in London. His mafter was an Arminian, a hearer of Mr. John Goodwin; to whofe fermons young Firmin reforting, "exchanged," as we are told, "the harfh opinions of Calvin, in which he had been educated, for those more reafonable ones of Arminius and the Remonstrants." He was a free enquirer into religious matters from the beginning; and was afterwards carried by this spirit and temper to espouse fome opinions, not agreeable to the orthodox faith. He became perfuaded, for instance, that "the Unity of God is an Unity of Perfon as well as of Nature; and that the Holy Spirit is indeed a Perfon, but not God."

As foon as he was made free, he began to trade for himfelf in the linen manufacture, with a ftock not exceeding 100l. which, however, he improved fo far, as to marry, in 1660, a citizen's daughter with 5001. to her portion. This wife did not live many years, but after bringing him two children died, while he was managing fome affairs of trade at Cambridge : and, according to the affertion of his biographer, he dreamed at the fame time at Cambridge, that his wife was breathing her laft. Afterwards he settled in Lombard-street, and grew so famous for his public-fpiritedness and benevolence, that he was noticed by all perfons of confequence, and efpecially by the clergy. He became upon intimate terms with Whichcot, Wilkins, Tillotfon, &c. fo particularly with the last, that when obliged to be out of town, at Canterbury perhaps where he was dean, he left to Mr. Firmin the provision of preachers for his Tuesday's lecture at St. Laurence. Mr. Firmin, in fhort, was afterwards fo publickly known, as to fall under the cognizance of majefty itself. Queen Mary heard of his usefulness in all public designs, those of charity especially. She heard too, that he was heterodox in the articles of the Trinity, the divinity of our Saviour, and the fatisfaction. She spoke to Tillotson, therefore, to set him right in those weighty and necessary points; who answered, that he had often endeavoured it; but that Mr. Firmin had now so long imbibed the Socinian doctrine, as not to be capable of renouncing it. However, his grace, for he was then archbishop, published his fermons, formerly preached at St. Laurence's, concerning those questions, and fent Mr. Firmin one of the first, copies from the preis, who, not convinced, caufed a respectful answer to be drawn up and published with this title, "Confiderations on the explications and defences of the doctrine of the Trinity," himfelf giving a copy to his grace: to which the

[B] The Life of Mr. Tho. Firmin, late citizen of London, p. 5. Lond. 1698. archbishop, archbishop, after he had read it, only answered, " My lord of Sarum," meaning Dr. Burnet, " shall humble your writers;" still retaining, however, his usual kindness for Mr. Firmin. But to return:

In 1664, he married a fecond wife, who brought him feveral children: nevertheles, his benevolent spirit did not flacken. but he went about doing good as usual. The PLAGUE in 1665, and the fire in 1666, furnished him with a variety of objects. He went on with his trade in Lombard-street, till 1676: at which time his biographer fuppofes him to have been worth 9000l. though he had disposed of incredible sums in charities. This year he erected his warehouse in Little-Britain, for the employment of the poor in the linen-manufacture: of which Tillotion has spoken most honourably, in his funeral sermon on Mr. Gouge, in 1681, giving the merit of the thought to Mr. Gouge, but that of the adoption and great extension of it to Mr. Firmin. The method was this: he bought flax and hemp for them to fpin: when fpun he paid them for their work, and caufed it to be wrought into cloth, which he fold as he could, himfelf bearing the whole lofs.

In 1680 and 1681, came over the French protestants, who furnished new work for Mr. Firmin's zeal and charity: and, in 1682, he fet up a linen manufacture for them at Ipfwich. During the last twenty years of his life, he was one of the governors of Christ-Church hospital in London; to which he procured many confiderable donations, Every body knows the great number of Irish nobility, clergy, gentry, and others, who fled into England from the perfecution and profeription of king James. Briefs and other means were let on foot for their relief, in all which he was so active, that he received a letter of thanks for his diligence and kindnefs, figned by the archbishop of Tuam, and feven bishops: which letter is inferted in his life, but need not be transcribed. In April, 1693, he became a governor of St. Thomas's holpital in Southwark : and, indeed, there was hardly any public truft or charity, in which he either was not, or might not have been concerned. He died Dec. 20, 1697, in the 66th year of his age, and was buried, according to his defire, in the cloyfters of Chrift-Church hofpital. In the wall near his grave is placed an infcription, which, though expressed in terms of the highest panegyric, cannot be faid to lie or flatter, as is often objected to inferiptions.

FIRMIN (GILES), a native of Suffolk, educated at Cambridge, where he fludied phyfic, which he afterwards practifed with great fuccefs in New England. About the latter end of the civil wars, he returned to England, was ordained, and became minister at Shalford, where he continued till he was ejected, in 1662, by the act of uniformity. He afterwards M 3 resumed the practice of physic, but never neglected to preach when he had an opportunity. He died in 1697, at the age of 80. He was author of feveral works, the most known of which is, his "Real Christian."

FISH (SIMON), a man who deferves to be recorded in a few lines, on account of his zeal for the Reformation. He was born in Kent, and, after an education at Oxford, went to Gray's-Inn, to fludy the law. A play was then written by one Roe, in which cardinal Wolfey was feverely reflected on; and this play Fifh undertook to act, after every body elfe had refused to venture upon it. This obliged him to fly his country; and he went into Germany, where he found out, and affociated himfelf with, William Tyndale. In 1527, he wrote a little piece, called, " The Supplication of Beggars;" which is nothing but a fatire upon bishops, abbots, priors, monks, friars, and indeed the clergy in general. A copy of this was fent to Anne Boleyne, and by her given to the king, who was not difpleafed with it: and afterwards, when Wolfey, against whom it was levelled, was difgraced, Fish was recalled home, and graciously countenanced by the king for what he had done. He died of the plague in 1571. He translated from Dutch into English, a book entitled, "The Summ of the Scriptures;" which, Wood fays, was well approved.

FISHER (JOHN), bishop of Rochester, and martyr to popery, was born at Beverley in Yorkshire, 1459. His father, a merchant, left him an orphan very young: but, by the care of his mother, he was taught claffical learning at Beverley, and afterwards admitted in Cambridge of Michael-house, fince incorporated into Trinity-college. He took the degrees in arts, in 1488 and 1491; and, being elected fellow of his house, was a proctor of the university in 1495. The same year, he was elected master of Michael-house; and having for some time applied himfelf to divinity, he took holy orders, and became eminent. The fame of his learning and virtues reaching the ears of Margaret counters of Richmond, mother of Henry VII. the chofe him her chaplain and confessor; in which high station he behaved himfelf with fo much wifdom and goodnefs, that fhe committed herfelf entirely to his government and direction. It was by his counfel, that the undertook those magnificent foundations of St. John's and Chrift's colleges at Cambridge; established the divinity professors in both universities; and did a thousand other acts of generosity for the propagation of learning and piety.

In 1501, he took the degree of doctor in divinity, and the fame year was chosen chancellor of the university: during the exercife of which office, he encouraged learning and good manners, and is faid by fome to have had prince Henry under his - tuition tuition in that university. In 1502, he was appointed by charter the lady Margaret's first divinity-professor in Cambridge: and, in 1504, made bishop of Rochester, at the recommendation of Fox bishop of Winchester. It is remarkable, that he never would exchange this bishopric, though then the least in England; for he called his church his wife, and was used to fay, "He would not change his little old wife, to whom he had been so long wedded, for a wealthier." In 1505, he accepted the headship of Queen's-college in Cambridge, which he held for little more than three years. The foundation of Christ's-college was perfected, under his care and superintendence, in 1506; and himfelf was appointed by the flatutes vifitor for life, after the death of the munificent foundrefs. The king's licence for founding St. John's, was obtained foon after; but, before it was passed in due form, the king died April I, 1509, and the lady Margaret herfelf the 29th of June following. The care of the new foundation now devolved upon her executors, of whom the most faithful and most active, nay, the fole and principal agent, was Fisher; and he carried it on with the utmost vigour. In 1512, he was appointed to the council of Lateran at Rome, but never went, as appears from procuratorial powers, and letters recommending him to great men there, still extant in the archives of St. John's-college. This college being finished in 1516, he went to Cambridge, and opened it with due folemnity; and was also commissioned to make statutes for it. He became afterwards a great benefactor to that college.

Upon Luther's appearance, and opposition to popery, in 1517, Fisher, a zealous champion for the church of Rome, was one of the first to enter the lists against him. He not only endeavoured to prevent the propagation of his doctrine in his own diocese, and in the university of Cambridge, over which as chancellor he had a very great influence, but alfo preached and wrote with great earnestness against him. Nay, he had even refolved to go to Rome, but was diverted by Wolfey's calling together a fynod of the whole clergy, wherein the bishop delivered himfelf with great freedom, on occasion of the cardinal's stateliness and pride. Hitherto, he had continued in great favour with Henry; but in the business of the divorce, in 1527, he adhered fo firmly to the queen's cause and the pope's supremacy, that it brought him into great troubles, and in the end proved his ruin. For the king, who greatly efteemed him for his honefty and learning, having defired his opinion upon his marriage with Catherine of Arragon, the bifhop declared, that there was no reason at all to question the validity of it; and from this opinion nothing afterwards could ever make him recede.

In the parliament which met Nov. 1529, a motion being made for suppressing the leffer monasteries, Fisher opposed it in a very warm fpeech: at which fome lords were pleafed, others displeased. The duke of Norfolk, addressing himself to him, faid, " My lord of Rochefter, many of thefe words might have been well spared: but it is often seen, that the greatest clerks are not always the wifeft men." To which the bifhop replied, " My lord, I do not remember any fools in my time, that ever proved great clerks." Complaint was made by the commons of this speech to the king, who contented himself with gently rebuking Fisher, and bidding him "use his words more temperately." In 1530, he escaped two very great dangers, first that of being poisoned, and then of being shot in his house at Lambeth-marsh; upon which he retired to Rochester. One Roufe, coming into his kitchen, took occasion, in the cook's absence, to throw poifon into gruel, which was prepared for his dinner. He could eat nothing that day, and fo escaped; but of seventeen perfons who eat of it, two died, and the rest never perfectly recovered their health. Upon this occasion, an act was made, declaring poifoning to be high treafon, and adjudging the offender to be boiled to death: which punishment was soon after inflicted upon Rouse in Smithfield. The other danger proceeded from a cannon-bullet, which, being thot from the other fide of the Thames, pierced through his houfe, and came very near his fludy, where he used to spend most of his time.

When the queftion of giving Henry the title of the fupreme head of the church of England was debated in convocation in 1531, the bishop opposed it with all his might; which only ferved the more to incense the court against him, and to make them watch all opportunities to get rid of fo troublefome a perfon. He foon gave them the opportunity they fought, by tampering with, and hearkening too much to the visions and impostures of Elizabeth Barton, the holy maid of Kent; who, among other things, pretended a revelation from God, that " if the king went forwards with the purpose he intended, he should not be king of England seven months after." The court, having against him the advantage they wanted, foon made use of it: they adjudged him guilty of misprision of treason, for concealing the maid's fpeeches that related to the king; and condemned him with five others in lofs of goods, and imprifonment during the king's pleafure : but he was releafed upon paying 300l. for his majesty's use. Afterwards an act was made, which abfolutely annulled Henry's marriage with Catherine; confirmed his marriage with Anne Boleyn; entailed the crown upon her iffue, and upon the lady Elizabeth by name; making it high treason to flander, or do any thing to the derogation of of this laft marriage. In purfuance of this, an oath was taken by both houses, March 30, 1554, "to bear faith, truth, and obedience, to the king's majesty, and to the heirs of his body by his most dear and entirely beloved lawful wife queen Anne, begotten and to be begotten," &c. Instead of taking this oath, Fisher withdrew to his house at Rochester; but had not been there above four days, when he received orders from the archbisshop of Canterbury, and other commissioners, authorised under the great feal to tender the oath, to appear before them at Lambeth. He appeared accordingly; and, the oath being prefented to him, he perused it awhile, and then defired time to confider of it; so that five days were allowed him. Upon the whole he refused to take it, and was committed to the tower April 26.

Nevertheles, from respect to his great reputation for learning and piety, earnest endeavours were used to bring him to a compliance. Some bishops waited on him for that purpose, as did afterwards the lord-chancellor Audeley, and others of the privy-council; but they found him immoveable. Secretary Cromwell was also with him in vain, and afterwards Lee, bishop of Lichfield. The iffue was, a declaration from Fifher, that he would "fwear to the fucceffion; never difpute more about the marriage; and promife allegiance to the king; but his conficience could not be convinced, that the marriage was not against the law of God." These concessions did not fatisfy the king; who was refolved to let all his fubjects fee, that there was no mercy to be expected by any one who opposed his will. Therefore, in the parliament which met Nov. 3, he was at-tainted for refufing the oath of fuccession; and his bishopric declared void Jan. 2. During his confinement, the poor old bishop was hardly used, and scarce allowed necessaries. He continued above a year in the tower, and might have remained there till released by a natural death, if an unseasonable honour, paid him by pope Paul III. had not haftened his destruction; which was, the creating of him, in May 1535, cardinal, by the title of Cardinal Priest of St. Vitalis. When the king heard of it, he gave strict orders that none should bring the hat into his dominions: he fent alfo lord Cromwell to examine the bifhop about that affair, who, after fome conference, faid, " My lord of Rochester, what would you fay, if the pope should fend you a cardinal's hat; would you accept of it?" The bishop replied, "Sir, I know myself to be fo far unworthy any fuch dignity, that I think of nothing lefs; but if any fuch thing should happen, affure yourself that I should improve that favour to the best advantage that I could, in affisting the holy catholic church of Christ; and in that respect I would re-seive it upon my knees." When this answer was brought, the the king faid in a great paffion, "Yea, is he yet fo lufty? Well, let the pope fend him a hat when he will, Mother of God, he fhall wear it on his fhoulders then; for I will leave him never a head to fet it on."

From this time his ruin was abfolutely determined: but, as no legal advantage could be taken againit him, Richard Rich, efq. folicitor-general, a bufy officious man, went to him; and in a fawning treacherous manner, under pretence of confulting him, as from the king, about a cafe of confcience, gradually drew him into a discourse about the supremacy, which he declared to be " unlawful, and what his majefty could not take upon him, without endangering his foul." Thus caught in the fnare purpofely laid for him, a special commission was drawn up for trying him, dated June 1, 1535; and on the 17th, upon a short trial, he was found guilty of high treason, and condemned to fuffer death. He objected greatly against Rich's evidence, on which he was chiefly convicted; and told him, that " he could not but marvel to hear him bear witnefs against him on these words, knowing in what secret manner he came to him." Then addreffing himfelf to his judges, and relating the particulars of Rich's coming, he thus went on: "He told me, that the king, for better fatisfaction of his own conscience, had sent unto me in this secret manner, to know my full opinion in the matter of the fupremacy, for the great affiance he had in me more than any other; and farther, that the king willed him to affure me on his honour, and on the word of a king, that whatever I should fay unto him by this his fecret messenger, I should abide no danger nor peril for it, nor that any advantage should be taken against me for the fame. Now therefore, my lords, concludes he, feeing it pleafed the king's majesty, to fend to me thus fecretly under the pretence of plain and true meaning, to know my poor advice and opinion in these his weighty and great affairs, which I most gladly was, and ever will be, willing to fend him; methinks, it is very hard and unjust to hear the messenger's acculation, and to allow the same as a sufficient testimony against me in case of treason." Hard and unjust indeed! but the king was not fubject to fcruples; and his will, unfortunately, was a law. June 22, early in the morning, he re-ceived the news of his execution that day; and when he was getting up, he caufed himfelf to be dreffed in a neater and finer manner than ufual; at which his man expressing much wonder, feeing he must put it all off again within two hours, and lose it, "What of that," faid the bishop; "doest thou not mark, that this is our marriage-day, and that it behoves us therefore to use more cleanliness for solemnity of the marriage fake?" He was beheaded about ten o'clock, aged almost 77: and his head was was fixed over London-bridge the next day. Such was the tragical end of Fifher, "which left one of the greateft blots upon this kingdom's proceedings," as Burnet fays in his hiftory of the Reformation. He was a very tall well made man, ftrong and robuft, but at the end of his life extremely emaciated. As to his moral and intellectual attainments, nothing could well be greater. Erafmus reprefents him as a man of integrity, deep learning, fweetnefs of temper, and greatnefs of foul. His words are remarkable, and deferve to be transcribed.——" Reverendus Epifcopus Roffenfis, vir non folum mirabili integritate vitæ, verum etiam alta et recondita doctrina, tum morum quoque incredibili comitate commendatus maximis pariter ac minimis.—Aut egregie fallor, aut is vir eft unus, cum quo nemo fit hac tempeftate conferendus, vel integritate vitæ, vel eruditione, vel animi magnitudine."

He was the author of feveral works, as, t. " Affertionum Martini Lutheri confutatio." 2. " Defensio Assertionis Henrici Octavi de septem sacramentis," &c. 3. " Epistola Responsoria Epistolæ Lutheri." 4. "Sacerdotii Defensio contra Lutherum." 5. "Pro Damnatione Lutheri." 6. " De veritate corporis et sanguinis Christi in Eucharistia, adversus Oecolampadium." 7. " De unica Magdalena." 8. " Petrum suisse Romæ." 9. " Several Sermons, among which was one preached at the funeral of Henry VII. and one at the funeral of Margaret countefs of Richmond." The latter was republished in 1708, by Thomas Baker, B. D. with a learned preface. And one preached at London, on the day that Luther's writings were publickly burnt. 10. Several Tracts of a smaller nature upon subjects of piety. 11. "His opinion of king Henry VIII's marriage, in a letter to T. Wolfey." This is printed in the collection of Records at the end of the fecond volume of Collier's " Ecclefiaftical Hiftory [E]." Most of the forementioned pieces, which were printed feparately in England, were collected and printed together in one volume folio at Wurtzburg, in 1595.

FITZHERBERT (Sir ANTHONY), a most learned lawyer in the reign of Henry VIII. was descended from a very ancient family, and born at Norbury in the county of Derby; but it is not known in what year. After he had been properly educated in the country, he was sent to Oxford, and from thence to one of the inns of court; but we neither know of what college, nor of what inn he was admitted. His great parts, judgement, and diligence, soon distinguished him in his profession; and in process of time he became so eminent, that on Nov. 18, 1511, he was called to be a ferjeant at law. In 1516, he received the honour of knighthood; and, the year after, was appointed one of his majesty's ferjeants at law. He began now to present the world with the product of his fludies; and published from time to time feveral valuable works. In 1523, which was the 15th year of Henry VIII's reign, he was made one of the justices of the court of Common Pleas, in which honourable station the fpent the remaining part of his life; discharging the duties of his office with fuch fufficiency and integrity, that he was univerfally refpected as the oracle of the law. Two remarkable things are related of his conduct; one, that he openly opposed cardinal Wolfey in the height of his power; the other, that, on his death-bed, forefeeing the changes that were likely to happen in the church as well as state, he pressed his children in very ftrong terms to promife him folemnly, neither to accept grants, nor to make purchases of abbey-lands. He died May 27, 1538, and was buried in his own parish church of Norbury. He left behind him a very numerous posterity; and as he became by the death of his elder brother possessed of the family eftate, fo he was in a condition to provide very plentifully for them.

This learned lawyer's works are, 1. "The Grand Abridgment collected by that most reverend judge, Mr. Anthony Fitzherbert, lately conferred with his own manufcript corrected by himfelf, together with the references of the cafes to the books, by which they may be eafily found; an im-provement never before made, Alfo in this edition the additions or supplements are placed at the end of their respective titles." Thus runs the title of the edition of 1577: but the work was first published in 1519. To this edition of 1577, is added a most useful and accurate table, by the care of William Rastall, serjeant at law, and also one of the justices of the Common Pleas in the reign of queen Mary; which table, as well as the work, together with its author, is very highly commended by the lord chief justice Coke. 2. "The Office and Authority of Juffices of Peace, compiled and extracted out of the old books, as well of the Common Law, as of the Statutes, 1538." 3. "The Office of Sheriffs, Bailiffs of Liberties, Efcheators, Constables, Coroners, &c. 1538." Though we give the titles in English, these three works are written in French: only part of the second is in English. 4. "Of the Diversity of Courts, 1529," in French; but translated afterwards by W. H. of Gray's-Inn, and added by him to Andrew Horne's " Mirrour of Juffices." 5. " The New Natura Brevium, 1534," in French; but afterwards translated, and always held in very high esteem. 6. " Of the surveying of Lands, 1539." 7. " The Book of Husbandry, very prefitable and necessary for all perfons, 1534;" and feveral times after after in the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth. It is faid, in an advertifement to the reader, that this book was written by one Anthony Fitzherbert, who had been forty years an hufbandman: from whence many have concluded, that this could not be the judge. But in the preface to his book " Of Meafuring Lands," he mentions his book " Of Agriculture;" and in the advertifement prefixed to the fame book, it is exprefsly faid, that the author of that treatife of " Meafuring," was the author likewife of the book " Concerning the Office of a Juffice of Peace." Whence it appears, that both thole books were written by this author; who perhaps, in the feafons which allowed him leifure to go into the country, might apply himfelf as vigoroufly to hufbandry in the country, as to the law when in town; and commit his thoughts to paper.

FITZHERBERT (THOMAS), grandfon of Sir Anthony, and a very ingenious and learned man, was born in the county of Stafford, in 1552; and fent to either Exeter or Lincolncollege, in Oxford, in 1568. But having been bred a catholic, the college was uneafy to him; and though he would now and then hear a fermon, which was permitted him by an old Roman prieft, who lived privately in Oxford, and to whom he recurred for instruction in matters of religion, yet he would feldom or never go to prayers, for which he was often admonished by the sub-rector of the house. At length, seeming to be wearied with the herefy of the times, as he called it, he receded without a degree to his patrimony; where also refusing to go to his parish-church, he was imprisoned about 1572; but being soon fet at liberty, he became still more zealous in his religion, maintaining publicly, that catholics ought not to go to protestant churches; for which, being like to fuffer, he withdrew and lived obscurely. In 1580, when the jesuits Campian and Parfons came into England, he went to London, found them out, was exceedingly attached to them, and fupplied them liberally : by which bringing himfelf into dangers and difficulties, he went a voluntary exile into France, in 1582, where he folicited the cause of Mary queen of Scots, but in vain. After the death of that princefs, he left France, and went to Madrid, in order to implore the protection of Philip II. but, upon the defeat of the Armada, in 1588, he left Spain, and accompanied the duke of Feria to Milan. This duke had formerly been in England with king Philip, had married an English lady, and was justly efteemed a great patron of the English in Spain. Fitzherbert continued at Milan fome time, and thence went to Rome; where, taking a lodging near the English college, he attended prayers as regularly as the refidents there, and spent the rest of his time in writing books. He entered into the fociety of Jesus, in 1614, and received priest's orders much about the fame time; time; after which he fpeedily removed into Flanders, to prefide over the million there, and continued at Bruffels about two years. His great parts, extensive and polite learning, together with the high efteem that he had gained by his prudent behaviour at Bruffels, procured him the government, with the title of rector, of the English college at Rome. This office he exercifed for twenty-two years with unblemished credit, during which time he is faid to have been often named for a cardinal's hat. He died there, in 1640, in his 88th year; and was interred in the chapel belonging to the English college.

Wood has given a list of his writings, containing ten different works, chiefly of the controversial kind, in defence of popery, and directed against Barlow, Donne, Andrews, and other English divines. But the treatifes which were received with most general approbation by protestants and papists, are, 1. " Treatife concerning Polity and Religion, Doway, 1606," 4to, wherein are confuted several principles of Machiavel. The fecond part of the faid treatife was printed alfo at Doway, 1610; and both together in 1615, 4to. A third part was printed at London, in 1652, 4to. 2. " An fit utilitas in scelere, vel de " infelicitate Principis Machiavellani? Romæ, 1610,' ' 8vo. The language of these pieces is a little perplexed and obscure, and the method, according to the manner of those times, somewhat embarraffed and pedantic; but they evince strong sense, a generous difposition, with much reading and experience, and abound with matter, which has ferved as a fund to feveral authors, who have fince written against Machiavel.

FITZHERBERT (NICHOLAS), grandfon alfo to fir Anthony Fitzherbert, and coufin to Thomas, was born about 1550, and became a student of Exeter-college in Oxford. About 1572, he left his native country, parents, and patrimony, for religion, as a voluntary exile. At first he settled at Bologna in Italy, to obtain the knowledge of the civil law, and was there in 1580. Not long after he went to Rome, and in 1587 began to live in the family of William Alan, the cardinal of England. He continued with him till his death, after having diftinguished himself by his knowledge in the laws, and in polite literature. He was unfortunately drowned, 1612, in a journey he made from Rome. He published the following pieces: 1. " Cafæ Galatæi de bonis moribus, 1595." A tranflation from Italian. 2. " Oxoniensis in Anglia Academiæ De-" scriptio, 1602." 3. " De Antiquitate & Continuatione Ca. " tholicæ Religionis in Anglia, 1608." 4. " Vitæ Cardinalis " Alani Epitome, 1608." All printed at Rome. He also wrote the life of that cardinal, who was his patron, more at large; which, for reasons of state, was never published.

FITZ-

FITZJAMES (JAMES), duke of Berwick, natural fon of James II. when duke of York, and of Arabella Churchill, fifter to the great duke of Marlborough, was born at Moulins, in 1671, when his mother was on her return from the medicinal waters of Bourbon. He was bred to arms in the French fervice, and in 1686, at the age of 15, was wounded at the fiege of. Buda; he fignalized himfelf alfo in 1687, at the battle of Mohatz, where the duke of Lorraine defeated the Turks. In 1688, after his father's abdication, he was fent to command for him in Ireland, and was diffinguished, both at the fiege of Londonderry, in 1690, and at the battle of the Boyne, where he had a horse killed under him. In 1703, he commanded the troops that Louis XIV. fent to Spain to support the claim of Philip V. In a fingle campaign he made himfelf mafter of feveral fortified places. On his return to France he was employed to reduce the rebels in the Cevennes. He then befieged Nice, and took it in 1705. For his fervices in this campaign, he was raifed the next year to the dignity of mareschal of France; after which he greatly fignalized himfelf in Spain against the Portuguese and others. In 1707, he gained the celebrated battle of Almanza, against the English under lord Galloway, and the Portuguese under Das-Minas, who had above 5000 men killed on the field. This victory fixed the crown on the head of Philip V. who was studious to prove his gratitude to the general to whom he was indebted for it. In 1714, he took Barcelona; being then generalissimo of the armies of Spain. When the war between France and Germany broke out, in 1733, he again went out at the head of the French army; but in 1734 he was killed by a cannon-ball, before Philipsburg, which he was besieging. It was the fortune of the houfe of Churchill, fays Montesquieu, speaking of the dukes of Marlborough and Berwick, to produce two heroes, one of whom was deftined to shake, and the other to support the two greatest monarchies of Europe. The character of Fitzjames was in fome degree dry and fevere, but full of integrity, fincerity, and true greatness. He was unaffectedly religious; and, though frugal in his perfonal expences, generally in debt, from the expences brought upon him by his fituation, and the patronage he gave to fugitives from England, who had fupported the cause of his father. He has not had justice from the pens of English writers, but the French are lavish in his praise, and certainly not without reason. His character has been well and advantageoufly drawn by the great Montesquieu; and there are memoirs of him in two vols. 12mo, written by the abbé de-Margon.

FITZ-STEPHEN (WILLIAM), a learned monk of Canterbury, of Norman extraction, but born of respectable parents in the city of London. Leland says he was descended from a noble noble Norman family. He lived in the 12th century, and being attached to the fervice of archbp. Becket, was prefent at the time of his murder. In the year 1174, he wrote in Latin, "The Life of St. Thomas, Archbishop and Martyr;" in which, as Becket was a native of the metropolis, he introduces a defcription of the city of London, with a miscellaneous detail of the manners and usages of the citizens: this is defervedly confidered as a great curiosity, being the earliest professed account of London that is extant. It may be found at the end of Stowe's Survey. Fitz-Stephen died in 1191.

FIZES (ANTHONY), a celebrated phyfician of Montpellier, who died there in 1765, at the age of 75. He is best known in other countries from his works; which were, 1. "Opera Medica," 4to, 1742. 2. "Lecons de Chymie," 1750. 3. "Tractatus de Febribus," 12mo, 1749. 4. "Tractatus de Phyfiologia," 12mo, 1750, and feveral differtations.

FLACCUS (CAIUS VALERIUS), an ancient Latin poet, of whom remain but very imperfect accounts. There are many places that claim him, but Setia, now Sezzo, a town of Campania, feems to have the beft title; and it is from thence that he bears the furname Setinus. Martial, who was his contemporary and friend, intimates, that he lived at Padua, or at leaft was born there; as may be collocted from an epigram, wherein he advifes him to quit the beggarly fludy of poetry, and to apply himfelf to the bar, as the more profitable profession of the two. He died when he was about thirty years of age, and before he had put the finishing hand to the poem which he left.

Flaccus chofe the hiftory of the Argonautic expedition for the fubject of his poem; of which he lived to compose no more than feven books, and part of an eighth. It is addreffed to the emperor Vespasian; and Flaccus takes occasion at the same time to compliment Domitian on his poetry, and Titus on his conquest of Judæa. The learned world have been divided in their opinion of this author: fome not having fcrupled to exalt him above all the Latin poets, Virgil only excepted; while others have fet him as much below them. This poem of the Argonautic expedition is an imitation, rather than a translation, of the Greek poet Apollonius, four books of whole poem upon the fame fubject, are yet remaining; and it has generally been agreed, that the Latin poet has fucceeded best in those parts where he had not the Greek in view. Apollonius has by no means fuffered where Flaccus has feemed to translate him, none of his fpirit having been loft in the transfusion: fo far from it, that our author has the honour to be ranked among the few whofe copies have rivalled their originals. He had a true genius for poetry, which would have been more diftinguished, had he attained to riper years, and a more settled way of judging. He profeffedly profeffedly imitated Virgil, and often does it in a moft happy manner. Upon the whole, he does not deferve to be fo neglected as he has been; efpecially while other poets of antiquity have been thought worthy of notice, who are not fuperior to him either for matter, ftyle, or verification. Quintilian feems to have entertained the higheft opinion of his merit, by the fhort eulogium he has left of him: " multum in Valerio Flacco " nuper amifimus [F]." After feveral editions of this poet, with notes of the learned, Nic. Heinfius published him at Amfterdam in 1680, 12m0; which edition was republished in the fame fize in 1702. But the best edition is that, " cum notis " integris variorum & Petri Burmanni," printed at Leyden in 1724, 4to.

It may be proper to mention, that John Baptista Pius, an Italian poet, completed the eighth book of the Argonautics, and added two more, by way of supplement, partly from Apollonius [G]; which supplement was also printed at the end of Flaccus, in Aldus's edition of 1523, and has been subjoined to all, or at least most of the subsequent editions.

FLAMEL (NICHOLAS), falfely celebrated as an alchymist, under which supposition fome forged works have been attributed to him; as, "A Philofophical Summary," in verfe, 1561, and a treatise " On the Transformation of Metals," in 1621. He was a native of Pontoife, towards the close of the fourteenth century, and exercifed the profession of a notary at Paris. He began life without any fortune, but fuddenly became rich, which occasioned the supposition that he had found the grand fecret. He made a noble use of his riches, relieved the diffressed, founded hospitals, and repaired places of divine worship. To account for this fudden wealth in a more probable way, it has been faid, that he bought up the debts owing to the Jews when they were expelled in 1394, and made great profits by the contracts. This, however, has been refuted, and the truth, perhaps, is, that he made his money by a profound knowledge of commerce, at a time when men in general were ignorant of its principles. He was living in 1399. He and his wife Pernelle have been the fubject of some curious enquiries at Paris, where they pretended to have found his alchemical apparatus. Paul Lucas, a thorough traveller, afferted that he had heard of him alive in India, long after his real decease. In the "Effais fur Paris," by M. St. Foix, there are many particulars of Flamel. See alfo Hermippus Redivivus, fecond edit. Lond. 1749.

FLAMINIO (GIOVANNI ANTONIO), a celebrated orator, historian, and poet of Bologna: who published a life of Albertus Magnus, in 1516. He died in 1536.

[6] Fabric. Bibl. Lat. FLAMINIO FLAMINIO (MARC ANTONIO), fon of the former, born at Imola, followed the fame purfuits as his father, and was even fuperior to him. Cardinal Farnefe, who patronized him as a wit, named him for his fecretary at the council of Trent: but he was in too infirm a flate of health to execute the commiffion. He died at Rome in 1550, aged 57. There are extant by him letters and epigrams, publifhed in 1561, 8vo, and tranflated into French verfe, by Anne des Marques, at Paris, in 1569. His Paraphrafe of thirty Pfalms, undertaken at the folicitation of cardinal Pole, was publifhed in 12mo, at Florence, in 1558. The verfification is good, and the Latinity pure. His other writings are alfo valuable.

FLAMINIUS, properly FLAMININUS (TITUS QUIN-TIUS), a celebrated Roman general, raifed to the confulfhip by his merit, in the year before Chrift 198, when he was not yet thirty years old. Scipio was the model he proposed to himself; and like him he was excellent, no less as a citizen, than as a foldier. He commanded the armies of Rome against Philip V. king of Macedon, whose army his generalship forced into the defiles of Epirus, where he defeated it. He then nearly subdued that province, with Thessay, Phocis, and the Locri.

FLAMSTEED (JOHN), a very eminent English astronomer, was born of reputable parents at Denby in Derbyshire, Aug. 19, 1646. He was educated at the free-school of Derby, where his father lived; and at fourteen was visited with a severe fit of ficknefs, which being followed by other diftempers, prevented his going to the university, as was designed. He was taken from school in 1662, and within a month or two after had Sacrobofco's book " De Sphæra," put into his hand, which he fet himfelf to read without any director. This accident, and the leifure that attended it, laid the groundwork of all that mathematical and aftronomical knowledge, for which he became afterwards fo justly celebrated. He had already turned over a great deal of history, ecclesiastical, as well as civil: but astronomy was entirely new to him, and he found great pleafure in Having translated as much from Sacrobofco, as he thought it. – neceffary, he proceeded to make dials by the direction of fuch ordinary books as he could get together; and having changed a volume of aftrology, found among his father's books, for Mr. Street's Caroline Tables, he undertook to calculate the places of the planets:

Having calculated by the Caroline Tables an eclipfe of the the fun, which was to happen June 22, 1666, he imparted it to a relation, who thewed it to Mr. Halton of Wingfield manor in Derbythire. This Halton was a good mathematician, as appears from fome pieces of his, in the appendix to Foster's "Mathematical Miscellanies." He came to see Flamsteed foon

after; and finding he was not acquainted with the aftronomical performances of others, he fent him Riccioli's "Almagestum" "Novum," and Kepler's "Tabulæ Rudolphinæ," to which he was before a stranger. He profecuted his astronomical studies from this time with all imaginable vigour and fuccefs. In 1669, he collected some remarkable eclipses of the fixed stars, by the moon, which would happen in 1670, calculating them from the Caroline Tables; and directed them to lord Brouncker, prefident of the Royal Society. This produced very good effects; for his production being read before that fociety; was fo highly approved, that it procured him letters of thanks, dated Jan. 14, 1669-70, from Oldenburg their fecretary; and from Mr. John Collins, one of their members, with whom he correfponded feveral years.

From this time he began to have accounts fent him of all the mathematical books which were published at home or abroad; and in June, 1670, his father, who had hitherto difcountenanced his studies; taking notice of his correspondence with feveral ingenious men whom he had never feen, advifed him to go to London; that he might be perfonally acquainted with them. He gladly embraced this offer, and vifited Oldenburg and Collins; and they introduced him to fir Jonas Moore; who prefented him with Townley's Micrometer, and undertook to procure him glasses for a telescope, at a moderate rate. At Cambridge, he vifited Barrow; Newton, and Wroe, then fellow of Jefus-college, of which he also entered himself a student. In the fpring of 1672, he extracted feveral observations from Gascoigne's and Crabtree's letters, which had not been made public, and translated them into Latin. He finished the transcript of Gascoigne's papers in May; and spent the remainder of the year in making observations, and in preparing advertisements of the approaches of the moon and planets to the fixed ftars for the following year. These were published in the "Philosophical Transactions," with some observations by the fame author on the planets. In 1673, he wrote a finall tract in English, concerning the true and apparent diameters of all the planets, when at their nearest or remotest distances from the earth; which tract he lent to Newton in 1685, who made use of it in the third book of his "Principia."

In 1673-4, he wrote an Ephemeris, to flew the falfity of aftrology, and the ignorance of those that pretended to it; and gave a table of the moon's rifing and fetting carefully calculated, together with the eclipfes and approaches of the moon and planets to the fixed stars. This fell into the hands of fir Jonas Moore, for whom he made a table of the moon's true fourhings that year; from which, and Philips's theory of the tides, the high waters being made, he found that they shewed the times of the the turn of the tides very nearly, whereas the common feaman's coarfe rules would err fometimes two or three hours. In 1674, paffing through London in the way to Cambridge, fir Jonas Moore informed him, that a true account of the tides would be highly acceptable to the king; upon which he composed a fmall ephemeris for his majesty's use. Sir Jonas had heard him often discourse of the barometer, and the certainty of judging of the weather by it, from a long feries of obfervations he had made upon it; and now requested of him to construct for him one of thefe glaffes, which he did, and left him materials for making more. Sir Jonas highly valued this barometer; and mentioning it as a curiofity to the king and duke of York, he was ordered to exhibit it the next day, which he did, together with Flamsteed's directions for judging of the weather from its rifing or falling. Sir Jonas was a great friend to our author; had shewn the king and duke his telefcopes and micrometer before : and, whenever he acquainted them with any thing which he had gathered from Flamsteed's discourse, he told them frankly from whom he had it, and recommended him to the nobility and gentry about the court.

Having taken his degree of mafter of arts at Cambridge, he defigned to enter into orders, and to fettle on a fmall living near Derby, promised to him by a friend of his father's. In the mean time, fir Jonas Moore, having notice of his defign, wrote to him to come to London, whither he returned Feb. 1674-5. He was entertained in the houfe of that gentleman, who had other views for ferving him, but Flamsteed persisting in his refolution to take orders, he did not diffuade him from it. March following, fir Jonas brought him a warrant to be the King's Aftronomer, with a falary of 1001. per annum, payable out of the office of ordnance, to commence from Michaelmas before; which, however, did not abate his inclinations for orders, fo that at Easter following he was ordained at Ely-house by bishop Gunning, who ever after converfed freely with him, and particularly upon the new philosophy and opinions, though that prelate always maintained the old. August 1675, the foundation of the royal observatory at Greenwich was laid; and during the building of it, Flamsteed lodged at Greenwich; and his quadrant and telescopes being kept in the queen's house there, he observed the appulses of the moon and planets to the fixed stars. In 1681, his " Doctrine of the Sphere" was published in a posthumous work of sir Jonas Moore, entitled, "A new System " of the Mathematics," printed in quarto.

About 1684, he was prefented to the living of Burstow in Surrey, which he held as long as he lived. He was, indeed, very moderately provided for, yet feems to have been quite contented, as fpiring after nothing but knowledge, and the promotion of

This, however, as it raifed him to the notice of the sciences. of the world, and recommended him to royal favour and protection, fo it likewife procured him the friendship and confidence of fome of the most illustrious perfons in the way of fcience; fuch as fir Ifaac Newton, Dr. Halley, Mr. Molineux of Dublin, Dr. Wallis, Caffini, &c. He shewed the same affiduity in labouring for the improvement of aftronomy, after this moderate provision was made for him, as he did before; witnefs the numberlefs papers addreffed by him to the fecretaries of the Royal Society, many of which are printed in the Philofophical Transactions. He spent the latter, as he had done the former part of his life, in promoting true and ufeful knowledge; and died of a strangury, Dec. 31, 1719. Though he lived to above 73 years of age, yet it is remarkable, that he had from his infancy a peculiar tendernels of conftitution; and in a letter to Mr. Collins, March 20, 1670-71, he fays, that "he shall scarcely have time to transcribe, and fit his papers for the prefs, partly, becaufe his occafions, but more frequently his diftempers, withdraw and detain him from his pen-endeavours. For the fpring," fays he, " coming on, my blood increases, which, if I should not exercise strongly, I should fpit up, or receive into my ftomach, with great detriment to my health." He was married, but had no children. His "Historia Cœlestis Britannica," was published in 1725, in three volumes, folio, and dedicated to the king by his widow. A great part of this work was printed off before his death, and the reft completed, except the prolegomena to the third volume; In the preface we are informed, that in 1704, he communicated by a friend an account of his collection of observations to the Royal Society, who were fo highly pleafed with it, that they recommended the work to prince George of Denmark. By him, Francis Roberts, efq. fir Chriftopher Wren, fir Ifaac Newton, Dr. David Gregory, and Dr. John Arbuthnot, were appointed to infpect Mr. Flamsteed's papers. This being done, and a report made in their favour, ninety-feven sheets were printed at the prince's expence before his death; after which the remainder was published at the charge of the author and his executors, and will be a noble and lafting monument to his memory. He was most highly spoken of by many contemporary writers of great eminence; particularly Wotton, in his Reflections on ancient Learning; and Dr. Keil, in his Introductio ad veram Aftronomiam.

FLASSANS (TARAUDET DE), a Provençal poet, who flourifhed in the middle of the fourteenth century; a native of Flaffans, a little village in Provence, whence he took his name, He wrote a poem, called, " Enseignemens pour éviter les trahifons de l'Amour ;" i. e. " Lessons to avoid the Treacheries of

of Love;" for which he obtained a piece of land near his native place, from a perfon named Foulques de Pontéves: but it is faid, that the leffons anfwered neither to the teacher nor the learner, both being betrayed by their miftreffes. Queen Joan employed him to make remonstrances to the emperor Charles IV. when he passed through Provence, and he acquitted himfelf ably in that office.

FLATMAN (THOMAS), an English poet, was born in Alderfgate-ftreet, London, about 1633; and educated at Winchefter school. He went from thence to New-college in Oxford; but leaving the univerfity without a degree, he removed to the Inner-Temple, where in due time he became a barrifter. It does not appear that he ever followed the profession of the law; but, having a turn for the fine arts, he indulged his inclination, and made fome proficiency both as a poet and a painter. He fpeaks of himfelf as a painter in a poem, called, "The Review;" and it appears from thence, that he drew in miniature. The third edition of his poems, with additions and amendments, was published by himself, with his portrait before them, in 1682, and dedicated to the duke of Ormond. The first poem in this collection is, " On the Death of the right honourable Thomas earl of Offory," and had been published separately the year before. Soon after, it was read by the duke of Ormond his father, who was fo extremely pleafed with it, that he fent Flatman a mourning ring, with a diamond in it worth 100l. He published also, in 1685, two Pindaric odes; one on the death of prince Rupert, the other on the death of Charles II.

In 1660, came out, under the letters T. F., a collection of poems, entitled, " Virtus Rediviva: a Panegyric on the late king Charles the First, of ever blessed memory," &c. but these not being reprinted in any edition of his " Poems," Wood will not affirm them to be Flatman's. In 1661, was published a piece in prose, entitled, "Don Juan Lamberto, or a Comical History of the late Times;" with a wooden cut before it, containing the pictures of giant Defborough, with a great club in his right hand, and of Lambert, both leading, under the arms, the meek knight Richard Cromwell: and this taking mightily, a fecond part was published the fame year, with the giant Hufonio before it, and printed with the fecond edition of the first. This witty and fatirical work, has to it the difguifed name of Montelion, knight of the oracle; but, Wood fays, the acquaintance and contemporaries of Flatman always averred him to be the author of it. Montelion's Almanack came out in 1660, 1661, 1662. The Montelions of the two last years are supposed to be Flatman's, that of the first was written by Mr. John Philips. It is remarkable, that Flatman, in his younger

Founger days had a diflike to marriage, and made a fong defcribing the incumbrances of it, with this beginning :

" Like a dog with a bottle tied close to his tail,

Like a tory in a bog, or a thief in a jail," &c.

But being afterwards, according to Wood, " fmitten with a fair virgin, and more with her fortune, he espoused her in 1672; upon which," fays the fame author, " his ingenious comrades did ferenade him that night, while he was in the embraces of his mistrefs, with the faid fong." He died at his house in Fleet-street, London, in 1688; his father, a clerk in Chancery, being then alive, and in his 80th year. It is certain, that he did not excel as a poet; Granger fays he fucceeded better as a painter, and that one of his heads is worth a ream of his Pindarics.

FLAVIAN, patriarch of Antioch, of illustrious birth, and still fuperior virtues, was placed on the patriarchal throne dur-ing the life of Paulinus. This election was confirmed by the council of Constantinople in 382, but was the origin of a schifm. Flavian expelled the Meffalian heretics from his diocefe. When the inhabitants of Antioch, vexed at a new tax imposed to celebrate the tenth year of the emperor's reign, had proceeded to various acts of outrage, particularly against the statues of the emperor and empress, Flavian interceded with Theodofius for them, and obtained their pardon by his eloquence. This happened in the year 387. He died in 404, after having been patriarch 13 years.

FLAVIAN, patriarch of Constantinople, where he fucceeded Proclus, in the year 447. Chryfaphius, favourite of the younger Theodofius, wished to drive him from his fee, but Flavian defpifed his menaces. In his time arofe the Eutychian herefy, which he condemned in a fynod held at Conftantinople. But the partizans of Eutyches condemned and deposed Flavian in 449, in the council called Latrocinium Ephefinum, or Conventus Latronum, the Affembly of Robbers. Dioscurus bishop of Alexandria, was placed at the head of this council by Theodofius, who carried matters with fuch violence, that Flavian was perfonally mal-treated, publicly fcourged, and banished to Epipas in Lydia, where he died foon after, in confequence of this scandalous usage. Before his death, he appealed to Leo, and this appeal produced another council, in which Eutyches was condemned, and the favage Diofcorus deposed. Both these Flavians are confidered as faints in the Romish church.

FLAVIGNI (VALERIEN DE), doctor of the Sorbonne, canon of Rheims, and professor of Hebrew in the royal college, was born at Laon, and died at Paris in 1674, at an advanced. age. He was a man of great violence in his conduct, and in his his writings. Few of his writings are extant, and those not very valuable. He affisted in the Polyglott of Le Jay. FLAUST (JEAN BAPTISTE). If a man deferves to be ce-

FLAUST (JEAN BAPTISTE). If a man deferves to be celebrated who employs 50 years on one work, the name of Flaust fhould not be omitted. He was an advocate in the parliament of Rouen, and his great work was entitled, "Explication de la Jurifprudence et de la contume de Normandie, dans une ordre fimple et facile." "Explication of the Jurifprudence Ufage of Normandy, in an eafy and fimple order." In two volumes, folio. He died in 1783, at the age of 72.

FLECHIER (ESPRIT), the celebrated bishop of Nimes; distinguished equally for elegant learning, abilities, and exemplary piety. He was born in 1632, at Perne, near Avignon in Provence, and educated in the fludy of literature and virtue under his uncle Hercules Audiffret. After the death of this relation, who was principal of the congregation styled, De la Doctrine Chrétienne, he appeared at Paris, about 1659, where he was soon diftinguished as a man of genius, and an able preacher. A description of a caroufal, in Latin verse, which, notwithstanding the difficulty of a subject unknown to the ancients, was pure, and claffical, first attracted the public admiration. It was published in 1669, in folio, and entitled, " Cursus Regius," and has fince been included in his miscellaneous works. His funeral orations completed the fame which his fermons had begun. He had pronounced one at Narbonne, in 1659, when professor of rhetoric there, on the bishop of that city, but this is not extant. The first of those that are published, was delivered in 1672, at the funeral of madam de Montausier, whose husband had become his patron and friend. He foon role to be the rival of Boffuet, in this fpecies of eloquence. His oration on marechal Turenne, pronounced in 1676, is esteemed the most perfect of these productions; it excited at once the liveliest regret for the deceased hero, and the highest admiration of the orator. The last oration in the collection, must have agitated his feelings, as well as exercifed his talents, for it was in honour of his welltried friend the duke of Montausier, who died in 1690. In 1679, he published his history of the emperor Theodosius the Great, the only part that was ever executed, of a plan to inftruct the dauphin, by writing for him the lives of the greatest Christian princes. The king, after having testified his regard for him, by giving him the abbey of S. Severin, and the office of almoner in ordinary to the dauphin, promoted him in 1685 to the fee of Lavaur, faying to him at the fame time, " Be not furprifed that I fo long delayed to reward your merit; I was afraid of losing the pleasure of hearing your discourses." Two years after, he was made hishop of Nismes. In his diocefe, he was no lefs remarkable for the mildnefs and indulgence by by which he drew back feveral protestants to his church, than for his general charity, and attention to the necessities of the unfortunate of all descriptions. At the time of a famine, in 1709, his charity was unbounded, and was extended to perfons of all perfuafions; and his modefty was at all times equal to his benevolence. Numbers were relieved by him, without knowing the fource of their good fortune. His father had been a tallowchandler; but Flechier had too much real greatness of mind to conceal the humblenefs of his origin: but being once infolently reproached on that fubject, he had the fpirit to reply, " I fancy, fir, from your fentiments, if you had been to born you would have made candles still." It is faid that he had a prefentiment of his death by means of a dream; in confequence of which, he employed an artist to defign a monument for him, wishing to have one that was modest and plain, not fuch as vanity or gratitude might think it necessary to erect. He urged the artist to execute this design before his death, which happened in 1710. "He died," fays d'Alembert, " lamented by the catholics, regretted by the protestants, having always exhibited to his brethren an excellent model of zeal and charity, fimplicity and eloquence."

His works are, 1. "Œuvres Méllées," miscellaneous works, 12mo, in verse and prose, both French and Latin. Of his compositions in the latter language, it is generally remarked, that they are diftinguished by classical purity and good taste. 2. An edition of Gratiani, " De casibus illustrium Virorum," 4to. 3. " Panegyrics of the Saints ;" esteemed one of the best works of the kind. 4. His funeral Orations, which are eight in number. 5. His Sermons, in 3 vols. 12mo, less forcible than his panegyrics, or his orations. He had studied old quaint discourses, which he ridiculed and called his buffoons; yet they had in fome degree vitiated his style of writing fermons. 6. " The History of Theodofius," above-mentioned. 7. " The Life of Cardinal Ximenes," one volume, 410, or two volumes, 12mo. 8. " Letters," 2 vols. 12mo, in a pure, but not an epistolary ftyle. 9. " The Life of Cardinal Commendon, translated from the Latin of Gratiani," one vol. 4to, or two vols. 12mo. 10. Posthumous Works, containing Pastoral Letters of the most excellent paternal tendernefs, and other matters.

They who compare the eloquence of his funeral orations with those of Bosfuet, whom he rivalled, fay, that in Bosfuet there is less elegance and purity of language, but greater strength and masculine character. The style of Flechier is more flowing, finished, and uniform; that of Bossfuet unequal, but fuller of those bold traits, those lively and striking figures, which are characteristic of true genius. Flechier owes more to art, Bosfuet to nature.

FLECKNOE (RICHARD), an English poet and dramatic writer in the reign of Charles II. but not too eminent to have been utterly forgotten, had not Dryden given him immortality by attacking him. He is faid to have been originally a jefuit, and to have had connexions with fome perfons of high diftinction in London, who were of the Roman catholic perfuasion. When the Revolution was completed, Dryden, having fome time before turned papist, became difqualified for holding his place of poet-laureat. It was accordingly taken from him, and conferred on Flecknoe, a man to whom Dryden is faid to have had already a confirmed averfion : and this produced the famons fatire, called from him Mac Flecknoe; one of the most spirited and amufing of Dryden's poems; and, in fome degree, the model of the Dunciad. Flecknoe wrote some plays, but not more than one of them was acted. His comedy, called, "Damoiselles à la mode," was printed in 1667, and addressed to the duke and dutchefs of Newcastle; the author had defigned it for the theatre, and was not a little chagrined at the players for refusing it. It is pleafant to observe what he faid upon this occafion. " For the acting this comedy, those who have the government of the stage have their humours, and would be intreated; and I have mine, and won't intreat them: and were all dramatic writers of my mind, they fhould wear their old plays thread-bare, ere they fhould have any new, till they better understood their own interest, and how to distinguish between good and bad."

His other dramatic pieces are, "Ermina, or the Chafte Lady; Love's Dominion; and, The Marriage of Occanus and Britannia." The fecond of thefe performances was printed in 1654, and dedicated to the lady Elizabeth Claypole; to whom the author infinuates the ufe of plays, and begs her mediation to gain a licence for acting them. It was afterwards republished in 1664, under the title of "Love's Kingdom," and dedicated to the marquis of Newcaftle. The author then with great pains introduced it on the stage, but it was condemned by the audience, which Flecknoe styles the people, and calls them judges without judgement. He owns, that his play wants much of the ornaments of the stage; but that, he stays, may be easily supplied by a lively imagination. His other works confiss of epigrams and enigmas. There is a book of his writing, called, "The Diarium, or Journal, divided into twelve jornades, in burless werefe." The time of his death is uncertain.

FLEETWOOD (WILLIAM), an English lawyer, and recorder of London in the reign of Elizabeth, was a natural son, Wood says, of Robert Fleetwood, esq. of Hesketh in Lancashire. He had a liberal education, and was for some time of Oxford. He went thence to the Middle-Temple, to study the law; law; and having quick as well as ftrong parts, became in a fhort time a very diffinguished man in his profession. His reputation was not confined to the inns of court; for when it was thought necelfary to appoint commissioners in the nature of a royal vifitation in the diocefes of Oxford, Lincoln, Peterborough, Coventry and Litchfield, Fleetwood was of the number [H]. In 1569, he became recorder of London. It does not appear, whether his interest with the earl of Leicester procured him that place or not; but it is certain, that he was confidered as a perfon entirely addicted to that nobleman's fervice, for he is ftyled in one of the bitterest libels of those times, " Leicester's mad Recorder [1];" infinuating, that he was placed in his office, to encourage those of this lord's faction in the city. He was very zealous against the papists, active in disturbing mass-houses, committing popifh priefts, and giving informations of their intrigues: so zealous, that once rushing in upon mass at the Portuguese ambassador's house, he was, for breach of privilege, committed prifoner to the Fleet, though foon releafed. In 1580, he was made ferjeant at law, and in 1592, one of the queen's ferjeants; in which post, however, he did not continue long, for he died about a year after, and was buried at Great Miffenden in Buckinghamshire, where he had purchased an eftate. He was married, and had children. Wood fays, that " he was a learned man, and a good antiquary, but of a marvellous merry, and pleafant conceit." He was farther esteemed an acute politician; which character was most likely to recommend him to his patron Leicester. He was a good popular speaker, and wrote well upon subjects of government. He made a great figure in his profession, being equally celebrated for eloquence as an advocate, and for judgement as a lawyer.

His occupations prevented him from writing much, yet there are fome fmall pieces of his in being; as, 1. "An Oration made at Guildhall before the Mayor, &c. concerning the late attempts of the Queen's Majefties feditious fubjects, Oct. 15, 1571." 2. "Annalium tam Regum Edwardi V. Richard III. et Henrici VII. quam Henrici VIII. titulorum ordine alphabetico multo jam melius quam ante digeftorum Elenchus, 1579 et 1597." 3. "A Table to the Reports of Edmund Plowden." This is in French. 4. "The Office of a Juftice of Peace; together with Inftructions how and in what manner Statutes fhall be expounded, 1658." This was a pofthumous publication.

FLEETWOOD (WILLIAM), an English bishop, was descended from the family of Fleetwood just mentioned, and born in the Tower of London, Jan. 1, 1656 [K]. He had his school learning at Eaton, from whence he was elected to King's college in Cambridge. About the time of the Revolution, he entered into holy orders; and from the first, was a celebrated preacher. He was foon after made chaplain to king William and queen Mary; and by the interest of Dr. Godolphin, at that time vice-provost of Eaton, and refidentiary of St. Paul's, he was made fellow of that college, and rector of St. Auftin's, London, which is in the gift of the dean and chapter of St. Paul's. Soon after, he obtained also the lecture of St. Dunstan's in the West, probably by his great reputation and merit as a preacher. In 1691, he published, 1. "In-fcriptionum Antiquarum Sylloge," &c. 8vo. This collection of ancient infcriptions confifts of two parts: the first, containing remarkable pagan infcriptions collected from Gruter. Reinefius, Spon, and other writers; the fecond, the ancient Christian monuments: the whole illustrated with very short notes for the use of the young antiquary. In 1692, he tranflated into English, revised, and prefixed a preface to, 2. " Jurieu's plain Method of Christian Devotion, laid down in Discourses, Meditations, and Prayers, fitted to the various occasions of a religious life;" the 27th edition of which was printed in 1750. Meanwhile, he was chiefly diftinguished by his talents for the pulpit, which rendered him fo generally admired, that he was frequently called to preach upon the most folemn occafions; as, before the king, queen, lord-mayor, &c. In 1701, he published, 3. "An Essay upon Miracles," 8vo. This work is written in the way of dialogue, and divided into two discourses. Some fingularities in it occasioned it to be animadverted upon by feveral writers, particularly by Hoadly, in " A Letter to Mr. Fleetwood, 1702;" which letter is reprinted in Hoadly's tracts, 1715, in 8vo. The author of Fleetwood's life affures us that the bishop did not give up his opinions, though he difliked, and avoided controverfy. This effay is faid to contain the fubstance of what he would have preached at Mr. Boyle's lectures, in cafe his health would have permitted him to undertake that talk when it was offered him.

in

About a week before king William's death, he was nominated to a canonry of Windfor; but the grant not having paffed the feals in time, the houfe of commons addreffed the queen to give that canonry to their chaplain. His patron, lord Godolphin, laid the matter before the queen, who faid, that, if king William had given it to Mr. Fleetwood, he fhould have it; and accordingly he was inftalled in 1702. In 1704, he published without his name, a piece, entitled, 4. " The Reasonable Communicant; or, an Explanation of the Doctrine of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper." This book, of which there have been feveral editions, has, in the catalogue of the tracts distributed by the Society for propagating Christian Knowledge, been given to another person; but it is agreed, at length, to be Fleetwood's. In 1705, he published in two volumes, 8vo, 5. "Sixteen Practical Discourses upon the relative duties of Parents and Children, Husbands and Wives, Masters and Servants; with three Sermons upon the cafe of Self-murder." About this time he took a refolution of retiring from the noife and hurry of the town; much to the concern of his friends and admirers. His parishioners of St. Austin's were fo deeply affected with it, that, among other temptations, they offered to keep him a curate : but nothing could divert him from his refolution; fo that he gave up his preferments, and withdrew to Wexham, a fmall rectory of about 601. a year in Buckinghamshire. Here he enjoyed the tranquillity and pleasure of that privacy for which he had fo much longed, in a commodious house and gardens; and what made this retirement more agreeable, was its nearnefs to his beloved Eton. Here alfo he indulged his natural inclination for the fludy of British history. and antiquities, which no man understood better : and, in 1707, gave a specimen of his great skill therein, in 6. " Chronicon Preciosum: or, an account of the English money, the price of corn, and other commodities, for the last 600 years. In a letter to a Student of the University of Oxford;" without his name.

He did not remain long in this retirement: for, in 1706, upon the death of Beveridge, he was nominated by the queen to the see of St. Asaph, without any folicitation, or even knowledge of his own; fo that, as he affured a friend, the first intelligence he had of his promotion was from the Gazette. He was but just gone out from waiting as chaplain, when his predecessor died; upon which one of the ladies of the bed-chamber asking the queen, whom she intended to make bishop of St. Afaph? her majefty replied, " One whom you will be pleafed with; whom you have lately heard preach: I intend it for Dr. Fleetwood." This spontaneous goodness of the queen contributed to reconcile him to the world again ; for he thought he faw the hand of God in it, and fo was confecrated in June, 1708. In this station he acted in the most exemplary manner, His biographer tells us, that " his great and clear reputation, his uncommon abilities and unblemished life, which fet off the epifcopal character with fo much luftre, his obliging and easy deportment, free from the least tincture of pride, or thew fhew of fuperiority, did not only place him above all indecent treatment, which was a great point gained in those unequal times, but procured much reverence and affection to his perfon from a clergy, that almost to a man differed from him in principle."

In the mean time he preached often before the queen, and feveral of those fermons were printed. He attended the house of lords constantly, and acted there with dignity and spirit. He vifited his diocefe; and his charge to his clergy, published in 1710, shews that he was a zealous, but not a furious, churchman. Neverthelefs, he was highly difgusted with the change of the ministry that year, and withdrew from court. He could not be induced to give any countenance to the measures of the new ministry, though endeavours had been used, and intimations given by the queen herfelf, who had a great value for him, how pleafing his frequent coming to court would be to her. The fame year, he published without his name, a piece, entitled, 7. " The Thirteenth Chapter to the Romans, vindicated from the abuses put upon it. Written by a Curate of Salop, and directed to the Clergy of that County, and the neighbouring ones of North Wales, to whom the author wisheth patience, moderation, and a good understanding for half an hour." Upon the pretended authority of this chapter, the regal power had been magnified in fuch a manner, that tyranny might feem the ordinance of God, and the most abject flavery to be founded in the principles of religion. The bifhop was highly offended with this doctrine; and in this pamphlet argues, " that this chapter of St. Paul requires of no people any more fubmission to the higher powers, than the laws of their feveral countries require."

Notwithstanding his difference with the ministry, when a fast was appointed to be kept, Jan. 16, 1711-12, he was chosen by the house of lords to preach before them; but, by some means or other getting intelligence that he had cenfured the peace, they contrived to have the houfe adjourned beyond that day. This put it indeed out of his power to deliver his fentiments from the pulpit; yet he put the people in possession of them, by fending them from the prefs. Though without a name, yet from the fpirit and language it was eafily known whofe fermon it was. It gave offence to fome ministers of state, who now only waited for an opportunity to be revenged; and this opportunity the bishop soon gave them, by publishing, 8. " Four Sermons, viz. On the Death of queen Mary, 1694; on the Death of the duke of Gloucester, 1700; on the Death of king William, 1701; on the Queen's accession to the throne, 1702. With a preface," 1712, 8vo. This preface, bearing very hard upon those who had the management of public affairs, was made an object of attack, and, upon a motion made for that purpose in the house of commons, an order was made to burn burn it, which was accordingly done on the 12th of May. The bishop, knowing this to be the effect of party rage, was very little affected with it; but rather pleafed to think, that the very means they had used to suppress his book was only a more effectual way of publishing, and exciting the whole nation to read it. It was owing to this certainly, that it was printed in the Spectator [1], and thereby difperfed into feveral thousand hands. This fame year, and indeed before his fermons, he published, but without his name, 9. " The Judgement of the Church of England in the cafe of Lay-Baptism, and of Diffenter's Baptifm; by which it appears, that fhe hath not, by any public act of hers, made or declared Lay-Baptism to be invalid. The fecond edition. With an additional letter from Dr. John Cofin, afterwads bishop of Durham, to Mr. Cordel, who scrupled to communicate with the French Protestants upon some of the. modern pretences," 8vo. This piece was occafioned by the controverly about Lay-Baptism, which was then an object of public notice.

In 1713, he published without his name, 10. " The Life and Miracles of St. Wenefrede, together with her Litanies, with fome historical observations made thereon." In the preface, he declares the motives which induced him to beftow fo much pains . upon this life of St. Wenefrede: and thefe were, that the concourse of people to the well which goes by her name was very great, that the papifts made use of this to influence weak minds. that they had lately reprinted a large life of this faint in English, that these confiderations might justly affect any protestant divine, and that for certain reasons they affected him in particular. Upon the demife of the queen, and the Hanover fucceffion, this prelate had as much reason to expect, that his zeal and fervices should be rewarded, as any of his rank and function : but he did not make any display of his merit, either to the king or his ministers. However, upon the death of Moore, bishop of Ely, in 1714, Tenison, then archbishop of Canterbury, fremoully recommended Fleetwood to the vacant fee; and he was accordingly, without the least application from himself directly or indirectly, nominated to it.

We have already mentioned ten publications of this author, befides occafional fermons, of which he publifhed many that were very excellent. There remain yet to be mentioned fome pieces of a fmaller kind; as, 11. "The Counfellor's Plea for the Divorce of fir G. D. and Mrs. F. 1715." This relates to an affair which was brought before the houfe of lords. 12. "Papifts not excluded from the Throne upon the account of Religion. Being a vindication of the right reverend lord bifhop of

5. C. A. Mark Bangor's

Bangor's Prefervative, &c. in that particular. In a fhort Dialogue, 1717." 13. " A Letter from Mr. T. Burdett, who was executed at Tyburn for the murder of Capt. Falkner, to fome Attornies Clerks of his acquaintance: written fix days before his execution, 1717." 14. "A Letter to an Inhabitant of the Parish of St. Andrew's, Holborn, about new ceremonies in the Church, 1717" 15. "A Defence of praying before Sermon, as directed by the 55th canon." All these were published without his name. The indefatigable labours of this prelate brought him at length into a bad state of health, which made life troublefome to him a good while before his death. He died at Tottenham in Middlefex, whither he had retired for the benefit of the air, Aug. 4, 1723; and was interred in the cathedral church of Ely, where a monument was erected to him by his lady, who did not long furvive him. He left behind him an only fon, Dr. Charles Fleetwood, who inherited his paternal estate in Lancashire; and had been presented a few years before by his father, as bishop of Ely, to the great rectory of Cottenham in Cambridgeshire, which he did not long enjoy.

Bishop Fleetwood's character was great in every respect. His virtue was not of the fanatical kind, nor was his piety the least tinctured with superstition; yet he cultivated and practifed both to perfection. As for his accomplishments, he was incontessibly the best preacher of his time; and, for occasional fermons, may be confidered as a model. He was also very learned, but chiefly distinguished as an antiquary. Dr. Hickes acknowledges him as an encourager of his great work, entitled, "Linguarum Veterum Septentrionalium Thesaurus;" and Mr. Hearne often confess himfelf much obliged by many fingular instances of his friendship.

FLEMING (ROBERT), was a North Briton, and a very powerful preacher; born at Bathens in 1630. He paffed his courfe of theology in the univerfity of St. Andrews, under the conduct of Mr. Rutherford, and was called to a paftoral charge before he was quite 23 years old, which he ferved in till he was ejected by the Glafgow act, paffed a little after the reftoration of Charles II. when he became a fugitive, and fettled at laft at Rotterdam, as minister of the Scots congregation there. He died July 25, 1694, aged 64. His best production is his "Fulfilling of the Scriptures;" which has been well received amongst the different.

FLETCHER (Dr. RICHARD), the father of the dramatic poet, was a native of Kent, and was educated at Benet-college in Cambridge, of which he became fellow. He was appointed dean of Peterborough in 1583; and, in 1586, attended Mary queen of Scots, at the time of her execution. It is a proof of his zeal, rather than of his judgement or humanity, that that he then preffed her very importunately, certainly very unfeafonably, to change her religion: but she defired him three or four times over, not to give himfelf or her any more trouble; " for," fays fhe, " I was born in this religion, I have lived in this religion, and am refolved to die in this religion." In 1589, he was made bishop of Bristol: he was translated to Worcefter in 1592, and to London in 1594; foon after which, being a widower, he took to his fecond wife a very handfome woman, the lady Baker of Kent. Queen Elizabeth, who had an extreme averfion to the clergy's marrying, was highly offended at the bifhop. She thought it very indecent for an elderly clergyman, a bishop, and one that had already had one wife, to marry a fecond : and the gave fuch a loofe to her indignation, that, not content with forbidding him her prefence, fhe ordered archbishop Whitgift to suspend him from the exercise of his episcopal function, which was accordingly done. He was afterwards reftored to his bishopric, and in some measure to the queen's favour: neverthelefs, the difgrace fat fo heavy on his mind, that it is thought to have hastened his end. He died fuddenly in his chair, at his house in London, in 1596; being, to all appearance, well, fick, and dead, in a quarter of an hour. He was an immoderate taker of tobacco; the qualities of which being then not well known, and supposed to have something poifonous in them, occafioned Camden to impute his death to it, as he does in his annals of Elizabeth's reign.

FLETCHER (GILES), brother to bifhop Fletcher, and a native of the fame county, was a very ingenious man. He received his education at Eton; and, in 1565, was elected thence to King's-college in Cambridge, where he took a batchelor's of arts degree in 1569, a master's in 1573, and that of LL. D. in 1581. He was, fays Wood, an excellent poet, and a very accomplished man; and his abilities recommending him to queen Elizabeth, he was employed by her as a commissioner into Scotland, Germany, and the Low Countries. Of his poetical talent, however, no proofs are known to be extant. In 1588, he was fent ambaffador to Ruffia; not only to conclude a league with the emperor there, but also to re-establish and put into good order the decayed trade of our Russia company. He met, at first, with a cold reception, and even rough usage: for the Dutch, envying the exclusive privilege which the Ruffia company enjoyed of trading thither, had done them ill offices at that barbarous and arbitrary court: and a falle rumour then fpread, of our fleet being totally destroyed by the Spanish armada, had created in the czar a contempt for the English, and a prefumption that he might fafely injure those who were not in a capacity to take revenge. But the ambassador foon effaced those ill impressions; and having obtained good and advantageous conditions, returned to England with fafety and honour. Fuller VOL. VI.

Fuller fays, that upon his arrival at London, " he fent for an intimate friend, with whom he heartily expressed his thankfulnefs to God for his fafe return from fo great a danger. For the poets cannot fancy Ulyffes more glad to be come out of the den of Polyphemus, than he was to be rid of the power of fuch a barbarous prince: who counting himfelf, by a proud and voluntary miltake, emperor of all nations, cared not for the law of all nations; and who was fo habited in blood, that, had he cut off this ambaffador's head, he and his friends might have fought their own amends, but the question is, where they would have found it." Shortly after his return, he was made fecretary to the city of London, and a master of the Court of Requests: and, in 1597, treasurer of St. Paul's. This worthy perfon died in 1610. From the observations he had made during his embaffy into Ruffia, he drew up a curious account, " Of the Ruffe Commonwealth : or manner of Government by the Ruffe Emperor, commonly called the Emperor of Mofkovia, with the manners and fashions of the people of that country, 1590," 8vo. This work was quickly suppressed, left it might give offence to a prince in amity with England: but it was reprinted in 1643, 12mo, and is inferted in Hakluyt's " Navigations, Voyages, &c." vol. i. only a little contracted. Camden, speaking of this book, styles it, " libellum in quo plurima observanda." He left two sons, both learned men, Giles and Phinehas; of whom a further account will be given.

FLETCHER (JOHN), an English dramatic writer, was born in Northamptonshire, in 1576; and was the fon of Dr. Richard Fletcher, bishop of London. He was educated in Cambridge, and probably at Benet-college, fince his father, by his laft will and testament, was a benefactor to it. He wrote plays jointly with Beaumont; and Wood fays that he affifted Ben Jonfon in a comedy, called, " The Widow." After Beaumont's death, which happened in 1615, he is faid to have confulted Shirley, in forming the plots of feveral of his plays; but which those were, we have no means of discovering. Beaumont and Fletcher, however, wrote plays in concert, though it is not known what thare each bore in forming the plots, writing the Icenes, &c. and the general opinion is, that Beaumont's judgement was usually employed in correcting and retrenching the fuperfluities of Fletcher's wit. Yet, if Winstanley may be credited, the former had his fhare likewife in the drama, in forming the plots, and writing the fcenes: for that author relates, that these poets meeting once at a tavern, in order to form the rude draught of a tragedy, Fletcher undertook to kill the king; and that his words being overheard by a waiter, theywere feized and charged with high treafon: till the miltake foon appearing, and that the plot was only against a theatrical king, the affair ended in mirth. Fletcher died of the plague at London ~ * * *

London in 1625, and was interred in St. Mary Overy's church in Southwark. Sir Afton Cockaine among his poems has an epitaph on Fletcher and Massinger, who, he tells us, lie both buried there in one grave: though Wood informs us, from the parifhregister there, that Massinger was buried, not in the church, but in one of the four yards belonging to it. For a judgement upon this author, Edward Philips observes, that " he was one of the happy triumvirate of the chief dramatic poets of our nation in the last foregoing age, among whom there might be faid to be a fymmetry of perfection, while each excelled in his peculiar way: Ben Jonfon in his elaborate pains and knowledge of authors; Shakspeare in his pure vein of wit and natural poetic height; and Fletcher in a courtly elegance and genteel familiarity of ftyle, and withal a wit and invention fo overflowing, that the luxuriant branches thereof were frequently thought convenient to be lopped off by his almost infeparable companion Francis Beaumont [M]." Dryden tells us, that Beaumont and Fletcher's plays in his time were the most pleafing and frequent entertainments, two of theirs being acted through the year for one of Shakspeare's or Jonson's [N]; and the reasonhe affigns is, becaufe there is a certain gaiety in their comedies, and a pathos in their most ferious plays, which fuits generally with all mens humours. The cafe, however, is now reverfed, for Beaumont and Fletcher are not acted above once for fifty times that the plays of Shakfpeare are reprefented. Their merit, however, is undoubted; and though it could not avert the cenfure of the cynical Rymer, has been acknowledged by our greatest poets. Their dramas are full of fancy and variety, interspersed with beautiful passages of genuine poetry; but there is not the nice difcrimination of character, nor the ftrict adherence to nature that we justly admire in Shakspeare.

Some of Beaumont and Fletcher's plays were printed in 4to, during the lives of their authors; and in 1645, twenty years after Fletcher's death, there was published a folio collection of them. The first edition of all their plays, amounting to upwards of fifty, was published in 1679, folio. Another edition was published in 1711, in feven volumes, 8vo; another in 1751, in ten volumes, 8vo. Another by Colman, also in ten volumes, in 1778.

FLETCHER (PHINEHAS), one of the fons of Giles Fletcher, known as a poet chiefly by his composition entitled, "The Purple Island." He was born probably about 1582, as he was elected from Eton to King's college, in 1600.

His poem is an allegorical description of man; and is a much extended amplification of the allegory which Spenser has given in the ninth canto of his second book, and which even there is quaint and tedious. The first five cantos are minutely anatomical; after which, the author proceeds to perfonify the mind and intellectual faculties. Here the attention is relieved and rewarded, and much more of the poet appears, though wanting the chaftifement of a found judgement or cultivated talent. He wrote alfo pifcatory eclogues and mifcellanies; and from his dedication of thefe poems to his friend Edmund Benlowes, it appears that they were written very early in life, which circumftance, added to the prevailing tafte of the age, fufficiently apologizes for their faults. Phinehas was educated at King's-college, Cambridge, and was prefented by fir Henry Willoughby, bart. to the living of Hilgay in Norfolk, in 2621. It appears, from the hiftory of the county, that he held this benefice 29 years: and therefore, as it does not appear that he had other preferment, we may fuppofe that he died in 1650.

So much fuited was his poem of "The Purple Island," to the taste of his times, that Quarles, in the commendatory verses prefixed, takes merit to himself for having intended to compose a similar poem, had he not found the subject pre-occupied by this author. The poems of P. Fletcher were published in 4to, at Cambridge, in 1633. "The Purple Island" was republished with Giles Fletcher's "Christ's Victory," at London, in 1783, but in an imperfect manner. The piscatory eclogues, &c. at Edinburgh, in 1772.

FLETCHER (GILES), brother of Phinehas. It is uncertain when he was born, but he proceeded in the theological line, as well as his brother, took the degree of bachelor in divinity, and died at his living of Alderton, Suffolk, in 1623, "equally beloved," fays Wood, " of the mules and graces." There was certainly a great abundance of poetry in this family, fo as to justify the expression of Benlowes in his commendatory verses to Phinehas Fletcher:

"For were't a stain 'twere Nature's, not thy own;

For thou art poet born, who know thee know it;

Thy brother, fire, thy very name's a Poet."

Giles Fletcher was of Trinity-college, Cambridge; and we learn from his dedication to Dr. Nevyle, mafter of that college, that he owed his admiffion there to his favour. His poem is certainly written on a happier fubject than that of his brother, and the perfonifications in it are more natural. It was first published at Cambridge, in 1610, and again in 1640. There is a confiderable command of language, for the time, in both these writters.

FLEURY (CLAUDE), a French writer, was the fon of an advocate, and born at Paris, in 1640. He difcovered early a strong inclination for letters, and applied himself particularly to the law. He was made advocate for the parliament of Paris in 1658, and attended the bar nine years. Then he took orders, for which he was most highly qualified by his virtues, as well as his learning; and in 1672, was made preceptor to the princes of Conti. In 1680, he had the care of the education of the count de Vermandois, admiral of France. After the death of this prince, which happened in about four years, the king preferred him to the abbey of Loc-Dicu, belonging to the Ciftercians, and in the diocefe of Rhodez. In 1689, the king made him fub-preceptor to the dukes of Burgundy, Anjou, and Berri, in which important employment he acted under the great Fenelon. In 1696, he was admitted a member of the French academy. In 1706, when the education of the three princes was finished, the king gave him the rich priory of Argenteuil, belonging to the Benedictines, in the diocefe of Paris, upon which promotion he refigned the abbey of Loc-Dieu. If he had possefied ambition to folicit the greatest situations, he would have obtained them, but his difinterestedness was equal to his other virtues. He was a hermit in the midft of the court. In 1716, he was chosen confessor to Louis XV. in which fituation it was faid of him that his only fault was that of being 75 years old, and, in 1723, he died, aged 82.

His works were numerous, and all excellent in their kinds. He wrote, 1. " Mœurs des Ifraelites," " Manners of the Ifraelites," a masterly picture of the lives of holy men under the first covenant, which was followed by, 2. " Mœurs des Chrétiens," " Manners of Christians," fince united with the other in a fingle volume; written with the true spirit of Christianity, and as excellent an introduction to ecclefialtical, as the other is to facred history. 3. " Ecclesiastical History," in 13 vols. 4to, or 20 vols. 12mo. A treasure of knowledge in that line, written with much fimplicity and edifying fincerity, but in a negligent style, mixed with Greek and Latin idioms. The most valuable part (for the facts may be met with elfewhere) is the preliminary differtations, written with purity, force, and precifion, and containing the refult of profound meditation, on the most important fubjects connected with church history. These have been printed separately in one volume, 12mo. 4. " Institution of Eccle-'fiastical Law," 2 vols. 12mo, a good work, but too concise. 5. "Historical Catechism," one vol. 12mo. an excellent introduction for children; with a preliminary difcourse fit to rank with those in the ecclesiastical history. 6. " A Treatise on the choice and method of Studies." 7. " Duties of Masters and Servants." 8. " The Life of La Mere d'Arboufe," who reformed the convent of Val-de-Grace, 12mo. 9. "Portrait of the duke of Burgundy," 12mo, 1714. 10. " Treatife on Public Law," a posthumous work, in 2 volumes, 12mo, important and excellent in its matter, but not completed by the last touches of the author. An edition of his works, except the ecclefiastical hiftory, was published at Nismes, in 1781, in 5 vols. 8vo. There was another learned Fleury, who published the Delphin edition of Apuleius, in two volumes, quarto, under the name of "Julianus Floridus," his real name being Julian Fleury. He began Ausonius also, but it was not completed.

Fleury, though a zealous divine of the Romifh church, was by no means a bigot. He was indeed a philofopher as well as a divine, and what very few are, a philofopher in practice as well as fpeculation. He is faid to have taken an extreme delight in reading Plato; and after the example of this great ancient, would often have private conferences with focieties of the learned, which chiefly turned on the illuftration of the fcriptures. He was a great lover of folitude, yet was not referved, but would fpeak his mind freely upon the moft important and even delicate fubjects. Conftantly attentive to, and punctual in the difcharge of his duty, he took no fteps to be rich or great, cherifhed no principles of ambition, but preferred the glory of doing uleful fervices to his country, to any honours which his uncommon talents and merit might juftly have claimed. A noble example to divines of all churches, well worthy of ftudy and imitation.

FLEURY (ANDRE' HERCULE DE), the celebrated cardinal of that name, was born in 1653, at Lodève in Languedoc, but was brought to Paris at the age of fix, and there educated for the church. He diftinguished himself in the progress of his ftudies; and when he began to mix with the world, appeared there with the natural advantages of a handfome figure, pleafing address, and well-managed wit. His first preferment was that of a canon of Montpellier; he was also a doctor of the Sorbonne. But his friends becoming numerous, much intereft was made for him, and in 1698, Louis XIV. named him bishop of Frejus. "I have made you wait a long time," faid the king, " but you have fo many friends, that I was determined to stay till I could have the fole merit of preferring you." Louis XIV. a little before he died, appointed him preceptor to his grandfon, in which office he fucceeded Bofluet and Fenelon. In 1726, he was made cardinal, and foon after advanced to the place of prime minister. He was then turned 70. Yet the weight of this active post did not alarm him; and, to the age of 90, he manifested a mind in full vigour, and capable of conducting affairs. From 1726 to 1740, every thing prospered, He commenced and brought to a glorious conclusion for his country, the war for the fucceffion in Spain; and he added Lorraine to the French territory. In the war which commenced in 1740, he was not fo fortunate; and in 1743 he died, full of grief for a fuccession of misfortunes, of which the nation reproached him as the author. A too rigid attention to occonomy, had led him to neglect the marine of his country, and the fucceffes of England

England by fea, completed the evil which had been thus begun. He was of a mild and tranquil character, a lover of peace, and not a man to make himself feared. He governed, fays Millot, if not like a fublime genius who executes great things, at least like a prudent man, who accommodates his plans to circumstances, prefers effential to specious advantages, and regards tranquillity and order as the foundation of public happinefs. He had neither the pride of Richelieu, nor the avarice of Mazarin. No minister could be lefs costly to the state; his income did not amount to five thousand pounds sterling a year, one half of which was employed in fecret acts of benevolence. In the ftate of diforder to which the profusion of Louis XIV. had reduced the finances of France, it was happy for that country to have fuch a minister as Fleury, whose pacific turn counterbalanced the impetuofity of Villars, which would continually have plunged the country in new wars.

FLINK (GODFREY), a celebrated Dutch painter, a pupil of Rembrandt, whose style he imitated for a time with great success; he then applied himself to the Italian manner, in which he was also successful. He died in 1660, at the age of only 44 years.

FLODOARD, or Frodoard, an historian. He was originally of Epernai, but afterwards had preferment in the church of Rheims, where he wrote a chronicle and a history. The chronicle extends from the year 919 to 966. His history is that of the church of Rheims, regularly continued from its foundation, to the year 949. The best edition is of 1617. Flodoard was alfo a poet. He composed in verse the history of the popes, as far as Leo VII. and the triumphs of Jesus Christ and the faints, in nineteen books. He was once near being promoted to be bishop of Noyon, but was disappointed. He died in 966, at the age of 73.

FLORIO (JOHN), the Refolute, as he used to style himself, was born in London in the reign of Henry VIII. and descended from the Florii of Sienna in Tufcany. A little before that time his father and mother, who were Waldenfes, had fled from the Valtoline into England, from the perfecutions of popery: but, when Edward the Sixth died, and the protestant religion became oppressed under Mary, they left England, and went to fome other country, where John Florio received his juvenile literature. Upon the re-establishment of protestantism by Elizabeth, they returned; and Florio for a time lived in Oxford, About 1576, Barnes, bishop of Durham, sending his son to Magdalen-college, Florio was appointed to attend him as preceptor in French and Italian: at which time he was admitted à member of that college, and became a teacher of those languages in the univerfity. After James came to the crown, he was appointed tutor to prince Henry in those languages; and at Q4, length length made one of the privy-chamber, and clerk of the clofet to queen Anne, to whom he was alfo tutor. He was a very ufeful man in his profession, zealous for the protestant religion, and much devoted to the English nation. Retiring to Fulham in Middlefex, to avoid the plague which was then in London, he was feized and carried off by it in 1625, aged about 80.

He was the author of feveral works, 1. "First Fruits, which yield familiar speech, merry proverbs, witty sentences, and golden fayings, 1578," 4to, and 1591, 8vo. 2. " Perfect Introduction to the Italian and English Tongues." Printed with the former, and both dedicated to Robert earl of Leicester. 3. "Second Fruits to be gathered of twelve trees, of divers but delightfome taftes to the tongues of Italian and English men, 1591," 8vo. 4. "Garden of Recreation, yielding fix thoufand Italian Proverbs." Printed with the former. 5. " Dictionary, Italian and English, 1597," folio. It was afterwards augmented by him, and published in 1611 in folio, by way of compliment to his royal mistres, under this title, "Queen Anna's New World of Words." This was a work of great merit, being at that time by far the most perfect of the kind. The author, however, laboured to make it still more perfect, by collecting many thousand words and phrases, to be added to the next edition: but, not living to complete this, the care of it fell to one Gio. Torriano an Italian, and professor of the Italian tongue in London; who, after revising, correcting, and supplying many more materials out of the Dictionary of the Academy della Crusca, printed them in 1659, folio, all in their proper places. 6. " The Essays of Montaigne," translated into English, and dedicated to queen Anna, 1603, 1613, 1632, folio. Prefixed to this work, we find rather a long copy of verses, addressed to him by Samuel Daniel, the poet and hiltoriographer, whole fifter Florio had married. Wood fays, that he wrote other things, but he had not feen them.

FLORIS (FRANCIS), an eminent painter, was the fon of a good fculptor at Antwerp, where he was born in 1520. He followed his father's profession till he was twenty years old. Then he went to Liege, to learn the art of painting, of Lambert Lombard; and thence travelled into Italy, where he applied himfelf ftrenuously to defigning, keeping his eye constantly upon the works of Michael Angelo. When he returned to his own country, he grew famous, and consequently rich, his performances being good and numerous; yet he was greatly addicted to drinking. He worked feven hours a day with application and pleasure, and the remainder he spent with drinking companions. It was a common faying with him, "Work is my life, but play is my death." He died at fifty years of age. He has been called the Raphael of Flanders.

FLORUS (LUCIUS ANNÆUS), an ancient Latin historian of the fame family with Seneca and Lucan, flourisched in the reigns of Trajan and Adrian, and wrote an abridgement of the Roman history in four books. It is believed, that the poet Florus, whose verses Spartian quotes in the life of the emperor Adrian, is the fame with the historian. Florus fays,

> " Ego nolo Cæfar effe, Ambulare per Britannos, Scythicas pati pruinas:" emperor pleafantly replied

To whom the emperor pleafantly replied,

" Ego nolo Florus effe, Ambulare per tabernas, Latitare per popinas, Culices pati rotundos."

What makes it more reasonable to suppose them the fame is, that the phrase of the historian favours strongly of the poet, is full of flowers and exuberance, and not altogether free from the fabulous. Thus in the seventeenth chapter of the second book, where he relates the expedition of Decimus Brutus along the Celtic and Gallic coasts, he affirms, that Brutus never stopped his victorious course, till he beheld the fun fall into the ocean, and with horror heard its fire extinguish in the waters. He is also notoriously incorrect in his chronology.

Neverthelefs, it is agreed on all hands, that, whatever imperfections Florus may have, Sigonius went too far, when he called him an impertinent writer. He has given a very concife and elegant history of Rome, from its foundation to its fettlement under Augustus; has described it in a very agreeable and picturesque manner; and has scattered throughout his narrative reflections, which shew a force of parts and judgement, and raife him above the common level of writers. Some have doubted, whether Florus in this hiftory did not mean to give an epitome of Livy: but there feems no just ground for fuch an opinion, the method followed by the historian being very different from that of an epitomizer. More ridiculous are they, who have accused Florus of contriving the loss of Livy's history, for the fake of enhancing the value of his own abridgment : as if it could have been in the power of any fingle man, or indeed any body of men whatever, to produce an effect of fo extenlive a nature.

Others again have made Seneca the author of this hiftory of Florus, upon the authority of Lactantius. This father has afcribed to Seneca, as the inventor, a division of the Roman empire into the four different feasons of Infancy, Youth, Manhood, and Old Age[0]: and, because a division of the same nature is feen in Florus's preface, they concluded Seneca to have been the author, and Florus nothing more than a fictitious name. But Seneca and Florus have differed in this matter enough, one would think, to prevent their being confounded. Seneca makes the Youth of Rome, as he terms it, reach to the end of the last Punic war; while Florus continues it only to the first. Seneca begins its Old Age, when the civil wars broke out between Cæfar and Pompey; whereas Florus only reckons it from the eftablishment of Augustus in absolute monarchy. It is probable, indeed, that Florus made use of Seneca's thought: but then, we fee, he has altered it agreeably to his own judgement. Another circumstance has given room to this conjecture, which is, that Florus and Seneca being both of the family of the Annæi, their names may have been confounded, and Florus called Seneca, as it is faid that he is in fome few copies: but this is not thought of any decifive weight. On the other hand, Voffius fufpects Florus to have been the author of Octavia, a tragedy, printed among those of Seneca. It may not be amifs to obferve, that the very high praifes he has frequently given to Spain, which is supposed to have been his country, have led to a fufpicion that he has occafionally tranfgreffed the bounds of truth, in its favour, particularly when he treats of the warlike exploits of Sertorius.

There have been feveral editions of this author. Madame Dacier, then M. le Fevre, published him in 4to, for the use of the dauphin, at Paris, in 1674. Grævius gave another edition in 1680, 8vo, which was afterwards republished at Amsterdam, in 1702, with great improvements and ornaments, in 2 vols. 8vo. The best edition is that of Duker, in 8vo, printed in 1722, and again in 1744.

FLUDD (ROBERT), an English philosopher, was the son of fir Thomas Fludd, knight, sometime treasurer of war to queen Elizabeth in France and the Low Countries; and was born at Milgate in Kent, in 1574. He was admitted of St. John'scollege, Oxford, in 1591; and having taken both the degrees in arts, applied himfelf to phyfic. Then he fper t fix years in tra-velling through France, Spain, Italy, and Germany: in most of which countries he not only became acquainted with feveral of the nobility, but read lectures to them. After his return, being in high repute for his chemical knowledge, he accumulated the degrees of bachelor and doctor of physic. This was in 1605; about which time he practifed in London, and became fellow of the college of phyficians. He did not begin to publish till 1616, but afterwards became a voluminous writer, being the author of about twenty works. Fie was effeemed a very great philosopher, and certainly was posseffed of abilities and learning: but perfectly effranged from common fenfea fenfe, and owed the greateft part of his reputation to that paffion in human nature, which makes us apt to admire most what we least understand. He was a zealous brother of the order of Rosicrucians, in whose defence he drew his pen. He doted upon the wonders of chemistry, or rather alchemistry, and derived every thing, not excepting even the miracles and mysteries of religion, originally from it. His books are written mostly in Latin, and are as dark and mysterious in their language, as in their matter.

Some of his productions were aimed against Kepler and Merfennus; and he had the honour of replies from both those philosophers. He wrote two books against Mersennus, thus entitled : the first, " Sophiæ cum Moria certamen, in quo lapis Lydius, a fallo structore Patre Marino Merfenno Monacho reprobatus, celeberrima voluminis fui Babylonici in Genefim figmenta accurate examinat. Franc. 1629," folio. The fecond, " Summum Bonorum, quod est verum Magiz, Cabalz, Alchymiæ, Fratrum Rofeæ Crucis Verorum, subjectum: in dictarum scientiarum laudem, in insignis calumniatoris Fr. Mar. Mersenni dedecus publicatum, per Joachim. Frizium. 1629." folio. Merfennus desiring Gassendus to give his judgement on thefe two books of Fludd against him, that great man drew up an answer divided into three parts: the first of which fifts the principles of Fludd's whimfical philosophy, as they lie scattered throughout his works; the fecond is against "Sophiæ cum Moria certamen ;" and the third against " Summum Bonorum, &c." This answer, called, " Examen Fluddanæ Philosophiæ," is dated Feb. 4, 1629: and is printed in the third volume of Gassendus's works in folio. In the dedication to Mersennus, this antagonist fairly allows Fludd the merit of extensive learning.

This philofopher, if fo he can be called, died at his houfe in Coleman-ftreet, London, in 1637. The reader may fee a catalogue of all his works in Wood's Athenæ; but to gratify his prefent curiofity, without impofing upon ourfelves the difagreeable tafk of transcribing a great many tedious unintelligible titles, we will fubjoin the few following, by way of specimen. "Utriufque Cosmi, Majoris et Minoris, Metaphysica, Phyfica, et Technica Historia.—De Naturæ Simia, feu Technica Microcosmi Historia.—De Supernaturali, Naturali, Præternaturali, et Contranaturali Microcosmi Historia.—Medicina Catholica, feu Mysterium Artis Medicandi Sacrarium.—Pulfus, feu nova et arcana pulsum historia, e facro fonte radicaliter extracta," &c.

FOES, or FOESIUS (ANUTIUS), a very learned and celebrated phyfician, was born at Metz, in 1528, and became extremely skilled in the Greek and Latin languages. He translated into Latin the whole works of Hippocrates, and judiciously corrected corrected the Greek text as he went along. Huetius, in his book, De claris interpretibus, places him among the better fort of translators; and pronounces him far superior to all who had attempted to translate Hippocrates. He joined to the works of Hippocrates, the "Scholia of Palladius," upon his treatife of fractures, which was translated by St. Albin, a physician of Metz. He composed a kind of dictionary to Hippocrates, entitled, "Occonomia Hippocratis," in alphabetical order; and was the author of some other works. He translated, moreover, the Commentaries of Galen, upon the second book of Hippocrates, "concerning Epidemic Maladies." Foesius practifed physic a long time in Lorraine, and in other places, with high reputation and success; and died in 1596.

FOGLIETA, or FOLIETA (UBERTO), a learned Genoefe prieft, born in the year 1518, being banished from Genoa, on account of the freedom displayed in some of his writings, employed himfelf in exile in the study and composition of history. Hippolyto cardinal d'Este, became his patron, and received him into his house at Rome, where he died in 1581. His works were numerous, of which the following are the chief: 1. "Historia Genuensium, lib. 12." folio, 1585; diffuse, but faithful and elegant; translated into Italian by Francesco Sardonati. 2. "De ratione Scribendæ Historiæ." 3. "Conjuratio Johannis Ludovici Flifci," 4to, 1571. Neapoli. 4. "Elogia clarorum Ligurum," 4to, 1574. 5. "De Linguæ Latinæ ufu et præsentiæ. Romæ. 1574." 6. "De causis magnitudinis Turcarum imperii." 7. "Della Republica di Genoa," 8vo. His Latin style was peculiar, elegant, and pure, and his judgement at once accurate and found.

FOHI, the first king of China, is faid to have founded this empire about two hundred years after the deluge. He was originally of the province of Xen Si, whence he removed the feat of empire to Chin Cheu. He was the first who taught the Chinefe the advantages of civil fociety. He invented inftruments of mufic, and established laws and ordinances. He regulated the commerce between male and female, which before was promiscuous; and suffered none of the same name and family to intermarry, which cuftom is observed to this day. He inftituted religious fervices and facrifices, fome of which were dedicated to the fovereign fpirit, who governs heaven and earth, others to inferior fpirits, whom he supposed to preside over mountains, rivers, and particular countries. This prince is faid to have reigned no lefs than a hundred and fifteen years. The Chinese impute to him the invention of feveral things, which at this day are much revered among them : but there is probably fo much fable in the hiftory of this prince, that it is not worth while to trace it with particular exactness.

FOIX

FOIX (ODET DE), lord of LAUTREC, by which name he is perhaps more known, was grandfon to a brother of Gafton IV. duke of Foix. He was a foldier from his infancy; and followed Louis XII. into Italy, where he was dangeroufly wounded in 1512, at the battle of Ravenna. After his recovery, he contributed much to the regaining of Milan, and was appointed governor of it by Francis I. He was, however, a better foldier than general. The pride and inflexibility of his character neither conciliated others, nor fuffered him to take advice. Profper Colonna expelled him from Milan, Pavia, Lodi, Parma, and Placentia; and having also lost the battle of Bicoque, in 1522, he was obliged to retire to one of his estates in Guienne. His difgrace was not of long continuance. In 1528, he marched into Italy against Charles V. feized and pillaged Pavia, and died in the fame year before Naples, which he was befieging : having struggled bravely against four antagonists; the enemy, the plague, want of accommodations, and famine. His body was carried into Spain, and twenty years after his death he received an honourable interment, from Ferdinand duke of Seffa, in the tomb of the great Gonfalvo of Cordova, where this infcription was placed: " Ferdinand Gonsalvo, grandson of the great captain, rendered the last honours to the memory of ODET DE FOIX, LAU-TREC, though he was an enemy to his nation."

FOLARD (CHARLES), an eminent French officer and author, famous for his skill and knowledge in the military art, was born at Avignon, in 1669, of a noble but not a rich family. He difcovered early a happy turn for the sciences, and a strong paffion for arms; which last was so inflamed by reading Cæsar's commentaries, that he actually enlifted at fixteen years of age. His father obtained his discharge, and shut him up in a monastery; but he made his escape in about two years after, and entered himfelf a fecond time in quality of cadet. His inclination for military affairs, and the great pains he took to accomplish himfelf in that way, recommended him to notice; and he was admitted into the friendship of the first-rate officers. M. de Vendome, who commanded in Italy in 1720, made him his aid-de-camp, having conceived the higheft regard for him; and toon after fent him with part of his forces into Lombardy. He was entirely trusted by the commander of that army; and no measures were concerted, or steps taken, without confulting By purfuing his plans, many places were taken, and him. advantages gained; and fuch were his fervices, that he had a pension of four hundred livres settled upon him, and was honoured with the cross of St. Lewis. He distinguished himself greatly, Aug. 15, 1705, at the battle of Cassano; where he received fuch a wound upon his left hand, as entirely deprived. him of the use of it. M. de Vendome, to make him some amends, amends, tried to have him made a colonel, but did not fucceed. It was at this battle, that Folard conceived the first idea of that fystem of columns, which he afterwards prefixed to his commentaries upon Polybius.

The duke of Orleans fending de Vendome again into Italy, in 1706, Folard had orders to throw himfelf into Modena, to defend it against prince Eugene; where he acquitted himself with his ufual skill, but was very near being assaffassinated. The description which he has given of the conduct and character of the governor of this town, may be found in his "Treatife of the Defence of Places," and deferves to be read. He received a dangerous wound on the thigh at the battle of Blenheim, or Malplaquet, and was fome time after made prifoner by prince Eugene. Being exchanged in 1711, he was made governor of Bourbourg. In 1714, he went to Malta, to affift in defending that island against the Turks. Upon his return to France, he embarked for Sweden, having a paffionate defire to fee Charles XII. He acquired the effeem and confidence of that famous general, who fent him to France to negociate the re-establishment of James II. upon the throne of England; but, that project being dropped, he returned to Sweden, followed Charles XII. in his expedition to Norway, and ferved under him at the fiege of Frederickshall, where that prince was killed, Dec. II, 1718. Folard then returned to France, and made his last campaign in 1719, under the duke of Berwick, in quality of colonel. From that time he applied himfelf intenfely to the fludy of the art military, as far as it could be fludied at home; and built his theories upon the foundation of his experience and obfervations on facts. He contracted an intimacy with count Saxe, who, he then declared, would one day prove a very great general. He was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society at London, in 1749; and in 1751, made a journey to Avignon, where he died in 1752, aged 83 years. He was the author of feveral works, the principal of which are, 1. " Commentaries upon Polybius," in fix vols. 4to. 2. "A Book of new Difco-veries in War." 3. "A Treatife concerning the Defence of Places, &c. in French. Those who would know more of this eminent foldier, may confult a French work, entitled, "Memoires pour servir à l'Histoire de M. de Chevalier de Folard. Ratifbone, 1753," 12mo. As a man of letters, he drew his knowledge from ancient authors, which as a military man he explains with great clearnefs. The form of his writings is not fo pleafing as the matter. The abundance of his ideas led him into too great a profusion of words. His style is negligent, his reflections detached, his digreffions either ufeless, or too long.

FOLENGO (THEOPHILUS), more known by his affumed name of Merlin Coccaie. He was of a noble family at Mantua; fludied the languages under Virago Coccaio; and then went to Bologna, where he cultivated philosophy under Peter Pemponatius. His preceptor, Coccaio, accompanied him there, but his tafte and vivacity of genius led him to poetry, and defeated the attention of his master to fix him to serious studies. His first work was a poem, entitled, "Orlandino," in which he took the name of Limerno Pittoco. He afterwards was obliged, as well as his master, to quit Bologna precipitately, to avoid being apprehended, but what was the fubject of the proceeding against him is not known. His father not receiving him kindly, he undertook the profession of arms, but grew tired of it, and became a Benedictine in the monastery of St. Euphemia, where he already had a brother. Folengo here indulged his vein for fatire and burlesque, by which he attracted the enmity of his brethren, who would have made him feel their refentment, had he not been very powerfully protected. He died in 1544, aged 51, at his priory, della Santa Croce, near Baffano. 1. The most known among his works is, the "Opus Macaronicum," printed at Venice in 1651, &c. written in that kind of mock Latin, made up of vernacular words and expressions, which has fince been called from this original, macaronic. It is, however, an eafy fpecies of wit, and in a man of any abilities requires only that he should condescend to attempt it to ensure the greatest degree of fuccefs. He named it macaronic, from Maccherone, a grofs feeder, or buffoon; a violent eater of macaroni. His poem was received with abundant applause, in an age much addicted to pedantic buffoonery. It must be confessed, that he fometimes rifes a little above his burlesque style, to intersperse moral and characteristic reflections. A few more of his productions are also known. 2. " The Orlandino," of Limerno Pittoco. Vinegia, 1526, &c. 3. "Caos del Tri per uno;" a poem on the three ages of man, partly macaronic. 1527. 4. " La Humanita del Figlio di Dio, in ottava rima. Vinegia, 1533.

FOLKES (MARTIN), an English antiquary, mathematician, and philosopher, was born in Westminster, about 1690; and was greatly distinguished as a member of the Royal Society in London, and of the Academy of Sciences at Paris. He was admitted into the former at twenty-four years of age; made one of their council two years after; named by fir Isaac Newton himself as vice-president; and after fir Hans Sloane, became President. There are numerous memoirs by him in the "Philosophical Transactions." Coins, ancient and modern, were a great object with him; and his last production was a book upon the "English Silver Coin," from the Conquest to his own times, 11 times. He died at London in 1754. Dr. Birch had drawn u materials for a life of Mr. Folkes, which are preferved at large in the "Anecdotes of Bowyer," p. 562, & feq.

FONSECA (ANTONY DE), a Dominican by birth, of Lifbon, but educated at Paris, where he published in 1539, "Remarks on cardinal Cajetan's commentaries on the Bible," folio. He became a doctor in the Sorbonne: afterwards, returning to his country, he was appointed preacher to the king, and profeffor of theology in the university of Coimbra. There was another learned Portuguese named Peter Fonseca, who published a fystem of metaphysics, in 4 vols. folio.

FONT (JOSEPH DE LA), a French comic writer of fome celebrity. He wrote five comedies, and fome operas. His beft comedy is, "Les troix Freres Rivaux;" the three Rival Brothers. The next, "l'Epreuve reciproque." He was a man of pleafure, a lover of wit and good cheer, fome of which propenfities contributed probably to abridge his life, for he died at the age of only 39, in the year 1725.

FONT (PIERRE DE LA), a zealous and pious ecclefiastic, known chiefly by his "Entretiens Eccléfiastiques," in five vols. 12mo, and four volumes of fermons of the fame fize. He died in the beginning of the present century.

FONTAINE (JOHN DE LA), a celebrated French poet, one of the finest geniuses of his age, was born at Chatteau-Thierry, July 8, 1621: just a year after the birth of Moliere. He was liberally educated, and at nineteen admitted among the fathers of the oratory; but left them in a little time. His father, who was supervisor of the water-courfes and forests in this dutchy, put his fon into the place, as foon as he appeared capable of managing it: but Fontaine had no taste for businefs, his talents being formed altogether for poetry. It is very remarkable, however, that he did not make this difcovery in himfelf, till he had commenced his 22d year; when, hearing accidentally the famous ode of Malherbe, on the affaffination of Henry IV. he found himfelf affected with furprife and transport; and the poetic fire, which had lain concealed in him, was kindled into a blaze. He immediately applied to the reading of this poet; he studied, and at length imitated him. The first fruits of his pen he used to communicate to a near relation, who encouraged him, and frequently read with him the best Latin poets and critics, as Horace, Virgil, Terence, Quintilian, &c. He passed from thence to fuch French and Italian writers, as excelled in that way, to which his genius led him; particularly Rabelais, Marot, Ariofto, Boccace, &c. Rabelais was uniformly his favourite and idol. He had recourfe alfo to the Greek authors, and especially to Plato and Plutarch; from whom he drew those fine moral maxims, with which he has enriched his Fables.

Though his disposition was exceedingly averse to confinement, or restraint of any kind, yet, to oblige his parents, he fuffered himfelf to be married; and, though the most unfeeling and infenfible of mortals; was yet fo far captivated by the wit and beauty of his wife, that he never performed any confiderable work without confulting her. The dutchefs of Bouillon, niece to cardinal Mazarine; being banished to Château-Thierry; Fontaine was prefented to her, and had the happinefs to pleafe her; and this, added to a defire of conversing with the wits, tempted him to follow her when the was recalled to Paris: Here the intendant Fouquet foon procured him a penfion; which he enjoyed very happily; without troubling himfelf at all about his wife, or, perhaps, even reflecting that he had one. Upon the difgrace of this minister, he was admitted as gentleman to Henrietta of England; but the death of this princefs put an end to all his court hopes, if, indeed, he was fusceptible of hope. After this, among other favours from the most illustrious perfons in the kingdom, the generous and witty madam de la Sabliere furnished him with an apartment and all necessaries in her houfe; who, one day, having haftily turned away all her fervants, declared that she had kept but three animals in her house, which were her dog, her cat, and her La Fontaine. In this fituation he continued twenty years, during which time he became perfectly acquainted with all the wits of his time, with Moliere, Racine, Boileau, Chapelle, &c.

The delights of Paris, and the conversation of these friends, did not hinder him from paying a visit to his wife every September; but that these visits might be of some use, he never failed to fell a houfe, or piece of land, fo that, with his wife's œconomy and his own, a handfome family estate was nearly confumed. His Parifian friends urged him frequently to go and live with his wife, faying, that it was a shame to separate himfelf from a woman of her merit and accomplishments: and, accordingly, he fet out with a purpose of reconciling himself to her; and, arriving at the town, enquired at his house for her. The fervant, not knowing him, faid, " She was gone to church :" upon which, he immediately returned to Paris; and, when his friends enquired about his reconciliation, anfwered, that " he had been to fee his wife, but was told fhe was at church." Upon the death of madam de la Sabliere, he was invited to England by the dutchefs of Mazarine, and the celebrated St. Evremond, who promifed him all the comforts and fweets of life: but the difficulty of learning the English language, together with the liberality of fome great perfons at home, made him lay afide all thoughts of fuch a journey.

In 1692, he was feized with a dangerous illnefs: and when the priest came to talk to him about religion, concerning which he

he had lived in an extreme careleffnefs, though without being actually an infidel or a libertine, Fontaine told him, that " he had lately beftowed fome hours in reading the New Teftament, which he thought a very good book." Being brought to a clearer knowledge of religious truths, the priest represented to him, that he had intelligence of a certain dramatic piece of his, which was foon to be acted; but that he could not be admitted to the facraments of the church, unlefs he suppressed it. This appeared too rigid, and Fontaine appealed to the Sorbonne; who confirming what the priest had faid, this fincere penitent threw the piece into the fire, without keeping even a copy. The prieft then laid before him the evil tendency of his Tales, which are written in a loofe and wanton manner : told him, that while the French language fublifted, they would be a most dangerous feducement to vice; and further added, that he could not justify. administering the facraments to him, unless he would promife to make a public acknowledgment of his fault at the time of receiving, a public acknowledgment before the academy, of which he was a member, in cafe he recovered, and to suppress the book to the utmost of his power. Fontaine thought these terms very hard, but at length yielded to them all. On these accounts fome have compared him to Peter Arctin, who, though the most libertine of all writers, became at last a very faint, and wrote nothing but books of piety. But it is certain, that Fontaine did not refemble Aretin in writing pious books; and many, among whom is Baillet in particular, doubt the truth of those stories which are related concerning his repentance. It is true, he feems to repent a little, and to renounce his libertine manner, in a dedication to his patroness madam de la Sabliere : but, notwithstanding this, he relapsed again, writing Tales with his usual gaiety; and the excuse he makes for this inconstancy, when he calls himfelf, " The Butterfly of Parnaffus," favours more of the poet than the christian. He did not die till April 13, 1695; when, if we believe some, he was found with an hair-shirt on.

Beside "Tales," he was the author of "Fables:" and in both he has merited the title of an original writer, who is, and probably will ever be, fingle in his kind. In his fubjects indeed, he has made great use of the Greek, and Latin, and French. and Italian authors; but he is truly original in his manner, which is for eafy, fo natural, fo fimple, fo delicate, that it does not feem possible to exceed it. His compositions have much nature. entirely devoid of affectation: his wit feems unfludied, and for much pleafantry is hardly to be met with. He never grows languid or heavy, but is always new and furprising. His Tales are faid to have been a great while the caufe of his exclusion from the French Academy; but at last, upon his writing a letter to a prelate of that society, wherein he declared his disfatisfaction .....

for the liberties he had taken, and his refolution that his pen fould never relapfe, he was received into that body with marks of esteem. His first Fables are more valued than his last : he feems to have thrown the best of his fire and force into them; and both the one and the other have more fobriety and correctnefs than his Tales. An edition of these was published at Paris in 1743, with fhort notes by Mr. Coste: and four volumes of his "Miscellaneous Works" were printed there in 1744.

His life had as little of affectation in it as his writings : he was all nature, without a grain of art. He had a son, whom, after keeping a flort time at home, he recommended to the patronage of the president Harlay. Fontaine being one day at a house where this fon was come, did not know him again, but observed to the company, that he thought him a boy of parts and fpirit. Being told, that this promifing youth was no other than his own fon, he answered very unconcernedly, "Ha! truly I am glad on't." This apathy, which fo many philosophers have vainly affected, was perfectly natural to Fontaine : it ran through every part of his behaviour, and feemed to render him infenfible to every thing without. As he had a wonderful facility in composing, so he had no particular apartment for that purpose, but went to work wherever the humour came upon him. One morning, madam de Bouillon going to Verfailles, spied him deep in thought under a tree; and, when the returned in the evening, there was Fontaine in the fame place and attitude, though the day had been cold, and much rain fallen.

It has been observed, that the finest writers, and the deepest thinkers, have frequently been but indifferent companions. This was Fontaine's cafe : for, having once been invited to dine at the house of a person of distinction, for the more elegant entertainment of the guests, though he eat very heartily, yet not a word could be got from him; and when, rifing foon after from the table, on pretence of going to the Academy, he was told he would be too foon, "Oh then," faid he, "I'll take the longest way."

Racine once carried him to the Tenebræ, which is a fervice in the church of Rome, in reprefentation of our Saviour's agony in the garden; and, perceiving it too long for him, put a Bible into his hands. Fontaine, happening to open it at the prayer of the Jews in Baruch, read it over and over with fuch admiration, that he could not forbear whilpering to Racine, " This Baruch is a fine writer : do you know any thing of him?" and for fome days after, if he chanced to meet with any perfon of letters, when the usual compliments were over, his question was, "Have you ever read Baruch ? there's a first-rate genius :" and this fo loud, that every body might hear him. P 2

Being

Being one day with Boileau, Racine, and other eminent men, among whom were fome ecclefiaftics, St. Auftin was talked of for a long time, and with the higheft commendations. Fontaine liftened with his natural air; and at laft, after a profound filence, afked one of the ecclefiaftics with the most unaffected ferioufnefs, "Whether he thought St. Auftin had more wit than Rabelais?" The doctor, eying Fontaine from head to foot, answered only by observing, that, " he had put on one of his stockings the wrong fide outward:" which happened to be the cafe.

The nurfe, who attended him in his illnefs, obferving the fervor of the prieft in his exhortations, faid to him, "Ah, good fir, don't difturb him fo; he is rather ftupid than wicked :" and at another time, "God won't have the heart to damn him." Thefe, and many other ftories, are told of him, which either are, or might have been true. One thing, however, must be mentioned as an honour shewn to him: it is, that his widow being molested about the payment of fome public money, the intendant gave orders, that no tax or impost should be levied upon his family; nor has this diftinguishing favour ever been revoked by any succeeding intendants.

FONTAINE (NICOLAS), fon of a ferivener at Paris, was received at the age of twenty into the fociety of the celebrated folitaries of Port Royal, in a fubordinate office, but in the course of time obtained the chief fuperintendance of the young men who were sent there for education. He employed his leifure hours in fevere literary labours. He followed Nicole and Arnauld into their different places of retreat; in 1664 he was shut up in the Baftile with Sacy, and came out of it with him in 1668. After the death of Sacy in 1684, he frequently changed his retreat, but established himself finally at Melun, where he died in 1709, at the age of 84. His works are various, 1. " Lives of the Saints of the Old Testament," 4 tom. 8vo. 2. " Lives of the Saints" in general, the fame number of volumes, or one in folio. 3. " On the figurative Language of the Bible," 4to. 4. " Memoirs of the Solitaries of Port Royal," two vols. 12mo. 5. "Translation of St. Chryfostom's Homilies on St. Paul's Epistles," 7 vols. 8vo. His versions are written with dignity, but not always with vigour. He was far inferior to Arnauld and Nicole, whom he admired; but his piety was worthy of Port Royal. He was diftinguished for a heart full of rectitude, innocence of manners, laborious, edifying fimplicity of life, fincere modesty, unparalleled difinterestedness, and a steadiness of faith superior to all trials. A man of so many virtues deferves to be recorded, though not among the first class of authors.

FONTAINES (PETER FRANCIS GUYOT DES), a French critic, was born of a good family at Rouen in 1685. At fifteen, he entered into the fociety of the Jesuits; and, at thirty, quitted it, for the fake of returning to the world. He was a prieft, and had a cure in Normandy; but left it, and was, as a man of wit and letters, fome time with the cardinal d'Auvergne. Having obtained fome repute at Paris by certain critical productions, the Abbé Bignon, in 1724, committed to him the " Journal des Savans." He acquitted himfelf well in this department, and was peaceably enjoying the applauses of the public; when the enemies, whom by critical strictures in his Journal he had created, formed an accufation against him of a most abominable crime, and procured him to be imprisoned. By the credit of powerful friends, he was fet at liberty in fifteen days : the magistrate of the police took himfelf the trouble of justifying him in a letter to the Abbé Bignon; and, this letter having been read amidst his fellowlabourers in the Journal, he was unanimoufly re-eftablished in his former credit. This happened in 1725. But, with whatever reputation he might acquit himfelf in this work, frequent difgusts made him frequently abandon it. He laboured, mean while, in fome new periodical works, from which he derived his greatest fame. In 1731, he began one under the title of, "Nouvelliste du Parnasse, ou Reflexions sur les ouvrages nouveaux;" but proceeded only to two volumes: the work having been suppressed by authority, from the incessant complaints of authors who were there ridiculed. About three years after, in 1735, he obtained a new privilege for a periodical production, intituled, " Obfervations fur les Ecrits Modernes :" which, after being continued to thirty-three volumes, was suppressed also in 1743. Yet the year following, 1744, he published another weekly paper, called, " Jugemens fur les ouvrages nouveaux," and proceeded to eleven volumes; the two last being done by other hands. Fontaines could go no farther ; for, in 1745, he was attacked with a diforder in the breast, which ended in a dropfy, and this in five weeks time carried him off. "He was," fays M. Freron, "born a sentimental person; a philosopher in conduct, as well as in principle; exempt from ambition; and of a noble firm spirit, which would not submit to sue for preferments or titles. In common conversation he appeared only an ordinary man; but when fubjects of literature, or any thing out of the common way were agitated, he discovered great force of imagination and wit."

Befides the periodical works mentioned above, he was the author of many others: his biographer gives us no lefs than feventeen articles; many of them critical, fome hiftorical, and fome tranflations from Englifh writers, chiefly from Pope, Swift, Fielding, &c. The Abbé de la Porte publifhed, in 1757, "L'Efprit de l'Abbé des Fontaines," in four volumes, 12mo; at the head of which is the life of Fontaines, a catalogue of his works, and another catalogue of writings againft him. He tranflated Virgil alfo, and fome other claffics.

FONTANA (DOMENICO), a celebrated Roman architect. but still more celebrated for his knowledge of mechanics, was born at Milan in 1543. He was chief architect to Sixtus V. but his works in that branch are far from faultlefs. His most celebrated exploit was fetting up the vast Roman obelisk in the front of St. Peter's, which had long lain half buried, from the defpair of others to attempt fo great a work. The ancients had fome means of performing those operations, which to the moderns are unknown, and the fuccess of Fontana was celebrated with high honours, and brought to him large rewards and emoluments. It is faid, that had he failed, he would have been fentenced to death. His defcription of the means which he employed to move that vast mass, are recorded in a folio work, published at Rome in 1690. Clement VIII. did not continue him in his office of chief architect. He removed to Naples in 1592, where he was made chief architect and engineer to the king, and died rich and much efteemed, in 1607.

FONTANGES (MARIE ANGELIQUE DE SCORAILLE DE ROUSSILLE, dutchefs of,) one of the favourites of Louis XIV. beautiful as an angel, faid the Abbé Choifi, but filly as a goofe. She fucceeded Madame de Montespan, of whose imperious temper the king was tired. When she knew her influence, she repaid with interest all the infults of her predecessor. She was, before the king's attachment, maid of honour to the king's fister, being of a good family in Rouergue. She died (in confequence of lying-in) at the age of 20, in June 1681.

FONTANINI (JUSTE), a learned archbishop of Ancyra, was born in 1666, in the duchy of Frioul, and died at Rome in 1736. He was a man greatly diffinguished, and held a correspondence with all the learned. There are many works of his; the principal of which are, 1. "Biblioteca della Eloquenza Italiana," often printed; but the best edition is that of Venice, 1753, in two volumes, 4to, with the remarks of Apostolo Zeno. 2. "A Literary History of Aquileia, in Latin. Rome 1742." 4to. a posthumous work, but full of good criticism, and of learning, facred and profane, &c. 3. "A collection of Bulls of Canonization from John XV. to Benedict XIII."

FONTE-MODERATA, the allumed name of a celebrated Venetian lady, whole real name was Modelta Pozzo, was born at Venice in 1555, and loft her father and mother the first year of her life. In her vounger days, she was put into the monaftery of the nuns of Martha of Venice; but afterwards quitted it, and was married. She lived twenty years with her husband in great union, and then died in childbed in 1592. She learned poetry and the Latin tongue with the utmost ease; and is faid to have had fo prodigious a memory, that, having heard a fermon but once, she could repeat it word for word. She was the author author of a poem entitled, " Il Floridoro," and of another on the "Paffion and Refurrection of Jefus Chrift." Befides thefe and other poems, fhe publifhed a book in-profe, "Dei Meriti delle Donne," in which fhe maintains, that the female fex is not inferior in understanding and merit to the male. This book upon "The Merit of Women" was printed immediately after her death. Father Ribera has made an elogium of this learned heroine, in his "Theatre of Learned Women;" and Doglioni wrote her life in Italian in 1593.

FONTENAY (JOHN BAPTISTE BLAIN DE), an eminent French painter, disciple of J. Baptist Monoyer, was born at Caen in 1654. He was employed by Louis XIV. had an apartment in the galleries of the Louvre, and a pension. Nothing can be finer than his fruits and flowers. They have all the freshness and beauty imaginable; and the very dew seems to trickle down the stalks of them with all the lustre and transparency of reality. The infects too upon them appear perfectly alive and animated. This ingenious painter was nominated counfellor of the Academy of Painting, and died at Paris in 1715.

FONTENELLE (BERNARD LE BOVIER DE), the son of François le Bovier de Fontenelle, advocate in the parliament of Rouen, and of Martha Corneille, fister to the great dramatic poet Corneille, was born at Rouen, Feb. 11, 1657, and lived to the age of an hundred, though fo weak at his birth, that his life was not expected. Voltaire declares him to have been the most universal genius the age of Louis the XIVth produced [0]; - and compares him to lands fituated in fo happy a climate as to produce all forts of fruits. Before he was twenty, he had written a great part of "Bellerophon," a tragic-opera; and fome time after his opera of " Thetis and Peleus" appeared, in which he had closely imitated Quinault, and met with great fuccess. That of "Æneas and Lavinia" did not fucceed fo well. He tried his genius in writing tragedy: and affifted mademoifelle Bernard in some of her dramatic pieces. Two he wrote himfelf, one of which was acted in 1680, but never printed. He was too long, and too unjuftly, cenfured on account of this piece: for he had the merit to difcover, that though his genius was unconfined, yet he did not poffefs those talents which fo greatly diftinguished his uncle, Peter Corneille, in the tragic drama. He wrote feveral fmaller compositions, in which that delicacy of wit and profoundness of thought, which promise greater efforts, might already be discovered. In his poetical performances, and "Dialogues of the Dead," the fpirit of Voiture was difplayed, though more extended and more philosophical. His "Plurality of Worlds" is a work fingular in its kind; his defign in it was, to prefent that part of philosophy to view in a gay and pleasing drefs: for which purpose he has introduced a lady, and drawn up the whole in a most agreeable as well as instructing dialogue. In the same manner he made an entertaining book from "Van Dale's Oracles." The controversial matters treated of in this work (for he went upon Van Dale's scheme of exploding the Oracles as human impostures) raised him secret enemies, whose malice he had the good fortune to disappoint. He found, says Voltaire, how dangerous it is for a man, though in the right, to differ in opinion from those whose judgment receives a fanction from authority.

He now applied himfelf to Geometry and Natural Philosophy: nor was he lefs fuccefsful in the ftudy of these sciences, than he had been in that of polite literature. Having been appointed perpetual fecretary to the Academy of Sciences, he discharged that trust for more than forty years, fo as to meet with universal His "Hiftory of the Academy of Sciences" often applaufe. throws great light upon their memoirs, where they are obfcure. He was the first that introduced elegance into the sciences. If he should sometimes be thought to have interwoven more beauties than the nature of the fubject would properly admit, we must regard his composition as on a plentiful crop, where flowers grow naturally among the corn. His "Hiftory of the Academy" would be no lefs useful, than it is well performed, had it given us an account of truths difcovered : but he was obliged to explain opinions raifed to overthrow one another, most of which are now thought erroneous.

The "Eloges," which he fpoke on the deceafed members of the academy, have this peculiar merit, that they excite a refpect for the fciences, as well as for the author. In vain did Des-Fontaines, and other cenforious writers, endeavour to blemifh his reputation. In his more advanced years he publifhed "Comedies," which, though they fhewed the elegance of Fontenelle, were little fit for the ftage; and "An Apology for Des-Cartes's Vortices." Voltaire fays, we must excuse his comedies, in confideration of his great age; and his Cartefian opinions, as they were those of his youth, which were at that time almost univerfally received in Europe.

Upon the whole, he was regarded as the great mafter of a new art; that of treating abstrufe sciences in a manner which made the study of them at once easy and agreeable: nor are any of his works of other kinds void of merit. His natural talents were affisted by a knowledge of the languages and history: and he certainly surpasses all men of learning, who have not had the gift of invention. This account of Fontenelle, which is critical as well as historical, is taken chiefly from Voltaire: and may be found at the end of his "Age of Louis XIV."

Thiş

This great author died in January, 1757, without ever having had any violent diforder, or felt any of the maladies of age, till he was turned of 90, after which he was a little deaf, and his eyes in some degree failed. The tranquil ease of his temper is thought to have contributed to extend his life to this unufual period. A fuller account of his works will doubtlefs be required, which we shall give in chronological order. I. Letters of "the Chev. d'Her .---, 1685;" a work of wit and fancy. 2. "Difcourfes on the plurality of Worlds, 1686;" the character of this performance has been already sketched, as well as that of his, 3, "Hiftory of Oracles, 1687." 4. "Pastoral Poems, with a difcourse on the Eclogue, and a digression on the ancients and moderns, 1688." It feems to be agreed, that if thefe are not good eclogues, they are at least elegant poems. 5. Several volumes of "Memoirs of the Academy of Sciences," to which fociety he was fecretary 42 years, from 1699. The general preface to this work is highly excellent; it contains alfo his "Eloges," or Eulogies on the academicians, which have been published feparately. 6. "Hiftory of the French Theatre, to Corneille," with the life of that great dramatist. 7. "Reflections on the-atrical Poetry, particularly Tragedy;" this is reckoned one of the most profound and judicious works of Fontenelle. 8. " Elements of the Geometry of Infinites, 1727;" not much esteemed by mathematicians. 9. "A Tragedy," in profe, and "Six Comedies;" none of them calculated for theatrical effect. 10. " Theory of the Cartefian Vortices." He remained unfortunately attached to the fystem of Descartes to the end of his life, having imbibed it very early. 11. " Endymion," and fome other pastoral lyric dramas. 12. " Moral Discourses," and fugitive pieces. All these, except those on geometry and natural history, were collected in 11 vols. 12mo, under the title " Œuvres Diveries." Other editions have fince been published in folio, and quarto; but this is in truth most complete. The style of this author is in general elegant and clear, but not altogether free from defects. It is often too negligent and familiar. He betrays at fome times an affectation of giving great matters in a fmall compass; at others he defcends to puerile details unworthy of a philosopher. He displays occasionally too much refinement in his ideas; and, at times, is too elaborate in his ornaments. These defects are less offensive in the writings of Fontenelle, than they would be in any others; not only because they are overpowered by many striking beauties of various kinds, but because it is easy to perceive that they are truly natural to the author.

Perhaps no other man of letters ever enjoyed fo univerfal an efteem as Fontenelle, which advantage he owed not only to his works, but to the prudence of his conduct, and the fweetnefs of his his manners. His conversation was lively though placid, and his politenefs was equal to his wit. Though he was fuperior to most other men, he did not make them feel it; but bore with their defects, and conversed as an equal. " Men," he faid, " are foolifh and wicked; but fuch as they are, I must live among them; and this I fettled with myfelf very early in life." He was accused of want of feeling; and certainly he had not all the warmth which fome require in a friend; but his friendthip had more conftancy and equality than that has in general which is more tender, or more lively. He rendered fervices without the fmallest oftentation. When the duke of Orleans proposed to him to be made perpetual President of the Academy of Sciences, his reply was, " Take not from me, my lord, the delight of living with my equals." He was ready always to listen as well as to talk; but when he had delivered his opinion, he fludioufly avoided difpute, pretending that his lungs were not equal to it. Though poor originally, he became rich, for a literary man, by the royal bounty, and by an æconomy free from all tincture of avarice. He was fparing only to himfelf, to others he was ready at all times to give or lend, and frequently to perfons unknown to him. One of his maxims was, " that a man (hould be sparing in superfluities to himself, that he may supply neceffaries to others;" a fublime and truly Christian faying, which with the reft of his excellent character, may discharge us from the neceffity of entering into the difpute concerning his religious faith; which, probably, has been by fome estimated too low, becaufe he was fuperior to many of the fuperstitious opinions thought effential to it in his time.

FONTENU (LOUIS FRANCOIS), called the abbé de Fontenu, an eminent writer in the memoirs of the French academy of infcriptions, was born at Lilledon in Gâtinois [P], in the year 1667. He was an expert antiquary and hiftorian, and his differtations turn chiefly upon curious fubjects in those branches of fcience. A lift of them may be feen in Saxius's Onomasticon, at the year 1714. The abbé died in 1759, having enjoyed almost uninterrupted health, to the advanced age of 92.

FONTIUS (BARTHOLOMÆUS), of Florence, fon of John Peter Fontius, was born in 1445, was a hiftorian, an orator, and a grammarian, and in high efteem with Picus Mirandula, Marfilius Ficinus, Jerome Donatus, and all the literati of his age and country. He had the care of collecting books for the library of Matthew Corvinus, king of Hungary, at Buda. He wrote a commentary on Perfius, and fome orations, which were republished together at Frankfort, in 8vo, 1621; and died in 1513.

FOOTE

FOOTE (SAMUEL), efq. called the English Aristophanes, a diftinguished writer and actor in comedy, was of a good family, and born at Truro in Cornwall, in the year 1722. His father, John Foote, elq. enjoyed the offices of commissioner of the prize office and fine contract, and was finally member of parliament for Tiverton in Devonshire. His mother, by an unhappy quarrel between her two brothers, fir John Dinely Goodere, bart. and fir Samuel Goodere, capt. of the Ruby man of war, in which they both fell, became heirefs of the Goodere family. Foote received his education at Worcester-college, Oxford; and was thence removed to the Temple, as defigned for the law. The drynefs and gravity of this fludy, however, not fuiting the vivacity and volatility of Foote's spirit, and his fortune, whatever it was, being foon diffipated, he left the law, and had recourfe to the stage. He appeared first in Othello: but whether he difcovered that his forte did not lie in tragedy, or that the language of other writers would not ferve fufficiently to difplay his humour, he foon struck out into a new and untrodden path, by taking upon himfelf the double character of author and performer. In this double capacity, in 1747, he opened the little theatre in the Haymarket with a fort of drama of his own, called, " The Diversions of the Morning." This piece was nothing more, than the introduction of well-known characters in real life; whofe manner of converfing and expressing themfelves he had a most amazing talent at imitating, copying not only the manner and voice, but, in fome degree, even the perfons of those he intended to take off.

This performance at first met with fome little opposition from the Westminster justices : but the author being warmly patronized, this opposition was over-ruled, and, by only altering the title of his piece to "Mr. Foote's giving Tea to his Friends," he proceeded without farther moleftation, and reprefented it for upwards of forty mornings to crowded and splendid audiences. The enfuing feafon he produced another piece of the fame kind, called, " An Auction of Pictures ;" in which he introduced feveral new characters, all, however, popular, and extremely well known: particularly, fir Thomas de Veil, then the leading justice of peace for Westminster; Mr. Cock, the celebrated auctioneer; and the no lefs celebrated orator Henley. This piece had also a very great run, nor were any pains spared to procure this fuccefs; for it is to be noted, that he himfelf represented all the principal characters of each piece, where his great mimic powers were necessary, shifting from one to another with all the dexterity of a Proteus.

From 1752 to 1761, he continued to perform at one of the theatres every feason, as fancy or interest directed his choice, generally for a stated number of nights; and, on these engagements, ments, he ufually brought out a new piece. He proceeded thus, till a very preffing embarraffment in his affairs compelled him to perform "The Minor," at the Hay-market, in the fummer of 1760, with fuch a company as he could haftily collect. Henceforward he purfued the fcheme of occupying that theatre, when the others were flut up; and from 1762, to the feafon before his death, he regularly performed there. Feb. 1766, when at lord Mexborough's in the country, he broke his leg by a fall from his horfe, the duke of York being alfo there: and it is generally fuppofed, that this accident facilitated his application for a patent, which he obtained in July the fame year.

Foote was now in much prosperity: he acquired a great deal of money; and he feems to have fet mankind at defiance: for he cared not whom he offended, if they were but fubjects proper for ridicule. In 1776, he drew a character for a lady of quality, who was at that time the fubject of much conversation; whofe influence, however, prevailed fo far as to prevent the representation of his play. In the course of this conflict, certain imputations were thrown out against him, which ripened at length into a legal charge. He was accufed of unnatural practices, and though the accufation was supposed to have originated from malice, and he was acquitted, agreeably to the fentiments of the judge who tried him, yet the flock he received from this difgracing fituation is believed to have had a fatal effect upon him. A few months afterwards he was ftruck, while on the stage, with a paralytic fit; from which he recovered fufficiently to fpend the fummer at Brighthelmstone. On the approach of winter, he was advifed to remove to France; and arrived at Dover, Oct. 20, 1777, intending immediately to proceed to Calais; but, being feized with a shivering fit the next morning, he died in a few hours, and was buried in Westminster-abbey.

The wit and humour of Foote in private conversation, were equal to his comic powers on the stage, of which the following account, given by Mr. Bofwell in the life of Johnfon, affords a striking instance. Dr. Johnson is faid to have related it himfelf: "The first time I was in company with Foote was at Fitzherbert's. Having no good opinion of the fellow, I was refolved not to be pleafed; and it is very difficult to pleafe a man against his will. I went on eating my dinner pretty fullenly, affecting not to mind him; but the dog was fo very comical, that I was obliged to lay down my knife and fork, throw myfelf back in my chair, and fairly laugh it out. Sir, he was irrefiftible." Innumerable other stories are circulated, all proving the lively and ready wit of this eccentric genius. It should be added, on the testimony of some who knew him intimately, that he was a man of competent claffical learning, and much various reading, reading, and no lefs a rational and inftructive companion in a ferious hour with a fingle friend, than an entertaining one in mixed fociety. A good life of Foote at large is ftill wanting; and the public has been taught to expect one from the pen of Mr. Murphy, who is in all points qualified for the tafk.

His published dramas are twenty in number, and were written in the following order: 1. " Tafte, a comedy, 1752." 2. " The Englishman in Paris, 1753." 3. " The Knights, 1754." 4. " The Englishman returned from Paris, 1756." 5. " The Author, 1757." 6. "The Minor, 1760." 7. "The Lyar, 1761;" not printed till 1764. 8. "The Orators, 1762." 9. "The Mayor of Garrat, 1763." 10. "The Patron, 1764." II. "The Commiffary." 12. "Prelude on opening the Theatre, 1767." 13. "The Devil upon Two Sticks, 1768," printed in 1778. 14. "The Lame Lover, 1770." 15. "The Maid of Bath, 1771," printed 1778. 16. "The Nabob, 1772," printed 1778. 17. "The Bankrupt, 1772." 18. "The Co-zeners, 1774," printed 1778. 19. "A Trip to Calais, 1776," printed 1778. 20. "The Capuchin." The latter of thefe was altered from the former, which was prohibited. A trifling piece called "Piety in Pattens," and "The Diversions of the Morning," altered from Taste, were never published. The anonymous mock Tragedy of "The Tailors," is usually printed with Foote's works, and is very generally thought to be his. It was acted in 1767, printed in 1778. Most of these are formed upon temporary topics, and full of personalities, the objects of which are still generally recollected, and therefore do not require to be specified; but they are replete with vivacity and humour, and though composed with little care, or attention to plot, are very entertaining even in the closet. Foote borrowed liberally from Moliere and others; but made what he took his own by an originality in his manner of employing it; and his perfonal humour was so peculiar, that it has been hardly possible for any other player to give equal effect to the parts he acted himfelf.

FORBES (PATRICK), an eminent Scotfman, was born in 1564, when the affairs of the church of Scotland were in great confusion. He was diftinguished by his family, as well as by his uncommon merit, being himfelf lord of Corfe, and baron of O'Neil, in the shire of Aberdeen. He was liberally educated both at Aberdeen and St. Andrew's; and having a plentiful estate, a noble alliance, and great credit in his country, he contributed much towards reftoring order, by encouraging pious and peacesble ministers, and by instructing the people in fet conferences as well as occasional discours; especially the papist, who would hear nothing from the pulpit. In this laudable manner he acted as a layman; and his abilities became so confpicuous, that he was often folicited to enter into the ministry by eminent perfons both in church and state. He at length submitted to their judgement, judgement, and was ordained a prefbyter at the age of 28. He was admitted minifter of Keith, where he continued with the higheft applaufe till 1618; and then, at the earneft defire of the clergy and laity of the diocefe of Aberdeen, as well as at the exprefs command of the king, was promoted to the bifhopric of Aberdeen, which he had held about feventeen years. "It was," fays Burnet  $[Q_i]$ , "with great difficulty, that king James made him accept that dignity; and for feveral months he refufed it, having propofed to himfelf to live in a lefs confpicuous flate. It was foon feen, how much he deferved to be a bifhop; and that his refufal was not counterfeit, but the real effect of his humility. In all his behaviour he has difplayed the character of a truly apoftolic man. He vifited his diocefe without pomp and noife, attended only by one fervant, that he might more eafily be informed of what belonged to his care, &c."

This excellent man died in 1635, aged feventy-one, after having two days before fent for all the clergy in Aberdeen to receive the facrament with him. His "Commentary upon the Revelations," was printed at London in 1613. He was a great promoter and guardian of learning as well as of religion. "He took fo much care of the two colleges he had in his diocefe, that, as Burnet fays, they foon diftinguished themselves, and became famous all over Scotland." As he was chancellor of the university of Aberdeen, he improved that feat of learning, by repairing the fabric, augmenting the library, reviving the professions of divinity, canon-law, and physic, and procuring another profession in divinity to be added.

FORBES (JOHN), made bishop of Aberdeen by James VI. was the fon of Patrick Forbes, just mentioned, " but," fays Burnet, " of much more extensive learning than his father, in which perhaps he was excelled by none of that age. Thofe who shall read his book of historical and theological institutions will not difpute this title with him; for it is fo excellent a work, that, if he had been left in quiet, in the retirement he had chofen, to apply himfelf to his studies, and could have finished it by a fecond volume, it would, perhaps, have been the most valuable treatife of divinity, that has yet appeared in the world. He filled the professor's chair, which his father had founded; when the covenanters expelled him, and forced him to fly beyond fea." Having continued in Holland rather more than two years, he returned to his own country; where he fpent the remainder of his life at his estate of Corfe, and died in 1648. An edition of all his works was published at Amsterdam in 1703, in two volumes, folio; with his life, written by George Gordon. His learning eminently appears in his Irencium.

FORBES (WILLIAM), bishop of Edinburgh, was born in 1585, at Aberdeen, where he went through the courses of clas-fical learning and philosophy. He was admitted master of arts at fixteen, and immediately afterwards made professor of logic : he applied himfelf to fupport Aristotle's logic against the Ramists. Afterwards he went to travel, and made a great progrefs in divinity and the Hebrew language, in the univerfities of Germany, during the four years he passed in that country. He then visited the university of Leyden, where he was greatly esteemed. His ill state of health not permitting him to undertake a journey into France and Italy, as he would willingly have done, he went over to England. The fame of his learning foon proclaimed him there, fo that the univerfity of Oxford offered him a professorship of Hebrew; which, however, he did not accept, becaufe the phyficians advifed him to return to his native country. The magistrates of Aberdeen expressed a particular esteem for him. He recovered his health, and accepted at first a private cure; but afterwards, being ftrongly folicited by the inhabitants, went to be preacher in his native city. He was admitted doctor of divinity, when king James, among other regulations, had fettled it with the deputies of the clergy, that the academical degrees and dignities should be restored to their ancient course. The labour of preaching hurting his health, they gave him a less painful employment, making him principal of Marishalcollege. He was afterwards dean of the faculty of divinity, and then rector of the university; a post immediately under the chancellor. Then he became pastor at Edinburgh, and was received there with every mark of friendship; but people's difpolitions being changed, from their warm attachment to the antiepiscopal discipline of Geneva, he withdrew himself, and retired to his own country. He was fent for fome years after by Charles I. who had caufed himfelf to be crowned at Edinburgh in 1633; and he preached before the monarch with great eloquence and learning. That prince, having founded an epifcopal church at Edinburgh, knew of none more worthy to fill the new fee than Dr. Forbes. He was confectated with the usual ceremonies, and applied himfelf wholly to the functions of his dignity: but fell fick foon after, and died in 1634, after having enjoyed his bishopric only three months.

Though able and learned, he had publifhed nothing, and compofed very little. He wrote a treatife tending to pacify controverfies, which was printed at London in 1658, with this title, "Confiderationes modeftæ et pacificæ controverfiarum de juftificatione, purgatorio, invocatione Sanctorum, Chrifto Mediatore, Euchariftia." "This pofthumous work," fays the author of his life, " is a fignal fpecimen and proof of a pacific temper, and a moderate mind: wherein, like a fecond Caffander, and catholic moderator, he endeavours to compofe, or at leaft to mitigate, the rigid and auftere opinions, in certain points of religious controverfy, both of the reformed and of the popifh party, party. How greatly he regarded moderation, appears from that ufual faying of his, that, if there had been more Caffanders and Wiceliuses, there would have been no occasion for a Luther, or a Calvin [R]." He had another faying concerning letters, as good as this concerning religion: it was, "Lege plura, et scribe pauciora," " Read more, and write less." It was a piece of advice he gave to one, who used a great deal of paper; and the refult of a refolution, which he himfelf had made, not to write much. " The number of excellent writers," fays Bayle, " would not be fo fmall as it is, if they, who at length acquire the talent of writing well, would refolve to publish but once in four years; whereas they abufe the facility they have attained of writing well, and their reputation; they heap volume on volume, without taking the trouble to revife and polifh, and no longer produce any thing of value, or which comes near the merit of their first performances." What must we think then of Bayle, who knew how to write as well, and yet who fcribbled as much, as any man? That the hard neceffity of maintaining himfelf by the fale of his works, constrained him to act against his judgment. Meanwhile, according to Bayle, if the man, who wrote fo much, had afterwards come and faid to Forbes, "I have followed your advice, I have read a great deal," Forbes would then have given him this further counfel, " to read lefs for the future, and meditate more:" and this, indeed, would have been no lefs edifying; for certainly, there cannot be a more useles member of society, nor a less accomplished creature, than a helluo librorum, who reads for ever, without digefting any thing.

FORBES (DUNCAN), a very eminent Scottish lawyer, was born at Culloden, in the county of Inverness, in the year 1685, and educated in the univerfity of Edinburgh, whence he removed to Utrecht, and afterwards to Paris, where he studied the civil law. He returned, in 1710, to Scotland, and was called to the bar in the court of feffion. His abilities as an advocate were soon noticed, and he obtained great practice. In 1717, he was appointed folicitor-general of Scotland. In 1722, he was returned member for the county of Inverness; and in 1725, was promoted to the dignity of lord-advocate. He was further advanced in 1742, to be lord-prefident of the court of fession, in which high station he acted with fuch integrity, that he was efteemed and honoured by his country. During the rebellion in 1745 and 6, he used the utmost of his power to oppose the pretender, and mortgaged his estate to support the government. With great reason he applied to the ministry for a repayment of those expences which he had incurred by his loyalty, and their refusal is faid to have operated fo ftrongly upon his mind, as to produce a fever, of which he died in 1747, at the age of 62. His writings were chiefly on theological fubjects, without any reference to his profession; they are, 1. "Thoughts on Religion." 2. "A Letter to a Bishop." 3. "Restlections on Incredulity," in 2 vols. 12mo, 1750. Father Houbigant translated the two former of these works into French, but they were not greatly admired in that country; the folidity of the Scottish lawyer could not be expected to fuit with the vivacity of French reasons.

FORBIN (CLAUDE, Chevalier de), a French naval officer of great repute, was born in 1656, and bred to the fea-fervice under a relation, who was a fea-captain, named Forbin-Gardane. In 1686, he was left by his commander the chevalier de Chaumont, in the service of the king of Siam, to whom he was some time chief admiral. He afterwards distinguished himfelf on the coaft of Spain, where, in 1703, he difplayed his generosity no lefs than he had before proved his valour, by giving up to the owner a French prize, which the governor of Barcelona had ceded to him. Louis XIV. admired and efteemed his greatness of foul, and frequently discoursed with him on the fubject of his engagements, the recital of which he heard with great fatisfaction. Once, when the king had given him fome recompence for his fervices, at the time of going to court to return thanks, his zeal for a brother feaman of great merit, named John Bart, whom he confidered as neglected, burft forth in remonstrances for him. The king was pleafed with this generous difinterestedness, and remarked to his minister Louvois. that he faw few fuch examples at his court. But, though Forbin was favoured by the king, he was not equally in the good graces of the ministers; and, after he had distinguished himself highly in many engagements against various enemies, his infirmities and his discontent caused him to retire from the fervice in 1710. He died in 1733, at the age of 77.

Some maxims were found in his memoirs published in 1749, by Reboulet, in two volumes, which ought to have made him more acceptable to ministers: unless, perhaps, as is highly probable, his experience of the bad effects of the contrary conduct, was the cause of committing them to paper. They are directed to perfons who defire to rife in the sea fervice; and are to this effect: 1. "Never to interfere in any thing which did not firictly belong to their employment." 2. "To pay a blind obedience to the orders they received, however repugnant to their private opinions; trusting that ministers have more extended views, than individuals in the fervice can develope."

FORCE (JAMES, NOMPAR, DE CAUMONT, Duke of la), fon of Francis, lord of la Force, who, with his eldeft fon Armand, VOL. VI. Q was was murdered in his bed, in the maffacre of St. Bartholomew. James was then only nine years of age, and was fleeping with his father and his brother, but by a wonderful providence he efcaped without a wound, and lying immoveable, concealed by the bodies of his murdered relations, was left unperceived by the affaffins, and was preferved to flourish as a hero for many years. Voltaire has celebrated this almost miraculous escape, in the fecond canto of his Henriade; and it is verified by the teftimony of the duke himfelf. He bore arms under Henry IV. and afterwards fought on the fide of the protestants against Louis XIII. particularly at the fiege of Montauban, in 1621. The enfuing year, La Force submitted to the king, and was made marechal of France, lieutenant-general of the army in Piedmont, and had his marquifate erected into a dutchy, befides receiving two hundred thousand crowns in money. The protestants confidered this accommodation as an interested dereliction of their caufe; and it must be confessed that the rewards it brought were not fmall. The duke of La Force took Pignerol, and defeated the Spaniards at Carignan, in 1630. Four years after he went into Germany, raifed the fiege of Philipfbourg, fuccoured Heidelberg, and took Spires. He died full of years and glory, in 1652, aged 89. If he was not the greatest general of his age, there were but few whofe abilities were fuperior.

FORD (JOHN), a dramatic poet, who wrote in the reigns of James I. and Charles I. He was not only a partner with Rowley and Decker in a play or two, but likewife wrote twelve plays himfelf. Thefe were all published between 1629 and 1636; and he is supposed to have died soon after the last-mentioned year. The time of his birth is unknown, and most of the circumstances of his life, except that he was of the Middle Temple.

FÓRDUN (JOHN DE), a Scottish historian. The time and place of his birth are uncertain. But it is known that he was a priest in the church of Fordun in the year 1377, because he dedicated his hiftory of Scotland to cardinal Wardlaw, who at that time was bishop of Glasgow. The time of his death is equally obscure, but may with probability be conjectured to have been foon after he finished his Scoti-chronicon. In this history, there are fome traditions that feem not fufficiently authenticated, yet fome curious and valuable particulars are alfo contained in it; among which may be reckoned, the oration of a highland bard, delivered at the coronation of Alexander III. in 1249, a piece peculiar in its kind. Every convent in Scotland, and fome in England, transcribed copies of this history, and two editions of it have been printed, one by Hearne at Oxford, in 5 vols. 8vo, the other by Mr. Goodall at Edinburgh, in a fingle volume, folio.

folio. MSS. copies are to be found in great plenty in the Bodleian library, in the British Museum, and at Edinburgh.

FORDYCE (DAVID), a learned and elegant writer of the present age, was born at Aberdeen in 1720, where he was educated, and finally was professor of philosophy in the Mariscalcollege. How well he was qualified to fill this important sta. tion, may be effimated by his "Dialogues concerning Education ;" and his " Treatife of moral Philosophy," published in the "Preceptor." He was originally defigned for the church, to which he was early prompted both by genius and difpolition. To prepare himfelf for it was the whole aim of his ambition, and the whole purpose of his studies for a course of years. That he would have appeared with advantage in that character, may be judged from his " Theodorus; a Dialogue concerning the Art of Preaching," published by his brother Dr. James Fordyce, himself an approved preacher, in 1752. When he had finished this work, he went abroad, to lay in fresh stores of knowledge and experience; but, after a successful tour through France, Italy, and other parts of Europe, when he was returning home, he lost his life in 1751, at the age of 31, by a storm on the coast of Holland.

FOREST (PETER), or FORESTUS, a learned phyfician, born at Alcmaer, in Holland, of a noble family, in the year 1522. He studied physic in Italy, and practifed it there, in France, and in the Low Countries, and died in the latter, in 1597. His "Observations on Medicine," in fix volumes, folio, were printed at Frankfort, in 1623, and there are other works extant which were much esteemed in his time.

FOREST (JOHN), a French painter of landfcapes, much efteemed in that country, and honoured with the office of painter to the king, was born at Paris in 1636, where he died in 1712. He was a man of talents, and improved himfelf as a painter by ftudying under Mola, in Italy. He improved himfelf alfo in colouring by clofe obfervation of the works of Titian, Giorgione, and the Baffans. His pictures are characterized as prefenting many bold ftrokes, great effects of light, learned contrafts of light and fhade, a fublime ftyle, beautiful views, and figures well defigned.

FOREST, or FORESTA (JAMES, PHILIP OF), more known by the name of Philip of Bergamo, at which place he was horn. He was of the order of Augustines, and was famous in his time as an historian, which he did not much deferve. He published a chronicle from Adam to the year 1503, which, except in those events that fell under his own knowledge, is a tasteles compilation from the most credulous authors. There is also extant by him a Confessional, or Interrogatorium, printed at Venice, in 1487, folio, and "A Treatife of illustrious Women," in Latin, published at Ferrara, in 1497, folio.

FORMOSUS, bishop of Porto near Rome, (a see set apart to the option of the fix fenior cardinals), fucceeded pope Stephen V. in the year 891, and was the first pope who was translated to the papacy from another fee. He had been employed by pope Nicolas in a million to convert the Bulgarians, had been deposed by John VIII. and restored by Marinus. The people of Rome hated him, and rendered his pontificate uneafy, by various infults. Even after his death, he was not fuffered to remain without contumely, but was dragged from his grave by Stephen VI. (who, after the flort reign of Boniface VI. fucceeded to the papacy) and after a mock trial, was mutilated and thrown into the Tiber. They went fo far as to drefs up the corpfe in the papal robes, and to fet it in the feat of state, when Stephen addreffing it as if alive, faid, "Bifhop of Porto, why didft thou carry thy ambition fo far as to usurp the fee of Rome?" Formofus, who could only answer by a faithlefs advocate, was of courfe condemned. In 898, John IX. annulled thefe proceedings, and re-established the memory of Formofus, though he could not recover his body from the Tiber.

FORSTER (JOHN), a protestant theologer and Hebraist of Wittenberg, born at Augsburg in 1495; was the friend of Reuchlin, Melancthon, and Luther, and taught Hebrew with success at Wittenberg. Not much remains of this Forster, except an Hebrew lexicon, published at Bale, in 1564, in folio. He died in 1556. There was another John Forster of inferior fame, who published commentaries on Isaiah, and some other works.

FORSTNER (CHRISTOPHER), an Auftrian lawyer, born in 1598, who diftinguished himself by a political work, entitled, "Hypomnemata Politica," when he was no more than 19. After studying in Germany, he travelled into Italy, where John Cornaro, doge of Venice, honoured him with the order of St. Mark. He then went into France, and afterwards returned to Germany. He was employed in the negociations for the peace of Munster, where he displayed fo much prudence and talent, that count Trautmandorf, the emperor's plenipotentiary, obtained him a place in the Aulic council. He died in 1667, leaving, besides the work already mentioned, 1. "De principatu Tiberii." 2. "Notæ politicæ ad Tacitum." 3. "A collection of his letters on the peace of Munster, &c."

FORT (FRANCIS LE), was born of a noble family at Geneva, in the year 1656. At the age of 14, a ftrong military ardour carried him into Holland, where he ferved as a volunteer. Afterwards he obtained a lieutenancy in a German regiment in the fervice of the Czar Peter I. Le Fort was bold, enterprifing, and generous; his countenance was prepoffeffing, and his knowledge of four or five languages facilitated his addrefs. He was not learned, but he had feen much, with a ftrong talent for observation. Peter, who had conceived the project of new modelling his empire, faw him, and became attached to In 1696, he entrusted to him the fiege of Azof, in which him. he difplayed fo much military skill, that the Czar conferred upon him the general command of all his troops by land and fea, made him his first minister of state, and gave him the quality of his ambaffador and plenipotentiary in all foreign courts. Seldom has a private individual, and a foreigner, rifen to fuch diffinction in any country. All the improvements made by Peter the Great, by which he infused, as it were, a new foul into his vast empire, were made with the participation and advice of Le Fort; and when he died, which was in 1699, at Moscow, the Czar, deeply struck with forrow for his loss, honoured him with the most magnificent obsequies, and attended them in person.

FORTESCUE (Sir JOHN), an English lawyer in the reign of Henry VI. was descended from an ancient family in Devonshire: but we cannot learn either the place or time of his birth. It is also uncertain in which university he studied, or whether he studied in any. Prince, in his Worthies of Devonfhire, supposes him to have been educated at Oxford, and bishop Tanner fixes him to Exeter college: and the great learning every where fhewn in his writings makes these conjectures probable. When he turned his thoughts to the municipal laws of the land, he fettled at Lincoln's-Inn, where he quickly diftinguished himfelf by his knowledge of civil as well as common The first date that occurs, with respect to his preferments, law. is the fourth year of Henry VI; when, as Dugdale informs us [R], he was made one of the governors of Lincoln's-Inn, and honoured with the fame employment three years after. In 1430, he was made a serjeant at law; and, as himself tells us [s], kept his feast on that occasion with very great splendor. In 1441, he was made a king's serjeant at law; and, the year after, chief justice of the King's-bench. He is highly commended by our most eminent writers, for the wildom, gravity, and uprightnefs, with which he prefided in that court for many years. He remained in great favour with the king, of which he received a fignal proof, by an unufual augmentation of his falary. He held his office through the reign of Henry VI. to whom he steadily adhered, and served him faithfully in all his troubles : for which in the first parliament of Edward IV. which began at Westminster, Nov. 1461, he was attainted of high treason, in the fame act by which Henry VI. queen Margaret, Edward their fon, and many perfons of the firft diffinction, were likewife attainted. After this, Henry fled into Scotland, and it is generally believed, that he then made Fortefcue chancellor of England. His name, indeed, upon this occafion, is not found recorded in the patent rolls; becaufe, as Selden fays, "being with Henry VI. driven into Scotland by the fortune of the wars with the houfe of York, he was made chancellor of England while he was there." Several writers have ftyled him Chancellor of England; and, in his book " De laudibus legum Angliæ," he calls himfelf "Cancellarius Angliæ [T]."

In April 1463, he embarked with queen Margaret, prince Edward, and many perfons of diffinction, who followed the fortunes of the houfe of Lancaster, at Bamburg, and landed at Sluys in Flanders: whence they were conducted to Bruges, thence to Lifle; and thence into Lorrain. In this exile he remained for many years, retiring from place to place, as the necessities of the royal family required: for though, during that space, the queen and prince were often in motion, and great efforts were made to reftore Henry, yet, confidering the age of Fortescue, it is not probable that he was fuffered to expose himself to fuch hazards; especially as he might do them better fervice by foliciting their interest at different courts. It is certain, that he was not idle; but, observing the excellent understanding of prince Edward, who applied himfelf wholly to military exercises, and feemed to think of nothing but qualifying himfelf for an expert commander, he thought it high time to give him other impreffions, and to infufe into his mind just notions of the constitution of his country, as well as due respect to its laws; fo that, if Providence thould favour his defigns, he might govern as a king, and not as a tyrant, or a conqueror. With this view, as we learn from his introduction, he drew up his famous work, entitled, " De Laudibus Legum Angliæ;" which, though it failed of its primary intention, that hopeful prince being not long after cruelly murdered, will yet remain an everlasting monument of this great and good man's refpect and affection for his country. This very curious and concife vindication of our laws was received with great efteem, when it was communicated to the learned of that profession; yet it was not pub-Jished till the reign of Henry VIII. Several editions have fince been given of it, with different titles each time : yet none of them fuitable to the value of the performance, till that printed in folio in 1732; and again in 1741; with a copious preface; with large, learned, and ufeful annotations, an accurate index, and whatever elfe is necessary to fatisfy a curious and inquisitive reader.

The house of Lancaster having afterwards a prospect of retrieving their fortunes, the queen and the prince went over to England, Fortefcue with many others accompanying them. They did not fucceed, fo that this chancellor was forced to reconcile himfelf as well as he could to the victorious Edward IV; for which purpofe, he wrote a kind of Apology for his own conduct. This treatife, though it has never been published, Selden had feen ; as he tells us in his preface to Fortescue's book. " De Laudibus, &c." After all thefe extraordinary changes of mafters and fortunes, he preferved his old principles in regard to the English Constitution; as appears from another valuable and learned work, written by him in English, and published in the reign of queen Anne, with this title : " The difference between an absolute and limited monarchy, as it more particularly regards the English Constitution : being a treatise written by fir John Fortescue, knight, lord chief justice, and lord high chancellor of England, under king Henry VI. Faithfully transcribed from the manufcript copy in the Bodleian library, and collated with three other manufcripts. Published with some remarks by John Fortescue Aland, of the Inner-Temple, efg. F. R. S. 1714," 8vo. There is a manufcript of this work in the Cotton library, in the title of which it is faid to be addreffed to Henry VI. but many passages in it shew it to have been plainly written in favour of, and for the fervice of, Edward IV. A fecond edition, with amendments, was published in 1719, 8vo. As for this author's other writings, which were pretty numerous, as they were never printed, we know nothing more of them, than we learn from the titles, and the commendations bestowed upon them by those who had perused them. They have, however, been carefully preferved in libraries, fome of them being still extant under the following titles : " Opufculum de natura Legis Naturæ, et de ejus cenfura in fuccessione regnorum supremorum." " Defensio juris Domus Lancastriæ."-" Genealogy of the House of Lancaster."-" Of the title of the House of York." " Genealogiæ Regum Scotiæ."-" A Dialogue between Underftanding and Faith."-" A Prayer Book which favours much of the times we live in," &c. It would certainly be a great benefit to the learned world, if his manufcripts were printed; for he was a man of general knowledge, great observation, and his writings would probably throw much light upon the dark parts of our hiltory and antiquities.

We know nothing further of his life, which probably was fpent in retirement in the country, free from the cares, and remote from the dangers of a court. Neither is there any diffinct account preferved of his death; we are only told in general, that

that he was then near ninety years of age, which the circumftances of his life rendered very probable. His remains were interred in the church of Ebburton in Gloucestershire, where he had purchased an estate : and where one of his descendants, in 1677, caufed a monument to be repaired, upon which was the figure of this venerable perfon in his robes, and added an infcription to his memory. It was truly faid by Mr. Fortefcue Aland [U], that " all good men and lovers of the English Constitution speak of him with honour; and that he still lives, in the opinion of all true Englishmen, in as high efteem and reputation as any judge that ever fat in Westminster hall. He was a man acquainted with all forts of learning, befides his knowledge in the law, in which he was exceeded by none; as will appear by the many judgements he gave when on the bench, in the year-book of Henry VI. His character in history is that of pious, loyal, and learned: and he had the honour to be called the chief counfellor of the king. He was a great courtier, and yet a great lover of his country.'

FORTIGUERRA (NICOLAS), a learned Italian prelate and poet, was born in 1674, obtained the higheft rank of epifcopacy under pope Clement XI. and flattered himfelf that Clement XII, a friend of poetry and poets, would advance him to the dignity of This pope continually giving him reafon to hope, cardinal. as conftantly found excuses for difappointing him; at length one instance more of this duplicity, added to fo many that had paffed, completely extinguished the hopes of Fortiguerra, and this mortification fo deeply affected him, that it proved fatal. When he was on his death-bed, Clement fent to him, endeavouring to comfort him once more and revive his hopes, but the fick man turning himfelf about, and raifing the clothes, only uttered fuch an explosion, as once furprifed and entertained the British house of commons, and faid, "that is my answer; a good journey to us both ;" " Eccovi la riposta; bon viaggio e per lei, e per me." He died foon after this, which happened in 1735, being then 61. His house was the general refort of wit and literature in Rome, and he wrote his "Ricciardetto," a burlefque poem in thirty Cantos, in a very fhort time, to prove to a party of this kind, how eafy it is for a man of imagination, to write in the style of Ariofto, whom fome of them had preferred to Taffo. In this poem he gave abundant liberty to his imagination, and its extravagance would be fatiguing beyond measure, were it not fupported by the utmost ease of versification, and perpetual fallies of pleafantry and genius. It has been ably translated into French by a M. du Mourrier, chev. of St. Louis, who died in . 1768. There is also a translation of Terence by Fortiguerra, with the Latin text, printed at Urbino in 1736, and adorned with cuts.

FORTIUS or FORTIS (JOACHIM) properly Joachim Sterck, but most known by the name of Fortius Ringelbergius, a philologer and mathematician of Antwerp, friend of Erasmus and other great scholars, was a teacher of Greek and mathematics, but much esteemed by the emperor Maximilian I. In 1529, he published his book "De Ratione Studendi;" and died in 1536. Some others of his works are extant.

FOSCARI (FRANCIS), a doge of Venice. He was of an illustrious family, which he rendered yet more fo by his talents. He was procurator of St. Mark in 1415, and in 1423 procured himfelf to be elected doge. He fignalized his government by the conquest of the territory of Brefcia and Bergamo, with the cities of Crema, Ravenna, and others. But thefe acquisitions were attended with fo much expence to the Venetians, that they murmured loudly against him. To appeafe them, he offered his refignation, which was not accepted. The malice of his enemies vented itself upon his fon, whom they caufed, on various pretexts, to be thrice banifhed, once to Trevifa, and twice to Canea or Cydon in Candia. This laft banishment overwhelmed the unfortunate father with grief, and rendered him incapable of transacting the affairs of the republic. He was confequently deposed in 1457, at the age of 84, but died two days after. His fon alfo died in prifon under a falfe acculation of murdering a lenator, which the real affaffin confeffed voluntarily on his death-bed, but too late to fave the life of young Foscari, who had died in his confinement, the victim of calumny.

FOSCARINI (MICHAEL), a Venetian historian, who continued the history of Venice written by Nani. His history was published in 1692, in 4to, and makes the tenth volume of the collection of Venetian historians; published in 1718, 4to, a collection badly printed, but containing only good authors. Foscarini was a fenator, and filled feveral important posts in the republic. He died in 1692, aged 64. He was publicly employed to write his history, and is supposed to have had the most authentic documents. Two novels by him are extant in an Italian collection, called "Novelle degli Academici incogniti," 1651, 4to.

FOSSÉ (CHARLES DE LA), a French painter, a pupil of Le Brun, who fuffered him to paint for him occafionally in fome of his most capital works, was the fon of a goldfmith, and born at Paris in 1640. He perfected his talents in Italy, and on his return was employed to paint the dome of the Hotel of Invalids. Louis XIV. fettled upon him a pension of 1000 crowns. He was also received into the academy of painting, where where he became rector and profeffor. His fame extended even to England, whither he was invited by the carl of Montagu, and employed by him in decorating his magnificent houfe, now the British Museum, where his paintings attracted universal admiration. William III. on seeing them, offered him a handsome establishment in this country; but, at the fame time, the celebrated architect Mansard, wrote to him from France, that he was wanted there to co-operate with him in finishing fome public buildings, and he returned to his native country, where he died in 1716. He was reckoned inimitable in his time as a colourist, and excellent both in landscape and historical painting.

FOSSE (ANTONY DE LA), nephew of the former; and like him son of a goldsmith, was born at Paris in 1658. He became lord of Aubigny, by purchasing the lands to which that title was attached. He was fucceffively fecretary to the marquis de Crequi, and the duke d'Aumont. When the former of these noblemen was flain at the battle of Luzara, La Fosse was employed to carry his heart to Paris, and celebrated the death of the young hero in verses which are still extant. He was fo much a mafter of Italian as to write skilfully in that language both in profe and verfe. But his chief fame as a poet was atchieved in his own language, in which he wrote feveral tragedies, and many other poems. His " Polixene, Manlius, and Theseus,", maintained their station in the French theatre till the Revolution; and all his dramas are faid to abound with paffages which would not difgrace the finest tragic writers of France. His verfification was highly finished, and he faid that the exprefion cost him more than the thoughts. His Manlius, the best of his pieces, has been pronounced in many respects worthy of Corneille. Yet even in France, we are told, he is lefs known than he deferves. He was intimate with the poet J. Baptifte Rouffeau, and lived the life of a philosopher, preferring letters to fortune, and friendship to every thing. He died in 1708, at the age of 50. His modesty was equal to his genius; and when any of his pieces were lefs fuccefsful than others, he professed constantly that he never appealed from the judgement of the public.

FOSTER (SAMUEL), an English mathematician, and professor of astronomy at Gresham college, was born in Northamptonshire; and sent to Emanuel college Cambridge, in 1616. He took the degree of bachelor of arts, in 1619, and of master in 1623. He applied early to the mathematics, and attained to great proficiency in that kind of knowledge, of which he gave the first specimen in 1624. He had an elder brother at the fame college with himself, who precluded him from a fellowschip: in confequence of which, he offered himself a candidate for for the professorship of altronomy in Gresham college, Feb. 1636, and was elected the 2d of March. He quitted it again, it does not appear for what reafon, Nov. 25, the fame year, and was fucceeded therein by Mr. Mungo Murray, profeffor of of philosophy at St. Andrew's in Scotland. Murray marrying in 1641, his professorihip was thereby vacated; and as Foster had before made way for him, fo he in his turn made way for Foster, who was re-elected May 22, the fame year. The civil war breaking out foon after, he became one of that fociety of gentlemen, who had stated meetings for cultivating philosophy, and afterwards were established by charter, under the name of the Royal Society, in the reign of Charles II. In 1646, Dr. Wallis, another member of that fociety, received from Foster a mathematical theorem, which he afterwards published in his " Mechanics." Neither was it only in this branch of fcience that he excelled, but he was likewife well verfed in the ancient languages; as appears from his revifing and correcting the " Lemmata" of Archimedes, which had been translated from an Arabic manuscript into Latin, but not published, by Mr. John Greaves. He made also several curious observations upon eclipfes, both of the fun and moon, as well at Gresham college, as in Northamptonshire, at Coventry, and in other places; and was particularly famous for inventing, as well as improving, aftronomical and other mathematical inftruments. After being long in a declining state of health, he died in 1652, at his own apartment at Gresham college. His works are, 1. " The description and use of a small portable quadrant, for the more easy finding of the hour of azimuth," 1624, 4to. This treatife, which has been reprinted feveral times, is divided into two parts, and was originally published at the end of Gunter's " Description of the Crofs Staffe in three books," to which it was intended as an appendix. 2. " The Art of Dialling, 1638," 4to. Reprinted in 1675, with feveral additions and variations from the author's own manufcript, as also a supplement by the editor William Leybourne. Our author himself published no more, yet left many other treatifes, which, though not finished in the manner he intended, were published by his friends after his death : as, 3. " Posthuma Fosteri: containing the description of a Ruler, upon which are inferibed divers scales, &c. 1652." 4to. This was published by Edmund Wingate, esq. 4. "Four Treatifes of Dialling, 1654," 4to. 5. "The Sector altered, and other scales added, with the description and use thereof, invented and written by Mr. Foster, and now published by William Ley-bourne, 1661," 4to. This was an improvement of Gunter's Sector, and therefore published among his works. 6. " Mifcellanies, or Mathematical Lucubrations of Mr. Samuel Foster, published, and many of them translated into English, by the care and

and industry of John Twysden, C. L. M. D. whereunto he hath annexed fome things of his own." The treatifes in this collection are of different kinds, fome of them written in Latin, fome in English.

There have been two other perfons of this name, who have published mathematical pieces. The first was WILLIAM FOSTER, who was a disciple of Mr. Oughtred, and afterwards a teacher of mathematics in London. He distinguished himself by a book, which he dedicated to Sir Kenelm Digby, with this title, "The Circles of Proportion, and the Horizontal Instrument, &c. 1633," 4to. The other was MARK FOSTER, who published "A Treatife of Trigonometry," but lived later in point of time than either of the other two.

FOSTER (Dr. JAMES), an English diffenting-minister, was born at Exeter, Sept. 16, 1697. His grandfather was a clergyman at Kettering in Northamptonshire; but his father, being educated by an uncle who was a diffenter, imbibed the fame principles, and was afterwards by trade a Tucker, or Fuller, in Exeter. He was fent early to the free-school in that town, where the foundation of a friendship between him and Dr. Conybeare, afterwards bisso of Brissol, is faid to have been laid; and thence was removed to an academy in the fame city, where he finiss fudies. He there displayed pre-eminent natural abilities, a quick apprehension, a folid judgement, a happy memory, and a free commanding elocution.

He began to preach in 1718; foon after which a ftrong debate arofe among the diffenters, upon the doctrine of the Tri-nity, and fubscription to tefts. The dispute was fiercely carried on among them in the West of England, and particularly at Exeter, where he then refided. As he embraced the obnoxious opinions, the clamour foon ran high against him; and he was prevailed on to quit the county of Devon, and to accept of an invitation to Melborne in Somersetshire. Here he continued till fome of his hearers took offence alfo, and made that place uneafy to him. Then he removed to Ashwick, an obscure retreat under the hills of Mendip in the fame county; where he preached to two poor congregations, one at Colesford, the other at Wokey near Wells, both of which together did not produce more than 15l. per annum. It feems to have been here that he wrote his celebrated "Effay on Fundamentals," and likewife his fermon " On the Refurrection of Christ;" for they were both printed in 1720.

From this place he removed to Trowbridge in Wiltshire, where he boarded with Mr. Norman, a reputable glover. Here his congregation did not confiss of more than twenty or thirty perfons; and his finances were fo very infufficient for his support, that he began to entertain thoughts of quitting the the miniftry, and learning the glove trade of Mr. Norman; choofing rather to recur to fome fecular employment, than feek for fuccour in the eftablished church. About this time he was convinced, by reading Dr. Gale, that baptifm of the adult by immersion was the true feripture-doctrine, and accordingly was baptifed that way in London: but this caufed no mifunderstanding between him and his prefbyterian congregation. While he was meditating on the poverty of his condition, and looking abroad for better means of fubfishence, Robert Houlton, efq. took him into his house as a chaplain, and treated him with much humanity. This event feems to have opened his way to public notice; for, in 1724, he was chosen to succeed Dr. Gale at Barbican, where he laboured as a pastor above twenty years.

In 1731, he published a "Defence of the Usefulness, Truth, and Excellency of the Christian Revelation," against Tindal's "Christianity as old as the Creation." This Defence is written with great force of argument, and great moderation; has been well accepted, and much esteemed by the candid and judicious of all parties; and, as is faid, was spoken of with great regard by Tindal himself. In 1744, he was chosen passed of the independent church of Pinners-hall. In 1748, the univerfity of Aberdeen conferred on him the degree of doctor of divinity by diploma: for the Scottish divines had the highest opinion of his merit.

In August, 1746, he attended lord Kilmarnock, who was concerned in the rebellion the year before; and they who lived with him imagined, that this attendance made too deep an impression on his tender, sympathizing spirit. His vivacity, at least, was thenceforward observed to abate; and, in April, 1750, he was visited with a violent diforder, of which he never thoroughly recovered, though he continued to preach more or less till January, 1752. Three days after, he had another shock of the paralytic kind, which so impaired his understanding, that he never possessed it rightly afterwards. About ten days before his death he was paralytic, but did not entirely lofe his fenses till the last, Nov. 5, 1753. Besides the pieces already mentioned, he published " Tracts on Herefy," on which subject he had a controversy with Dr. Stebbing: several "Funeral Sermons," one among the reft for the Rev. Mr. Thomas Emlyn: " An Account of Lord Kilmarnock:" four volumes. of "Sermons," in 8vo: and two volumes of "Difcourfes on Natural Religion and Social Virtue," in 4to.

Such was the end, and fuch were the works, of this great and good man; for good he was in the fublime fenfe of the word. His humanity was illustrious; and his generous fentiments and compassionate fympathies were admired by all. He was perfectly free from every thing grofs and worldly. His benevolence and charities were fo extraordinary, that he never referved any thing for his own future use: and had it not been for two thousand subscribers to his "Discourses on Natural Religion and Social Virtue," he would have died extremely poor. His way of thinking was great and noble: " I always had," fays he, " I blefs God, ever fince I began to understand, or think, to any purpole, large and generous principles, and there never was any thing either in my temper or education, which might incline me to narrowness and bigotry: and I am heartily glad of this opportunity, which now offers itfelf, of making this public, ferious profession, that I value those, who are of different perfualions from me, more than those who agree with me in fentiment, if they are more ferious, fober, and charitable." He might fay with the primitive Christians, Non magna loquimur, sed vivimus: that is, "We do not speak great and pompous things, but we live to act them." He refused large offers of preferment made by Rundle bishop of Derry, preferring, like an honeft man, his principles to his profit.

It would be wrong to clofe this article, without taking notice of his talent for preaching, which was, indeed, very eminent and extraordinary. His voice was naturally fweet, ftrong, diffinct, harmonious: and his ear enabled him to manage it exactly. He was also a perfect master of action; his action, however, was grave, expressive, natural, free from violence, free from diffortions : in fhort, fuch as became the pulpit, and was neceffary to give force and energy to the truths there delivered. Add to thefe, that he had a fine genius, a lively imagination, great fprightliness and vivacity of address, an easy flow, matterly expression, sublime ideas; and it cannot be matter of surprise that he should attain nearly to perfection in preaching. The Sunday Evening Lecture, begun in 1728, which he carried on at the Old Jewry above twenty years, fhewed indifputably, that nobody ever went beyond him for popularity in this respect. For hither reforted perfons of every rank, station, and quality; clergy, wits, freethinkers: and hither curiofity might probably draw the poet himfelf, who, in the epilogue to his fatires, has taken occasion to praise him for this talent in the following lines:

> " Let modest Foster, if he will excell Ten Metropolitans in preaching well."

Lord Bolingbroke has attributed to him, with commendation, that falfe Aphorifm which brings Christianity fo near to deifm; "Where mystery begins religion ends."

FOSTER (JOHN), an excellent claffic fcholar, was born in 1731, at Windfor, the propinquity of which to Eton was, fortunately tunately for him, the motive for fending him to that college for education, where, at a very early age, he manifested great abilities, and, in an uncommon manner, baffled all the hardfhips which other boys in their progrefs ufually encounter. He, however, had two confiderable advantages; the first, being received as a pupil by the late Rev. Septimius Plumptree, then one of the affiftants; and the fecond, that he was noticed by the reverend and very learned Dr. John Burton, vice-provost of Eton; by the abilities of the former in the Greek language, and of the latter in the Hebrew, Mr. Foster profited exceedingly. It was a matter highly pleafing to them, that they did not throw their feed on a barren foil; whatever instruction he received, he cultivated inceffantly; and it is but justice to add, that he in a great meafure excelled his contemporaries. His learning and his fobriety recommended him to many friends while he continued at Eton, which was till 1748, when he was elected at King's college in Cambridge; a college to which, as Mr. Pote observes in his advertisement to his " Registrum Regale," Eton annually sendeth forth her ripe fruit. Mr. Foster here improved himself under the late provost Dr. Wm. George, an excellent Greek, and general Icholar. At the expiration of three years he there (as usual) became a fellow, and shortly afterwards was fent for to Eton by the late Dr. Edward Barnard, to be one of his-affiftants. Great honour was fure to attend Mr. Foster from this fummons, for no man diftinguished better, or could form a ftronger judgement of his abilities and capacity, than Dr. Barnard: and fuch was his at tention to the school, that he made it his primary consideration, that it should be supplied with affistants the most capable and the most deferving. At the refignation of this great master, which happened Oct. 25, 1765, when he was chosen provost on the death of Dr. Sleech, he exerted his whole interest for Dr. Foster to fucceed him in the maftership, and by his weight in the college he carried his point. But it did not prove fortunate for his fucceffor, or for the feminary; the temper, the manner, the perfuafion, the politeness, the knowledge of the world, which Dr. Barnard fo eminently difplayed, did not appear in his fucceffor. His learning justly entitled him to the fituation; but learning is not the fole ingredient to constitute the master of fuch a school; more, much more, is required : and Dr. Foster appeared to the more difadvantage, from immediately fucceeding fo great Nor could he long support himself in his situation; his a man. passions undermined his health, and, notwithstanding his abilities as a scholar, his government was defective, his authority infufficient, and he judged it best to refign, that he might not destroy a fabric which he found himself unequal to support. Dr. Foster however did not retire unrewarded; his Majesty, on the death of Dr. Sumner in 1772, bestowed on him a canonry of Windfor, Windfor. But this he did not long enjoy; his ill health carried him to the German Spa, where he died in September the year following, and where his remains were interred; but afterwards were removed to Windfor, and deposited near those of his father, who had been mayor of that corporation.

The following epitaph, composed by himself, is to be feen on a neat tomb erected in the church-yard of that place: the conception and expression of it, in themselves conveying a high notion of his talents.

> " Hic jaceo JOHANNES FOSTER, S. T. P. Vindeforiæ natus anno Domini 1731; Obii anno 1773.
> Literas, quarum rudimenta Etonæ hauferam, Cantabrigiæ in Coll. Regali excolui, Etonæ poftea docui.
> Qui fuerim, ex hoc marmore cognofces, Qualis vero, cognofces alicubi; Eo fcilicet fupremo tempore, > Quo egomet, qualis et tu fueris, cognofcam. Abi viator, et fac fedulo Ut ibidem bonus ipfe tunc appareas."

Dr. Foster published "An Essay on the different Nature of Accent and Quantity, with their Use and Application in the Pronounciation of the English, Latin, and Greek Languages; containing, an Account and Explanation of the Ancient Tones, and a Defence of the present System of Greek Accentual Marks, against the Objections of Isaac Vossius, Henninius, Sarpedonius, Dr. Gally, and others." In this learned Essay, which sufficiently exalted his character as a scholar, not only Bentleian acuteness and variety of learning are conspicuous, but justness of composition, elegance united with spirit, and ingenuous and exemplary candour. It was printed for Pote in 1762. Several exercises of the doctor's are extant in MS. which also do him peculiar honour.

FOTHERGILL (GEORGE), D. D. and principal of St. Edmund Hall in Oxford, was the eldeft of feven fons of Henry and Elizabeth Fothergill. He was born on the laft day of the year 1705, N. S. at Lockholme in Ravenstonedale, in the county of Westmorland: where the family had long been situated and possession of a competent estate, which had descended from father to fon for many generations. He received the first part of his education in the place of his nativity, at a free grammar school, founded and endowed by a person of the fame name and family. He was afterwards removed to Kendalschool, and from thence, at fixteen years of age, to Queen's college in Oxford; where he became fellow, and an eminent tutor. Oct.

Oct. 17, 1751, he was elected principal of St. Edmund hall, and prefented to the vicarage of Bramley in Hampshire. After having been long afflicted with an afthma, he died Oct. 5, 1760, and was buried in the chapel of Edmund hall, at the north end of the communion-table; where his modesty forbade any monument to be erected to his memory. He was author of two volumes of fermons, in octavo. The first confists of occasional difcourfes published by himself; the second was printed from his MSS. and published by his brother.

FOTHERGILL (JOHN), an eminent phylician [x], fon of John and Margaret Fothergill, quakers, was born March 8, 1712 [Y], at Carr End in Yorkshire, where his father, who had been a brewer at Knaresborough (after having travelled from one end of America to the other), lived retired on a small estate which he cultivated. The eldeft fon Alexander, who studied the law, inherited that eftate. John was the fecond fon. Joseph, the third fon, was an ironmonger at Stockport, in Chefhire, where he died a. few years ago. Samuel, the fourth fon, went to America, and became a celebrated preacher among the quakers. There was also a fifter, Anne, who lived with the doctor, and furvived him.

John received his education under the kind care of his grandfather Thomas Hough, a perfon of fortune in Cheshire (which gave him a predilection for that county), and at Sedburg in Yorkshire. About 1718 he was put apprentice to Benjamin Bartlett, apothecary, at Bradford, whence he removed to London, Oct. 20, 1736, and studied two years as a pupil of doctor (afterwards fir Edward) Wilmot, at St. Thomas's Hospital. He then went to the university of Edinburgh, to study physic, and there took his doctor's degree. His Thesis was entitled, " De emeticorum usu in variis morbis tractandis;" and it has been republished in a collection of These by Smellie. From Edinburgh he went to Leyden [z], whence, after a fhort ftay, he travelled through fome parts of France and Germany, and, returning to England, began his practice in London about 1740, in a house in Whitehart-court, Lombard-street (where he refided till his removal to Harpur-street in 1767), and acquired both reputation and fortune. He was admitted a licentiate of the College of Physicians of London, 1746, and in 1754, fellow of Edinburgh, to which he was a considerable benefactor. In 1753, he became a member both of the Royal and Antiquarian Societies; and was at his death a member of the Royal Medical Society at Paris. He continued his practice with uninterrupted fuccefs till within the laft two years of his life, when an illness, which he had brought on himself by his unremitted attention, obliged him greatly to contract it. Befides his occupation in medical fcience, he had imbibed an early tafte for natural hiftory, improved by his friend Peter Collinfon, and employed himself particularly on the study of shells, and of botany. He was for many years a valuable contributor to the Gentleman's Magazine; which in return confiderably affifted his rifing fame. His Observations on the Weather and Diseases were begun there in April 1751, and difcontinued in the beginning of 1756, as he was difappointed in his views of exciting other experienced phylicians in different parts to imitate the example. Though his practice was very extensive, he did not add to his art any great or various improvements. His pamphlet on the ulcerous fore throat, is, on every account, the best of his publications, and that owes much of its merit to the information of the late doctors Letherland [A] or Sylvester. It was first printed in 1748, on the re-appearance of that fatal diforder which in 1739 had carried off the two only fons of Mr. Pelham. It may be here added, that Dr. Wilmot preferved lady Catherine Pelham, after her fons had died of it, by lancing her throat; a method which, he faid, he had once before purfued with the fame fuccefs. In 1762, Dr. Fothergill purchased an estate at Upton in Effex, and formed an excellent botanic garden, with hot-houses and green-houses, to the extent of 260 feet. In 1766, he began regularly to withdraw, from Midfummer to Michaelmas, from the exceffive fatigue of his profeffion, to Lee Hall, near Middlewich in Chefhire; which, though he only rented it by the year, he had spared no expence to improve. During this recess he took no fees, but attended to prescribe gratis at an inn at Middlewich once a week. Some time before his death he had been industrious to contrive a method of generating and preferving ice in the Weft Indies. He was the patron of Sidney Parkinfon, and drew up the preface prefixed to his account of the voyage to the South Seas. At his expence allo was made and printed an entire new translation of the whole Bible, from the Hebrew and Greek originals, by Anthony Purver [B], a quaker, in two volumes, 1764,

[A] See Mr. Chandler's Treatife on a Cold, 1761, p. 53, where the method of treating this new diforder is abfolutely given to Dr. Letherland; who with that modefty which was his diftinguishing characteristic, when the doctor's MS. was shewn to him, expressly forbad any mention of his name in it.

[B] This man deferves to be added to the lift of unlearned mechanics, who by dint of application have acquired a knowledge of the learned languages, beginning with the Hebrew, and proceeding to the Greek and Latin. He was bred a fhoemaker, with a ferious turn and defire of enquiring into the religious fentiments he had imbibed in his youth. This work is faid to have cost the doctor not lefs than 20001.

Tolio, and alfo, in 1780, an edition of bishop Percy's "Key to the New Testament," adapted to the use of a seminary of young quakers, at Acworth, near Leeds, which the doctor first projected, and afterwards endowed handfomely by his will. It now contains above 300 children of both fexes, who are clothed and inftructed. Among the other beneficent schemes suggested by Dr. Fothergill, was that of bringing fifh to London by land carriage, which, though it did not in every refpect fucceed, was supposed to defeat a monopoly; and, that of rendering bread much cheaper, though equally wholefome, by making it with one part of potatoes, and three parts of houshold flour. But his public benefactions, his encouragements of science, the instances of his attention to the health, the police, the convenience of the metropolis, &c. we cannot pretend to fpecify. The fortune which Dr. Fothergill acquired, was computed at 80,000l. His business when he was in full practice, was calculated at near 7000l. per annum. In the Influenza of 1775 and 1776, he is faid to have had fixty patients on his lift daily, and his profits were then estimated at 8000l. The diforder which hastened his death was an obstruction in the bladder, occasioned by a delicacy which made him unwilling to alight from his carriage for relief. He died at his house in Harpur-street, Dec. 26, 1780; and his remains were interred, Jan. 5, in the quakers buryingground at Winchmore-hill. The executors, who were his fifter, and Mr. Chorley, linen-draper, in Gracechurch-street, who married one of his nieces, intended the burial to be private; but the defire of the quakers to attend the funeral rendered it impoffible. Only ten coaches were ordered to convey his relations and friends, but there were more than feventy coaches and post-chaifes attending; and many of the friends came above 100 miles, to pay their last tribute of respect. The doctor by his will appointed, that his shells, and other pieces of natural history, should be offered to the late Dr. Hunter at 500l. under the valuation he ordered to be taken of them. Accordingly, Dr. Hunter bought them for 12001. The drawings and collections in natural hiftory, which he had fpared no expence to augment, were also to be offered to Mr. (now fir Joseph) Banks, at a valuation. His English portraits and prints, which had been collected by Mr. John Nickolls of Ware, and purchased by him for 80 guineas, were bought for 200 guineas by Mr. Thane. His books were fold by auction, April 30, 1781, and the eight following days. His houfe and garden at Upton, were valued at 10,000l.

FOUCAULT (NICOLAS JOSEPH), born at Paris in 1643, was a man of fome political rank, and at the fame time an eminent antiquary, and an honorary member of the academy of belles-lettres. He was fucceffively intendant of Montauban, of R 2 Pau, Pau, and of Caen, and within fix miles of the latter place, difcovered in 1704 the ancient town of the Vinducasses. An exact account of this discovery is inferted in the first volume of the history of the academy of inferiptions, with an enumeration of the coins, marbles, and other antiquities there found. His museum, formed from this and other fources, was of the most magnificent kind. Some time before this, he had made a literary discovery also, having found, in the abbey of Moissa in Querci, a MS. of Lactantius de mortibus Perfecutorum, then only known by a citation of St. Jerom from it. From this MS. Baluce published the work. He died in 1721. He was of gentle manners, though austere virtue; and pleasing, though deeply learned.

FÓUCQUET (NICOLAS), marquis of Belle-Isle, was born in 1615. His father was a counfellor of state; his mother, Mary de Meaupeou, was almost canonized for her charities, and lived to the age of 91, (1681). Nicolas Foucquet was early distinguished for talents, and early advanced. At 20 he was master of requests, at 35 procurator-general of the parliament of Paris, and at 38 superintendant of the finances, at a time when they were much in want of management, in confequence of wars, and the peculation of Mazarin. Foucquet was not the proper perfon to reftore them; he fquandered the public money for his own use, with fo little remorfe, that he expended near 36 millions of livres (150,000l.) to build and adorn his house at Vaux. His profusion raised suspicions of dangerous defigns; and an attempt to rival his master, Louis XIV. in the affections of madame de la Valliere, contributed to irritate that monarch against him. His ruin was completed, like that of Wolfey, by his magnificence and pride. The king vifited him at Vaux, and there faw a feast more splendid than he was used to give himfelf, and a place more beautiful than St. Germain, or Fontainbleau. His motto and device were also offensive: the latter was a squirrel pursued by a snake, (coleuvre, the arms of Colbert), with these words, "Quo non ascendam," "Whither shall I not rife?" From this moment his difgrace was fixed. The entertaiment was given late in August 1661, and he was arrested at Nantes early in September. He was tried after a time by commiffaries appointed for the purpofe, and, in 1664, condemned to perpetual banishment; but the sentence was changed to perpetual imprifonment. He was confined in the citadel of Pignerol, where he is supposed to have died in March, 1680, at the age of 65, a memorable example of the folly and danger of extravagance and ambition. It has been pretended by fome authors, that he died in private, among his own family, but in the utmost obscurity. He was liberal, during his elevation, to men of letters, fome of whom he penfioned fioned. Some writers have greatly extolled his refignation after his difgrace.

FOUCQUET (CHARLES LOUIS AUGUSTUS), count of Belle-Isle, more known by the name of marechal BELLISLE, grandfon of the preceding, was born in 1684. Politics and hiftory attracted his attention from his very infancy, to which studies he afterwards added that of mathematics. He had hardly finished his education when Louis XIV. gave him a regiment of dragoons. He fignalized himfelf at the fiege of Lifle, received other steps of promotion, and at the peace returned to court, where the king perfectly forgot the faults of the grandfather in the merits of his descendant. When war again broke out, after the death of Louis XIV. he proceeded to diftinguish himself, but a change of ministry put a check to his career. He shared the difgrace of the minister Le Blanc, was for a time imprisoned in the Bastile, and then banished to his own estate. In this retreat he composed a complete justification of himself; he was recalled to court, and from that time experienced only favour, fortune and promotion. In the war of 1733, he obtained a principal command in Flanders, diftinguished himself before Philipsburg, and commanded during the rest of the campaign in Germany. In 1735 he was decorated with the order of the Holy Ghoft, and was the confidential advifer of the minister, cardinal Fleury. About this time, taking advantage of an interval of peace, he wrote memoirs of all the countries in which he had ferved: but on the death of the emperor Charles VI. in 1740, he urged the cardinal to declare war. Ambition prompted this advice, and his ambition was not long without gratification. In 1741, he was created marechal of France. The witlings attacked him on his elevation, but he defpifed their efforts: " Thefe rhymers," faid he, " would have gained their ends, fhould I do them the honour to be angry." At the election of the emperor in 1742, marechal Bellisse was plenipotentiary of France at the diet of Frankfort. His magnificence on that occasion was no lefs extraordinary than the extent of his influence in the diet. He appeared rather as a principal elector than an ambaffador, and fecured the election of Charles VII. Soon after, by the defertion of the Pruffians and Saxons, the marechal found himfelf fhut up in Prague, and with great difficulty effected a retreat. He was obliged to march his army over the ice, and three thousand troops left in Prague were compelled to furrender, though with honour. On his return to Frankfort, Charles VII. prefented him with the order of the Golden Fleece, having already declared him a prince of the empire. In December, 1743, as he was going again into Germany, he was taken prisoner at Elbingerode, a finall town encircled by the territory of Hanover, and was carried into England, land, where he remained till August, 1744. He then ferved against the Austrians in Provence; and, returning to Verfailles to plan the campaign of 1748, was created a peer of France. He had enjoyed the title of duke of Gifors, from the year 1742. After the peace in 1748, his influence at court continued to increase, and in 1757 he became prime minister; but in this fituation he lived only four years; falling a victim, it is faid, to his application to business, his forrow for the misfortunes of France, and his anxious cares to extricate her from them. This patriotic character coincides with other anecdotes related of him. Having lost his brother, whom he tenderly loved, at a very critical period of public affairs, he suppressed his private grief as soon as possible, faying, "I have no brother; but I have a country, let me exert myself to fave her." He died in January, 1761, at the age of 77.

Marechal Bellisse was a great character, equally formed for war and politics. He joined the politeness of a courtier to the frankness of a foldier, and perfuaded without being eloquent, because he always seemed convinced of what he urged. He was haughty with the great, but affable to his inferiors; and protected merit, not through vanity, but real esteem. He had no vice, except too much inclination for women. He was twice married, but had only one fon, by his second wise, who fell in battle in the year 1758.

FOULON (WILLIAM), a Dutch Latin poet, flyed by himfelf, in allusion to his real name, Gulielinus Gnaphæus, was born at the Hague, and became mafter of a fchool in that place. He wrote feveral comedies in Latin, which fometimes have been fought by foreign collectors, rather as rare than for their intrinfic merit; yet the Acolastus is common and cheap in this country. We know of three of these comedies. 1. " Martyrium Johannis Pistorii," Leyden. 2. "Hypocrifis," a tragi-comedy, 1554. 3. " Acolastus, de filio prodigo," a comedy, all in 8vo. He died at Horden in Friezeland, where he was latterly a burgomaster, at the age of 75, in 1558. Many critics would fay that nothing very lively could be expected in the comedies of a Dutch burgomaster. His Acolastus was reprinted at Paris, in 1554, with elaborate notes by Gabriel Prateolus; and is faid, in the title, to be formed fo diligently of fentences from Plautus and Terence, that to interpret it might ferve as an extensive comment on both those authors.

Aldrich,

Aldrich. He at the fame time studied, under Dr. Hickes, the Anglo-Saxon language, and its antiquities; of which he published a specimen in Hickes's " Thesaurus," under the title of " Numifimata Anglo-Saxonica et Anglo-Danica, breviter illuftrata ab Andrea Fountaine, eq. aur. & ædis Christi Oxon. alumno. Oxon. 1705," in which year Mr. Hearne dedicated to him his edition of Juftin the historian. He received the honour of knighthood from king William; and travelled over most parts of Europe; where he made a large and valuable collection of pictures, ancient statues, medals, and inferiptions; and, while in Italy, acquired fuch a knowledge of virtù, that the dealers in antiquities were not able to impose on him. In 1709 his judgement and fancy were exerted in embellishing the " Tale of a Tub" with defigns almost equal to the excellent fatire they illustrate. At this period he enjoyed the friendship of the most diffinguished wits, and of Swift in particular, who repeatedly mentions him in the Journal to Stella in terms of high regard. In December, 1710, when fir Andrew was given over by his phyficians, Swift vifited him, foretold his recovery, and rejoiced at it; though he humoroufly fays, " I have loft a legacy by his living; for he told me he had left me a picture and fome books, &c." Sir Andrew was vice-chamberlain to queen Caroline while princefs of Wales, and after the was queen. He was alfo tutor to prince William, for whom he was installed (as proxy) knight of the Bath, and had on that occasion a patent granted him, dated Jan. 14, 1725, for adding supporters to his arms. Elizabeth his fifter, married colonel Clent of Knightwick in Worcestershire. Of his skill and judgement in medals ancient and modern, he made no trifling profit, by furnishing the most confiderable cabinets of this kingdom. In 1727, he was appointed warden of the mint, an office which he held till his death, which happened Sept. 4, 1753. He was buried at Narford in Norfolk, where he had erected an elegant feat, and formed a fine collection of old china ware, a valuable library, an excellent collection of pictures, coins, and many curious pieces of antiquity. Sir Andrew loft many miniatures by a fire at White's original chocolate-house in St. James's-street, where he had hired two rooms for his collections. A portrait of him, by Mr. Hoare of Bath, is in the collection at Wilton-houfe; and two medals of him are engraved in Snelling's " English Medals, 1776." Montfaucon, in the preface to " L'Antiquité Expliquée," calls fir Andrew Fountaine an able antiquary, and fays that, during his stay at Paris, that gentleman furnished him with every piece of antiquity that he had collected, which could be of use to his work; several were accordingly engraved and described, as appears by fir Andrew's name on the plates.

FOUQUIERES

FOUQUIERES (JAMES), a Flemish painter of the 17th century, was one of the most learned and celebrated of landscape painters. Some have placed him fo near Titian, as to make the difference of their pictures confist, rather in the countries represented, than in the goodness of the pieces. The principles they went upon are the fame, and their colouring alike good and regular. He painted for Rubens, of whom he learned the effentials of his art. The Elector-Palatine employed him at Heidelberg, and from thence he went to Paris; where, though he worked a long time, and was well paid, yet he grew poor for want of conduct, and died in the house of an ordinary painter called Silvain, who lived in the fuburbs of St. Jaques.

FOUR DU. See LONGRUE.

FOURMONT (STEPHEN), professor of the Arabic and Chinefe languages at Paris, was the fon of a furgeon, and born at Herbelai near Paris, in 1683. He learned the elements of Latin from the curate of the place; but, lofing his father when very young, he came under the care of an uncle, who removed him to his houfe at Paris, and fuperintended his ftudies. He went through the courfes of logic, rhetoric, and philosophy, in different colleges; and happening to meet with the abbé Sevin, who loved study as well as himfelf, they formed a scheme of reading all the Greek and Latin poets together. But as the exercifes of the fociety employed most of their hours by day, they found means to continue this tafk fecretly by night; and this being confidered as a breach of discipline, the superior thought fit to exclude them from the community. Fourmont retired to the college of Montaigu, and there had the very chambers which formerly belonged to Erafmus; and here the abbé Sevin continued to visit him, when they went on with their work without interruption. Fourmont joined to this purfuit the study of the Oriental languages, in which he made a very uncommon progrefs.

He afterwards was employed in reading lectures : he explained the Greek fathers to fome, and the Hebrew and Syriac languages to others. After that, he undertook the education of the fons of the duke d'Antin, who were committed to his care, and studied in the college of Harcourt. He was at the fame time received an advocate: but, the law not being fuited to his tafte, he returned to his former studies. He then contracted an acquaintance with the abbé Bignon, at whose instigation he applied himfelf to the Chinefe tongue, and fucceeded beyond his expectations, for he had a prodigious memory, and a particular turn for languages. He now became very famous. He held conferences at his own house, once or twice a week, upon subjects of literature; at which foreigners, as well as French, were admitted and affisted. Hence he became known to the count count de Toledo, who was infinitely pleafed with his conversation, and made him great offers, if he would go into Spain; but Fourmont refused. In 1715, he succeeded M. Galland to the Arabic chair in the Royal-college. The same year, he was admitted a member of the Academy of Inscriptions; of the Royal Society at London, in 1738; and of that of Berlin, in 1741. He was often confulted by the duke of Orleans, who had a particular efteem for him, and made him one of his secretaries. He died at Paris in 1743.

His moft confiderable works are, 1. " The Roots of the Latin tongue in metre." 2. " Critical Reflections upon Ancient Hiftory, to the Time of Cyrus," 2 vols. 4to. 3. " Meditationes Sinicæ," folio. 4. " A Chinefe Grammar, in Latin," folio. 5. " Several Differtations, printed in the Memoirs of the Academy of Infcriptions, &c." He left feveral works in manufcript. We must take care not to confound him with MICHAEL FOURMONT, his younger brother, who was an ecclefiaftic, a professor of the Syriac tongue in the Royal-college, and a member also of the Academy of Infcriptions, who died in 1746.

FOURNIER (PETER SIMON), a French engraver and letter-founder, was born at Paris in 1712, and excelled in his profession. His letters not only embellished the typographical art, but his genius illustrated and enlarged it. He published, in 1737, a table of proportions to be observed between letters, in order to determine their height and relations to each other. This ingenious artift afcended to the very origin of printing, for the fake of knowing it thoroughly. He produced at different times feveral historical and critical differtations upon the rife and progrefs of the typographical art, which have fince been collected and published in one volume, 8vo, divided into three parts: the last includes a curious history of the engravers in wood. But the most important work of Fournier, is his " Manuel Typographique, utile aux gens de Lettres, et a ceux qui exercent les differents parties de l'Art de l'Imprimerie," in 2 vols. 8vo. The author meant to have added two more, but was prevented by his death, which happened in 1768. In this " Manuel" are specimens of all the different characters he invented. He was of the most pleafing manners; good, and religious.

FOURNY (HONORE' CAILLE DU), a man of fome fame in France for his profound knowledge of French history, and for the important affistance he gave to Pere Anfelme in his fecond edition of the "Histoire Génealogique et Chronologique de la Maison de France, et des grand Officiers de la Couronne," published in 1712; which has fince been continued by two other Augustine monks monks to nine volumes in folio. Fourny was auditor of the chamber of accounts at Paris. He died in 1731.

FOURQUEVAUX (RAIMOND of Pavia, Baron of). He was by birth an Italian, of the ancient family of Beccari in Pavia; but retired to France in the wars of the Guelphs and Gibbelines, and became a very useful fubject to his new mafter. He diffinguished himfelf in feveral fieges, and very principally affifted in preferving Touloufe to the king of France in 1562, when the Hugonots had nearly become mafters of it. He died at Narbonne (of which he had long been governor), in 1574, at the age of 66. He was an author as well as a warrior, for he compiled a quarto volume of lives of the greatest French generals, which was printed at Paris in 1543. Thefe lives amount to fourteen, and are executed with fo much care, that it is regretted they are not more in number. It is related, that foon after he became governor of Narbonne, he cleared that city of difaffected inhabitants by a curious and decifive method. He made prodigious preparations for a pretended judicial combat between two Spanish knights, at a finall distance from the city, appointed the day and hour, and had the lifts and amphitheatre The inhabitants of course flocked to the spectacle, ready. when he clofed the gates of the city, and peremptorily refufed re-admittance to all whom he had reason to suspect.

FOWLER (JOHN), a celebrated English printer, was born at Briftol, educated at Winchefter school, and admitted fellow of New College in Oxford, in 1555, after two years of probation. Four years after, he refigned it; and, leaving England about that time, took upon him the trade of printing, which he exercifed partly at Antwerp, and partly at Louvain; and thus did fignal fervice to the papifts, in printing their books against the protestant writers. Wood fays, that he was well skilled in Greek and Latin, a tolerable poet and orator, a theologist not to be contemned; and fo verfed alfo in criticifm and other polite literature, that he might have paffed for another Robert or Henry Stephens. He reduced into a compendium the Summa Theologiæ of Thomas Aquinas. He wrote "Additiones in Chronica Genebrandi ;" a " Pfalter for Catholics," which was answered by Sampson Dean, of Christ-church Oxford; also epigrams, and other verfes. He also translated from Latin into English, "The Epistle of Oforius," and "The Oration of Pet. Frarin of Antwerp, against the unlawful infurrection of the protestants, under pretence to reform Religion. Antwerp, 1566." This was answered by William Fulke, divinity-profeffor in Cambridge. Fowler died at Newmark in Germany, in 1578.

FOWLER (CHRISTOPHER), a man of fome parts and learning, but more abfurdities, was born at Marlborough in Wiltfhire, shire, in 1611; and became a member of Magdalen-college in Oxford, but afterwards of St. Edmund's-hall. He entered into orders, and was for fome time a clergy nan of the church of England; but, upon the change of affairs in 1641, he declared himself a presbyterian, took the covenant, and " became," fays Wood, " a very conceited and fantastical preacher among them. For by his very many odd geftures and antic behaviour, unbefeeming the ferious gravity to be used in the pulpit, he drew constantly to his congregation a numerous crowd of filly women and young people, who feemed to be hugely taken and enamoured with his obstreperousness and undecent cants." After rambling from place to place, he was vicar of St. Mary's church in Reading, and at length fellow of Eaton-college. He was an afliftant to the commissioners of Berkfhire, for the ejection of fuch as were then called by the pretended godly party, scandalous, ignorant, and infufficient ministers. In 1655, he published, "Dæmonium Meridianum: Satan at noon, or Anti-christian Blasphemies, Anti-scriptural Devilisms, ac. evidenced by the light of truth, and punished by the hand of justice. Being a fincere relation of the proceedings of the Commissioners of the County of Berks against John Pordage, late Rector of Bradfield in Berks." This minister was ejected by the faid commissioners, for " being conversant, as they faid, with evil spirits, and for blasphemy, ignorance, scandalous behaviour, devilism, uncleanness," &c. After the Restoration, Fowler loft his preferments, retired to London, and afterward to Kennington, but still continued his profession of preaching. He died in 1676; and, like his fellow-labourer, Mr. Francis Cheynell, was for fome time before his death efteemed little better than distracted. He wrote other pieces, but it does not feem worth while to transcribe their titles.

FOWLER (EDWARD), an English bishop, was born in 1632, at Westerleigh in Gloucestershire; of which place his father was minister, but ejected for non-conformity after the Restoration. He was fent to the College-school in Gloucester, and became clerk of Corpus Christi college, Oxford, in 1650. Being looked upon, fays Wood, "as a young man, well endowed with the spirit, and gifted with extemporary prayer, he was admitted one of the chaplains thereof in 1653, and the fame year took a bachelor of arts degree." About 1656, he became chaplain to Arabella countefs of Kent, who prefented him to the rectory of Northill in Bedfordthire. Having been educated a prefbyterian, he fcrupled about conformity at the Restoration; but conformed afterwards, and became a great ornament to the church. His excellent moral writings rendered him fo confiderable, that archbishop Sheldon, in order to introduce him into the metropolis of the kingdom, collated him, in 1673, 1673, to the rectory of All-hallows, Bread-street. In 1675, he was made prebendary of Gloucester; and in 1681, vicar of St. Giles's, Cripplegate. The fame year, he accumulated the degrees of bachelor and doctor of divinity. During the struggle between protestantism and popery in this kingdom, he appeared to great advantage in defence of the former: but this rendered him obnoxious to the court, and in all probability was the fecret caufe of a profecution against him, in 1685, by fome of his parishioners; who alledged, that he was guilty of Whiggifm, that he admitted to the communion excommunicated perfons before they were absolved, &c. We are told, this matter was carried fo far, that, after a trial at Doctors-Commons, he was sufpended, under the pretence of having acted in feveral refpects contrary to the canons of the church. This affront, however, did not intimidate him from doing what he thought his duty: for he was the fecond, who, in 1688, figned the refolution of the London clergy, not to read king James's new declaration for liberty of confcience. He was rewarded for this and other fervices at the Revolution; for, in 1691, he was preferred to the fee of Gloucester, and continued there till his death, which happened at Chelsea, 1714, in his 82d year.

He was the author of many excellent works: as, 1. " The Principles and Practices of certain moderate Divines of the Church of England, abufively called Latitudinarians, greatly misunderstood, truly represented and defended, 1670," 8vo. This is written in the way of dialogue. 2. " The defign of Christianity: or, a plain demonstration and improvement of this propolition, viz. that the enduing men with inward real righteousness and true holiness, was the ultimate end of our Saviour's coming into the world, and is the great Intendment of his bleffed Gofpel, 1671," 8vo. John Bunyan, the author of the Pilgrim's Progrefs, having attacked this book, the author vindicated it in, 3. "Dirt wiped out: or, a manifest discovery of the gross ignorance, erroneousness, and most unchristian and wicked spirit of one John Bunyan, Lay-preacher in Bedford, &c. 1672," 4to. 4. "Libertas Evangelica: or, a Difcourfe of Christian Liberty. Being a further purfuance of The Defign of Christianity, 1680," 8vo. 5. Two pieces on the doctrine of the Trinity: " Certain Propositions, by which the doctrine of the Holy Trinity is fo explained, according to the ancient fathers, as to speak it not contradictory to natural reason. Together with a defence of them, &c. 1694," "A Second Defence of the Propositions, &c. 1625," 4to. 7. Nine Occafional Sermons: one of which was on 4t0. " The great wickednefs and mischievous effects of Slandering, preached in the parish-church of St. Giles's, Nov. 15, 1685, on Pfalm ci. 5. with a large preface of the author, and conclusion in his own vindication, 1685," 4to. 8. " An Anfwer to the Paper delivered by Mr. Ashton at his execution, 1690," 4to. 9. "A Discourse on the great disingenuity and unreasonableness of repining at afflicting Providences, and of the influence which they ought to have upon us, published upon occasion of the death of queen Mary : with a preface containing fome observations touching her excellent endowments and exemplary life. 1695," 8vo. This worthy bishop was twice married, and had by his first wife feveral children.

FOX (EDWARD), an eminent statesman, almoner to Henry VIII. and bishop of Hereford, was born at Dursley in Gloucestershire; but it is not mentioned in what year. After passing through Eton-school, he was admitted of King's college in Cambridge, 1512, where he was elected provost in 1528, and continued fo till his death. Being recommended to cardinal Wolfey as a man of an acute spirit and political turn, he was taken into his fervice; and, according to Lloyd, was the perfon who encouraged the cardinal to afpire to the papacy. In 1528, he was sent ambaffador to Rome, jointly with Stephen Gardiner, afterwards bishop of Winchester, in order to obtain bulls from Clement VII. for Henry's divorce from Catherine of Arragon. He was then almoner to the king; and reputed, as Burnet fays, one of the best divines in England [D]. He was afterwards employed in embassies both in France and Germany; during which, as he was one day difcourfing upon terms of peace, he faid, " Honourable ones last long, but the dishonourable no. longer, than till kings have power to break them: the fureft way therefore to peace, is a constant preparedness for war."-Two things, he would fay, must support a government, gold and iron: gold, to reward its friends; and iron, to keep under its enemies."

In 1535, he was promoted to the bishopric of Hereford. He was the principal pillar of the Reformation, as to the politic and prudential part of it; being of more activity and no less ability than Cranmer himself: but he acted more fecretly than Cranmer, and therefore did not bring himfelf into danger of fuffering on that account. A few months after his confecration, he was fent ambaffador to the protestant princes in Germany, then affembled at Smalcald; whom he exhorted to unite, in point of doctrine, with the church of England. He fpent the winter at Wirtemberg, and held feveral conferences with fome of the German divines, endeavouring to conclude a treaty with them upon many articles of religion: but nothing was effected. Burnet has given a particular account of this negotiation, in his " Hiftory of the Reformation." He returned to England in 1536, and died at London in 1538. He was a very learned man, as we are affured by Godwin, who calls him " vir egregie doctus." Wood also styles him an eminent scholar of his time: and Lloyd represents him as a fine preacher, but adds, that " his inclination to politics brake through all the ignoble restraints of pedantique studies, to an eminency, more by obfervation and travel, than by reading and fludy, that made him the wonder of the university, and the darling of the court. When he was called," fays he, " to the pulpit or chair, he came off not ill, fo prudential were his parts in divinity : when advanced to any office of truft in the univerfity, he came off very well, fo incomparable were his parts for government."

Active as was his life, he found fome time to write. He published a book, "De vera differentia Regiæ Potestatis et Ecclesiasticæ, et quæ sit ipsa veritas et virtus utriusque." 1534, and 1538. It was translated into English by Henry lord Stafford. He also wrote annotations upon Mantuan, the poet. There is likewise an Oration of his extant, in the story of Thomas lord Cromwell, in the second volume of Fox's "History of the Acts and Monuments of the Church;" and a letter from him and Gardiner about their proceedings at Cambridge, when they were fent in 1530, to obtain that university's determination concerning the king's marriage and divorce, in the collection of records at the end of Burnet's first volume of the "History of the Reformation."

FOX (JOHN), an English divine and church-historian, was born at Boston in Lincolnshire, of honest and reputable parents in 1517, the very year that Luther began to oppose the errors of the church of Rome [E]. His father dying when he was young, and his mother marrying again, he fell under the tutelage of a father-in-law, with whom he remained till the age of fixteen. He was then entered of Brazen Nose college in Oxford; and in May, 1538, took the degree of batchelor of arts. He was foon diftinguished for his uncommon abilities aud learning; was chosen fellow of Magdalen college, and became master of arts in 1543. He discovered in his younger years a genius for poetry, and wrote in an elegant syle feveral Latin comedies, the subjects of which were taken from the scriptures. We have a comedy of his, entitled, "De Christo Triumphante," printed in 1551; which was translated into English by Richard Day, fon of John Day, the famous printer in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and published with this title, "Christ Jesus Triumphant, wherein is described the glorious triumph and conquess of Christ over fin, death, and the law, &c." 1579; and in 1607, in 8vo. It was again published in 1672, and dedicated to all schoolmasters, in order that it might be admitted into their respective schools, for the peculiar elegance of its style, by T. C. M. A. of Sidney-college, in Cambridge.

He afterwards applied himfelf to divinity, with fomewhat more fervency than circumfpection; and difcovered himfelf in favour of the Reformation then going on, before he was known to those who maintained the caufe, or those who were of ability to protect the maintainers of it. In order to make himfelf a judge of the controversies which then divided the church, his first care was to fearch diligently into the ancient and modern hiftory of it; to learn its beginning, by what arts it flourished, and by what errors it began to decline; to confider the caufes of those controversies and diffentions which had arifen in the church, and to weigh attentively of what moment and confequence they were to religion. To this end he applied himfelf with fuch zeal and induftry, that before he was thirty years of age, he had read over all the Greek and Latin fathers, the schoolmen, the councils, the confiftories; and had alfo acquired a competent skill in the Hebrew language. But from this strict application by day and by night, from forfaking his friends for the most folitary retirement, from the great and visible distractions of his mind, and above all from absenting himself from the public worthip, arose fufpicions of his alienation from the church; in which his enemies being foon confirmed, he was accufed and condemned of herefy, expelled his college, and thought to have been favourably dealt with, that he escaped with his life. This was in 1545.

His friends were greatly difpleafed at him, and afraid to countenance or protect one condemned for a capital offence; and his father-in-law took advantage of it to withhold his paternal eftate from him, thinking probably that he, who ftood in danger of the law himfelf, would with difficulty find relief from it. Being thus forfaken by his friends, he was reduced to great diftrefs; when he was taken into the houfe of fir Thomas Lucy of Warwickfhire, to be tutor to his children. Here he married ried a citizen's daughter of Coventry, and continued in fir Thomas's family, till his children were grown up; after which he spent some time with his wife's father at Coventry. He removed to London a few years before king Henry's death; where having neither employment nor preferment, he was again driven to great necessities and distress. Of the manner in which he was this time relieved, his fon tells a most romantic tale. He was fitting one day, fays he, in St. Paul's church, almost fpent with long faiting, his countenance wan and pale, and his eyes hollow, when there came to him a perfon, whom he never remembered to have feen before, who, fitting down by him, accofted him very familiarly, and put into his hands an untold fum of money; bidding him to be of good cheer, to be careful of himfelf, and to use all means to prolong his life, for that in a few days new hopes were at hand, and new means of fubfiftence. Fox tried all methods to find out the perfon by whom he was fo feafonably relieved, but in vain; the prediction, however, was fulfilled, for within three days he was taken into the fervice of the dutchefs of Richmond, to be tutor to her nephew the earl of Surrey's children; who, upon the commitment of the earl and his father the duke of Norfolk to the Tower, were fent to be educated under the care and infpection of the dutchefs of Richmond.

In this family he lived, at Ryegate in Surrey, during the latter part of Henry's reign, the five years reign of Edward, and part of Mary's; being at this time protected by one of his pupils, then duke of Norfolk. Gardiner, bishop of Winchester, was however determined to have him feized, and laid many fnares and stratagems for that purpose. The bishop was very intimate with the duke of Norfolk, often visited him, and frequently defired to fee his tutor. The duke evaded the request, one while alledging his abfence, another that he was indifposed, still pretending reasons to put him off. At length it happened, that Fox, not knowing the bifhop to be within the houfe, entered the room, where the duke and he were in difcourfe; and feeing the bishop, with a shew of bashfulness, withdrew himself. The bishop asking who he was, the duke answered, his physician, who was fomewhat uncourtly, being newly come from the univerfity. " I like his countenance and afpect very well," replied the bishop, " and upon occasion will make use of him." The duke, perceiving from hence that danger was at hand, thought it time for Fox to retire, and accordingly furnished him with the means to go abroad. He found, before he could put to fea, that Gardiner had iffued out a warrant for apprehending him, and was caufing the most diligent fearch to be made for him; neverthelefs, he at length escaped, with his wife then big with child; got over to Newport Haven, travelled to Antwerp and and Franckfort, and from thence to Bafil in Germany, where numbers of English subjects reforted in those times of perfecution. In this city he maintained himself and family, by correcting the press for Oporinus, a celebrated printer; and it was here, that he laid the plan of his famous work, "The History of the Acts and Monuments of the Church." He had published at Strasburgh, in 1554, in 8vo, "Commentarii Rerum in Ecclesia gestarum, maximarumque per totam Europam perfecutionum a Wiclavi temporibus ad hanc usque ætatem descriptarum," in one book: to which he added five more books, all printed together at Bafil, 1559, in folio.

After Elizabeth was fettled on the throne, and the protestant religion well established, Fox returned to his native country, where he found a very faithful friend in his former pupil, the duke of Norfolk; who maintained him at his house, and fettled a penfion on him, which was afterwards confirmed by his fon, the earl of Suffolk. Cecil also obtained for him of the queen a prebend in the church of Salifbury, though Fox himfelf would have declined accepting it; and though he had many powerful friends, as Walfingham, fir Francis Drake, fir Thomas Gresham, the bishops Grindal, Pilkington, &c. who would have raifed him to confiderable preferments, he declined them: being always unwilling to fubfcribe the canons, and difliking some ceremonies of the church. Fuller tells us, that when archbishop Parker urged him to subscribe, the old man produced the New Teftament in Greek, " To this (fays he) will I fubscribe." And when a subscription to the canons was required of him, he refused it, faying, " I have nothing in the church fave a prebend at Salifbury; and much good may it do you, if you will take it away from me." Such respect, however, did the bishops, most of them formerly his fellow exiles, bear to his age, parts, and labours, that he continued in it to his death. But though Fox was a non-conformift, he was a very moderate one, and highly difapproved of the heats of the rigid puritans. He expresses himself to the following effect in a Latin letter, written on the expulsion of his fon by the puritans from Magdalen-college, on the groundless imputation of his having turned papift; in which are the following palfages. " I cannot but wonder at the turbulent genius, which infpires those factious puritans .---Were I one, who like them would be violently outrageous against bishops and archbishops, or join myself with them, that is, would become mad, as they are, I had not met with this fevere treatment. Now becaufe, quite different from them, I have chofen the fide of modesty and public tranquillity; hence the hatred, they have a long time conceived against me, is at last grown to this degree of bitterness.-As to myfelf, though the taking away the fellowship from my son is a great affliction to me, yet because VOL. VI. this this is only a private concern, I bear it with more moderation: I am much more concerned upon account of the church, which is public. I perceive a certain race of men rifing up, who, if they fhould increase and gather ftrength in this kingdom, I am forry to fay what diffurbance I foresee must follow from it," &c. Conformably to these fentiments, he expresses himfelf on many other occasions, in which he had no private interest.

This excellent man died in 1587, in the 70th year of his age, and was buried in the chancel of St. Giles, Cripplegate, of which, it is faid, he was fometime vicar; but, as Wood thinks, if he had it at all, he kept it but a little while, in the beginning of Elizabeth's reign. He left two fons, Samuel and Thomas. Samuel became demy, and afterwards fellow of Magdalen-college, in Oxford. In 1610, he wrote his father's life, prefixed to his "Acts and Monuments of the Church." Thomas was fellow of King's college, in Cambridge, and became afterwards an eminent phylician at London.

Befides what has been mentione , Fox wrote, I. " De Cenfura, seu Excommunicatione Ecclesiastica, Interpellatio ad Archiepiscopum Cantuariensem, 1551," 8vo. 2. " Tables of Grammar, 1552." Wood tells us, that thefe "Tables were subscribed in print by eight lords of the privy council; but were quickly laid afide, as being far more too thort, than king Henry the VIIIth's Grammar was too long." 3. "Articuli five Aphorifmi aliquot Joannis Wiclevi sparsim ant ex variis illius opusculis excerpti per adversarios Papicolas, ac Concilio Constantiensi exhibiti." 4. "Collectanea quædem ex Reginaldi Pecocki Episcopi Cicestriensis opusculis exustis confervata, et ex antiquo plegmate transcripta.' 5. Opistographia ad Ox-onienses." The three last are printed with his "Commentarii rerum in Ecclesia gestarum," at Strasburg, 1554, in 8vo, mentioned above. 6. " Concerning Man's Election to Salvation, 1581," 8vo. 7. " Certain Notes of Election, added to Beza's Treatife of Predeftination, 1581," 8vo. 8. " The Four Evangelists in the old Saxon Tongue, with the English thereunto adjoined, 1571," in 4to, and many other pieces, which were levelled against the Papist.

His "Hiftory of the Acts and Monuments of the Church," commonly called, "Fox's Book of Martyrs," was published at London, in 1563, in one thick volume, folio, with this title: "Acts and Monuments of these latter and perillous days touching matters of the Churche, wherein are comprehended and deferibed the great perfections and horrible troubles, that have been wrought and practifed by the Romish Prelates, speciallye in this Realme of England and Scotland, from the year of our Lorde a thousand unto the time now prefent, &c. Gathered and collected according to the true copies and wrytinges certificatorie, ficatorie, as well of the parties themselves that fuffered, as out of the Bishops Registers, which were the doers thereof." There was a fourth edition, 1583, in two volumes, folio, and in 1632 it was reprinted in three. The ninth edition came out in 1684, in three volumes, folio, with copper cuts; the former editions having only wooden. Wood observes, that the undertakers of this impreffion had in a manner obtained a promife from Charles II. to revive the order in Elizabeth's time, of placing the faid book of Acts and Monuments in the common halls of archbishops, bishops, deans, archdeacons, heads of colleges, &c. according to the canons of Parker, archbp. of Canterbury, in 1571, to the end that they might not be lofers by the faid impreflion.

This book was highly effeemed by the protestants; but the papifts in the mean time were very angry at it. They called it Fox's Golden Legend, and reprefented it as a huge collection of notorious lies and falshoods. Some protestants have not been very favourable to it; Jeremy Collier in particular, who takes all opportunities of depreciating Fox's character, and undervaluing his work, accuses him of difingenuity and ill-nature, and fays he ought to be read with caution. He observes, that a vein of fatire and coarfe language runs through his Martyrology; and inftances, in his calling the bifhop of Winchefter an infenfible afs. He has alfo noticed fome errors.

Fox does certainly fail occasionally in decency and temper but it would be strange, if the zeal of a reformer, in those hot times, should not sometimes transgress the bounds of moderation and charity. Neverthelefs, his work is very faithfully written; and fo it has been found by those who have the most accurately fearched the registers he used, particularly by Burnet and Strype; and this has been confeffed even by Collier.

FOX (GEORGE), the first public preacher of the people called quakers, was born at Drayton in the Clay in Leicestershire, in 1624. His father, Christopher Fox, was a weaver. He was placed out with a shoemaker and grazier, and much of the employment of his juvenile years appears to have been the attendance on fheep, an occupation well fuited to the contemplative turn of his mind. It does not appear that he ever followed, as a principal, either of the trades of his master; for in 1643, he left his relations, and travelled about the country, fometimes feeking the fociety of people who were reputed to be more than ordinarily religious, and at other times living in folitude. His first appearance in public, as a preacher, was about 1647 or 1648. He cried against injustice, drunkenness, and other vices, in courts, markets, fairs, and other places; and he inveighed against the modes of worship prevalent at the time, and against S 2 a leparate a feparate ministry, which he apprehended not to be of divine authority; afferting that the light of Christ, implanted in the heart of man, was alone, and exclusively, the means of falvation, and the right qualification for gospel ministry. He was imprisoned at Nottingham so early as 1649, on some difference with the minister there; and during the long course of his labours, he suffered imprisonment nine times. Some of his confinements were long, and marked with great feverity.

In 1669, he married Margaret, the widow of Thomas Fell, a Welch judge, of Swarthmore in Lancashire. She had several children by her former hufband, and was about nine years older than Fox: and fo much was he taken up with his public employments, while Margaret was occupied with the care of her family, that they passed much of their time apart, and Fox refided but little at Swarthmore. It is remarkable that, on the occasion of his marriage, Fox bound himself by deed not to meddle with his wife's eftate. In his travels, he visited most parts of England, Scotland, and Ireland; alfo Holland, Germany, the British colonies in North America, and some of the West-India islands. He died in London, in 1690. William Penn, in a preface to the journal of Fox, reprefents him as a man of clear judgment, well verfed in the fcriptures, a great fympathizer with his brethren under fuffering, and a promoter of order. Though an illiterate man, he was rather a voluminous writer. There are extant, belides fome pieces of which no fecond edition was made, three folio volumes of his writings, namely, "His Journal," printed at London, in 1694; a collection of his "Epiftles," 1698; and his "Doctrinal Pieces," amounting to about 150, in 1706. In the two former are many things relating to the discipline of that religious fociety to which he belonged, and of which he was the chief and primary promoter.

FRACASTORIO (GIROLAMO), an eminent Italian poet and phyfician, was born at Verona in 1483. Two fingularities are related of him in his infancy; one, that his lips adhered fo clofely to each other, when he came into the world, that a furgeon was obliged to divide them with his knife; the other, that his mother was killed with lightning, while he, though in her arms at the very moment, efcaped unhurt. Fracaftorio was of parts fo exquifite, and made fo wonderful a progrefs in every thing he undertook, that he became eminently fkilled, not only in the belles lettres, but in all arts and fciences. He was a poet, a philofopher, a phyfician, an aftronomer, a mathematician. He was a man alfo of great confequence, as appears from pope Paul III's making ufe of his authority, to remove the council of Trent to Bologna, under the pretext of a contagious diftemper, temper, which, as Fracastorio deposed, made it no longer fafe for him to continue at Trent. He was intimately acquainted with cardinal Bembo, Julius Scaliger, and all the great men of his time. He died of an apoplexy, at Casi near Verona, in 1553; and, in 1559, the town of Verona erected a statue in honour of him.

He was the author of many productions, both as a poet and as a phyfician; yet never man was more difinterested in both these capacities than he; evidently fo as a physician, for he practifed without fees; and as a poet, whole usual reward is glory, no man could be more indifferent. It is owing to this indifference, that we have so little of his poetry, in comparison of what he wrote; and that among other compositions his Odes and Epigrams, which were read in manufcript with infinite admiration, and would have been most thankfully received by the public, yet not being printed, were lost. He wrote in Latin; and with great elegance. His poems now extant are the three books of "Siphilis, or De Morbo Gallico," a book of Mifcellaneous Poems, and two books of his Poems, entitled, " Joseph," which he began at the latter end of his life, but did not live to finish. And these works, it is faid, would have perished with the rest, if his friends had not taken care to preferve and communicate them: for Fracastorius, writing merely for amusement, never took any care respecting his works, when they were out of his hands. Julius Scaliger was not content to pronounce him the best poet in the world next to Virgil, but he affirmed him to be the best in every thing elfe; and, in short, though he was not of a temper to give people more than their due, he may be faid in a manner to have adored Fracastorio. He composed also a poem, called "Alcon, sive de cura canum venaticorum." His style of versification was rich and harmonious, his images lively, and his conceptions noble.

His medical pieces are, "De Sympathia et Antipathia,—De contagine et contagiolis morbis,—De caulis criticorum dierum, —De vini temperatura, &c." His works have been printed feparately and collectively. The best edition of them is that of Padua, 1735, in two vols. 4to.

FRACHETTA (GIROLAMO), an eminent political writer, was a native of Rovigno in Italy, and fpent feveral years at Rome, where he was greatly effeemed by Seffa, ambaffador of Philip II. king of Spain. He was employed in civil as well as military affairs, and acquitted himfelf always with great applaufe: neverthelefs, he had like to have been ruined, and to have even loft his life, by the enemies he met with. He then withdrew to Naples; and ftill having friends to protect his innocence, he proved it at length to the court of Spain, who thereupon ordered count de Benevento, viceroy of Naples, to employ him. This S 3 was accordingly done, by which means Frachetta lived in a very honourable manner at Naples, where a handfome penfion was allowed him. He gained great reputation by his political works, the most confiderable of which is that entitled, "II Seminario de Governi di Stato, et di Guerra." In this work he has collected, under an hundred and ten chapters, about eight thousand military and state maxims, extracted from the best authors; and has added to each chapter a difcourse, which ferves as a commentary to it. This work was printed twice, at least, by the author, reprinted at Venice in 1647, and at Genoa in 1648, 4to; and there was added to it, " Il Principe," by the fame writer, which was published in 1597. The dedication informs us, that Frachetta was prompted to write this book, from a conversation he had with the duke of Seffa; in which the latter observed, among other particulars, that he thought it as important, as it was a difficult task, to inform princes truly of fuch transactions as happen in their dominions. His other compositions are, " Discorso della Ragione di Stato: Discorso della Ragione di Guerra: Esposizione di tutta l'Opera di Lucrezio." He died at Naples in the beginning of the feventeenth century, but at what age is unknown.

FRAGUIER (CLAUDE-FRANCIS), a French writer, was born of a noble family at Paris in 1666 [F]. His first studies were under the Jesuits; and father La Baune had the forming of his taste to polite literature. He was also a disciple of the fathers Rapin, Jouvenci, La Rue, and Commire; and the affection he had for them induced him to admit himfelf of their order in 1683. After his noviciate, and when he had finished his course of philosophy at Paris, he was sent to Caen to teach the belles lettres; where he contracted a friendship with Huet and Segrais, and much improved himfelf under their inftructions. The former advifed him to fpend one part of the day upon the Greek authors, and another upon the Latin: by purfuing which method, he became an adept in both languages. Four years being paffed here, he was recalled to Paris, where he fpent other four years in the fludy of divinity. At the end of this courfe, he was fhortly to take upon him the occupation of either preaching, or teaching; but finding in himfelf no inclination for either, he quitted his order in 1694, though he still retained his usual attachment to it. Being now at liberty to indulge his own wifhes, he devoted himfelf folely to improve and polish his understanding. He soon after assisted the abbé Bignon, under whofe direction the Journal des Sçavans was conducted; and he had all the qualifications necessary for such a work, viz. a profound knowledge of antiquity, a skill not only in the Greek and Latin, but alfo Italian, Spanish, and English tongues, a found judgement, an exact tafte, and a very impartial and candid temper. He afterwards formed a plan of translating the works of Plato; thinking, very justly, that the versions of Ficinus and Serranus were not fo perfect, but there was room enough for correction and amendments. He had begun this work, but was obliged to difcontinue it by a terrible misfortune, which befel him in 1709. He had borrowed, as we are told, of his friend father Hardouin, a manufcript commentary of his upon the New Testament, in order to make some extracts from it; and was buly at work upon it one fummer evening, with the window half open, and himfelf inconfiderately almost un. The cold air had fo unhappy an effect in relaxing the dreffed. muscles of his neck, that he could never afterwards hold his head in its natural fituation. The winter increased his malady; and he was troubled with involuntary convulfive motions of the head, and with pains which often hindered him from fleeping. Neverthelefs, he lived nineteen years after; and though he could not undertake any literary work, yet he conftantly received vifits from the learned, and converfed with them not without pleafure. He died fuddenly of an apoplexy, 1728, in his 62d year. He had been made a member of the Academy of Infcriptions in 1705, and of the French Academy in 1708.

His works confift of Latin Poems, and a great number of very excellent differtations in the memoirs of the French Academy. His poems were published at Paris, in 1729. in 12mo, with the poems of Huet, under the care of the abbé d'Olivet, who prefixed an Elogy of Fraguier; and at the end of them are three Latin Differtations concerning Socrates, which is all that remains of the Prolegomena he had prepared for his intended translation of Plato. These fame Differtations, with many others upon curious and interesting subjects, are printed in the Memoirs above-mentioned.

FRANCESCA (PETER), an eminent painter of Venice, who delighted in reprefenting night-pieces and battles. Pope Nicholas employed him to paint the Vatican: where he executed, among other pieces, two pictures, which were taken down by command of pope Julius II. to make room for two others of Raphael, viz. the miracle of the Sacrament that happened at Bolfena, and of St. Peter in prifon. He drew feveral portraits, and wrote of arithmetic and geometry. He died in 1443.

FRANCESCHINI (MARK ANTONY), a painter of Bologna, the difciple of Carlo Cignani, was born in 1648. He painted fo admirably in the ftyle of that master, that a great part of many of his capital pictures were entrusted to him. His reputation was extensive, though his works are not now proportionably known. He died in 1729.

FRANCIS

FRANCIA (FRANCESCO), an eminent painter, born at Bologna in 1450, was at first a goldsmith or jeweller; afterwards a graver of coins and medals; but at last applying himself to painting, he acquired great reputation by his works, and particularly by a piece of St. Sebaftian, whom he had drawn bound to a tree, with his hands tied over his head. In this figure, befides the delicacy of its colouring, and gracefulnefs of its pofture, the proportion of its parts was fo admirably just and true, that all the fucceeding Bolonese painters, even Hannibal Carracci himfelf fludied its measures as their rule, and followed them in the fame manner as the ancients had done the canon of Polycletus. It was under the difcipline of this mafter, that Marc Antonio, Raphael's best engraver, learnt the rudiments of his art. He drew feveral pieces for fome of the principal perfons in Italy, chiefly for the duke of Urbin. Raphael's reputation made him defirous to fee his works, but his age would not fuffer him to take a journey to Rome: neverthelefs, a friendly correspondence commenced between these two painters. The following ftory is told of his death: Raphael, having painted the picture of St. Cecilia, for a church in Bologne, sent it to Francia to place it properly for him, and to correct even its faults, if he difcerned any. But Francia was fo ftruck with the beauty of the piece, that, defpairing to attain the fame perfection, he fell, it is faid, into a kind of melancholy; and this, bringing on a confumption, occasioned his death in 1518, according to Vafari; though others fay, he did not die till 1530.

FRANCIS of Affifi, a great faint of the Romish church, and founder of one of the four orders of mendicant friars, was born at Affifi in Umbria, in 1182. He was the fon of a merchant, and was christened John, but had the name of Francis added, from his facility of talking French, which he learned to qualify him for his father's profettion. But about 1206, he became fo ftrongly affected with religious zeal, that he took a refolution of retiring from the world. He devoted himfelf fo much to folitude, mortified himfelf to fuch a degree, and thereby contracted fo ghaftly a countenance, that the inhabitants of Affifi thought him distracted. His father, thinking to make him refume his profession, employed a very fevere method for that purpose, by throwing him into prison; but finding this made no impression on him, he took him before the bishop of Affifi, in order to make him refign all claim to his paternal estate, which he not only agreed to, but stripped off all his clothes, even to his shirt. He prevailed with great numbers to devote themfelves, as he had done, to the poverty which he confidered as enjoined by the Gofpel; and drew up an inftitute, or rule for their use, which was approved by pope Innocent III. in 1210. The year after he obtained of the Benedictines the church of of Portiuncula, near Affifi ; and his order increafed fo faft, that when he held a chapter in 1219, near 5000 friars, of the order of Minors (fo they were called) were prefent. Soon after, he obtained alfo a bull in favour of his order from pope Honorius III. About this time, he went into the Holy Land, and endeavoured in vain to convert the fultan Meledin. It is faid, that he offered to throw himfelf into the flames to prove his faith in what he taught. He returned foon after to his native country, and died at Affifi in 1226, being then only 45. Strange legends are told by the writers of his church; fuch as his feeing a vifion of a feraph, whence his order were called feraphic; of his rolling himfelf in fnow, to fubdue the flames of luft, &c. He was canonized by pope Gregory IX. the 6th of May, 1230; and Oct. the 4th, on which his death happened, was appointed as his feftival.

His order foon rofe to great fplendor, and has done prodigious fervices to the Roman pontiffs. Some popes, feveral cardinals, and a great number of prelates, and famous authors have been of it. It is divided into feveral bodies, fome of which are more rigid than others; and all ftrongly inherit the ancient emulation, which foon broke out between the children of St. Francis and those of St. Dominic.

FRANCIS (of PAULO), another Romish faint, who to exceed his predeceffor in humility, founded the order of Minims (leaft) as he had that of Minors (inferiors). He was born in 1416, at Paulo in Calabria. He began his career of mortification by retiring to a cell on a defert part of the coaft, where his fanctity foon obtained followers, and they ere long constructed a monastery round his cell. Thus was his order commenced. He formed a rule for it, which was approved by pope Alexander VI. and confirmed by Julius II. His rule was extremely rigorous, enjoining perpetual abstinence from wine, fish, and meat. His difciples were always to go bare-footed, never to fleep upon a bed, and to use many other mortifications. He died in France, to which country he went at the earnest follicitation of Louis XI. who hoped to be cured of a dangerous malady by his prefence. This event took place at Pleffis-du-Parc, in 1507, when he was at the age of 91. He was canonized in 1519, by Leo X. By the confession of his admirers he was perfectly illiterate.

FRANCIS XAVIER; the great coadjutor of Ignatius Loyala in establishing the order of Jesuits; was born at Xavier, at the foot of the Pyrennees, April 7, 1506. One of his first public employments was that of teaching philosophy at Paris, where he formed his connection with Ignatius; and with him and five others, in 1534, made a vow to labour towards the conversion of infidels. In 1541, Francis embarked at Lisbon for Goa, and and began the career of his labours, by which he obtained the title of Apofile of the Indies. He taught on the coaft of Comorin, at Malacca, in the Molucca Iflands, and those of Japan. In the latter place he exhibited wonderful proofs of perfeverance and courage, but found his progress most effectually impeded by ignorance of the language. He had formed the defign of proceeding into China, but before he could carry it into execution he fell fick, and died in 1552, at the age of 46. He was canonized by pope Gregory XV. in 1622. The fabulous accounts of his miracles, are given up by the best writers of the Romish perfuasion, who represent him only as a missionary of most exemplary zeal and fanctity. There are extant by him, 1. "Five books of Epistles." 2. "A Catechism." 3. "Opuscula, or fmaller works."

FRANCIS DE SALES, another canonized worthy of the papal communion, who if not properly a faint, was apparently a good man and an exemplary bishop, was born at the Castle of Sales near Geneva, August 21, 1567. He began his studies at Paris, and finished them at Padua, in the line of a student of law, which he practifed for fome time, before his zeal led him to labour in the conversion of those whom he considered as heretics. The accounts of his fuccefs in this work are amazing; we are told that he converted 70,000 protestants before he was made bishop of Geneva, which happened in 1602; and it is added, that his ardour rather increased than diminished after his elevation. Henry IV. of France was very defirous to invite him into France, he even offered to procure for him a cardinal's hat, but in vain. He inftituted a fociety of religious, called the order of the Vifitation, which was established in 1618 by pope Paul V. This institution had such success, that Madame de Chantal the first superior of the order, lived to fee 87 fuch congregations founded. He refisted all invitations to leave his favourite diocese of Geneva, for a confiderable time, though he occafionally vifited France, and died at Lyons in 1622, at the age of 56. He was canonized by Alexander VI. in 1665. Of his works the principal are, 1. " Introduction to a devout Life," calculated to shew that religion ought not to be confined to cloifters, but practifed in the world. 2. " A Treatife on the love of God." 3. " Letters." His writings difplay the fame candour, the fame earnest piety that diftinguished his whole life.

FRANCIS (PHILIP), a very ingenious writer, of Irifh extraction, if not born in that kingdom. His father was a dignified clergyman in Ireland, being dean of fome cathedral; and our author, his fon, was alfo bred to the church, and had a doctor's degree conferred on him. He was more diffinguifhed as a tranflator, than as an original writer. His verfions of Horace and Demofthenes have been juftly valued : the former is acaccompanied companied with notes, and was the most complete and useful work of its kind which had then appeared. He was also a confiderable political writer; and, in the beginning of the prefent reign is supposed to have been employed by the government: for which his fervice, he was promoted to the rectory of Barrow in Suffolk, and to the chaplainship of Chelfea Hospital. He was also the author of two tragedies, "Eugenia," and "Constantia;" but, as a dramatic writer, he was not very fuccessful. He died at Bath, March 1773; leaving a fon, who was afterwards one of the supreme council at Bengal.

FRANCO (NICOLO), an Italian fatirist, was born at Benevento in 1510. He was first the friend and then the rival of Aretin. But unhappily quitting Benevento for Rome, and fatirizing fome illustrious men of that place, he was condemned to death for the offence, in 1569. Whether he escaped or not is uncertain. He was an able writer, and has been spoken of as a valuable man, but imprudent.

FRANCOIS (the abbé LAURENT), a ftrong opponent of the French philofophers, ridiculed by them, but, though lefs eloquent, much their fuperior in honefty and found reafoning, was born in 1698, and died in 1782. His works confift chiefly of, I. "A book of Geography, known by the name of Crozat, becaufe dedicated to a lady fo called," 12mo. 2. "Proofs of the Religion of Jefus Chrift." 4 vols. 12mo. 3. "Defence of Religion," 4 vols. 12mo. 4. "Examination of the Catechifm of an Honeft Man," 12mo. 5. "Examination of the Facts on which Chriftianity is founded," 3 vols. 12mo. 6. "Obfervations on the Philofophy of Hiftory," 8vo. His ftyle was not good, but his works were fought for their utility.

FRANCOWITZ (MATTHIAS), a celebrated Proteftant divine, a pupil of Luther and Melanchthon, was born in 1520, at Albano, in Illyria. He oppofed the interim of Charles V. and had a principal hand in drawing up the Centuries of Magdebourg. He died in 1575. He wrote, I. "A Catalogue of the Witneffes of the Truth," 4to. 2. "A Key to the Holy Scripture," reckoned his beft work : and 3. published "Miffa Latina Antiqua," in 8vo. at Strafburg, in 1557. It was a curious copy of an old Miffal, which is now become very fcarce. Sometimes he was diftinguished by the name of Flaccus Illyricus. He published alfo fome editions of books.

FRANCK or FRANCKEN (FRANCISCUS), called Old Frank. A Flemish painter; died, according to the most probable accounts, in 1616, at the age of 72. He painted historical subjects, from the Old and New Testament, with many figures distinctly and skilfully expressed, but without grace. He was apt to croud too many histories into one scene, but his colouring was generally transparent. His pictures have usually a kind of antiquated ftiffnefs, but some of his best have confiderable merit, particularly in the colouring.

FRANCK (FRANCISCUS), fon of the former, called, the Young Franck, was born in 1580, and was the pupil of his father, but studied also at Venice, where he much improved his style : though in general he is not free from many of the peculiarities and defects of his father; he died in 1642. His most capital picture is the Idolatry of Solomon, in the church of Notre Dame at Antwerp. The figure and drapery of Solomon are reckoned fine, and the whole is highly finished, in a small fize.

FRANCKLIN (THOMAS), D. D. chaplain in ordinary to his majesty, born about 1720, was the son of Richard Francklin, well known as the printer of an anti-ministerial paper called " The Craftfman," in the conduct of which he received great affistance from lord Bolingbroke, Mr. Pulteney, and other excellent writers, who then opposed fir Robert Walpole's meafures. By the advice of the fecond of thefe gentlemen, young Francklin was devoted to the church, with a promife of being provided for by the patriot, who afterwards forgot his undertaking, and entirely neglected him. He was educated at Weftminster-school, and was elected to the university of Cambridge, where he became fellow of Trinity-college, and was for some time Greek professor. In Dec. 1758, he was instituted vicar of Ware and Thundridge, which, with the lectureship of St. Paul, Covent-garden, and a chapel in Queen-street, was all the preferment he held, till he obtained the rectory of Brafted in Kent. Dr. T. Francklin poffeffed no inconfiderable fhare of learning and poetical abilities, and was long a favourite in the literary world. His translations of Phalaris, Sophocles, and Lucian, if not of first-rate excellence, are at least such as obtained a temporary celebrity, and certainly afforded proofs of application. He suffered a translation of Voltaire's works to bear his name; but the "Oreftes" and "Electra," are fuppofed to be all that were really translated by him. Dr. Smollett's name also appears to it. His own dramatic compositions, of which the principal are the tragedies of "The Earl of Warwick," and " Matilda," were acted with applaufe. The two tragedies he translated from Voltaire were also performed with fuccefs : and a comedy in two acts, called "The Contract," appeared at the Haymarket in 1776. He died March 15, 1784.

FRANKLIN (BENJAMIN), the celebrated American philofopher, was fprung, as he himfelf informs us, from a family fettled for a long course of years in the village of Ecton [G], in

[G] Life of Dr. Benjamin Franklin, written by himfelf. Translated from the French, and published by Robinson in 1793. The village is there called Eaton, but erroneously. It is known by enquiries effate was fold, not many years ago, to Mr. Isted (not Ested) of that village, whose Northamptonshire, where they had augmented their income, arifing from a finall patrimony of thirty acres, by adding to it the profits of a blackfinith's bufinefs. His father Jofias, having been converted by some non-conformist ministers, left England for America in 1682, and fettled at Boston as a soap-boiler and tallow-chandler. At this place, in 1706, Benjamin, the youngest of his fons, was born. It appeared at first to be his destiny to become a tallow-chandler, like his father; but, as he manifelted a particular diflike to that occupation, different plans were thought of, which ended in his becoming a printer, in 1718, under one of his brothers, who was fettled at Boston. This was a bufinefs much more to his tafte, he foon shewed a talent for reading, and occasionally wrote verses. In prose he had the fagacity to cultivate his ftyle after the model of the Spectator. With his brother he continued as an apprentice, occasionally diftinguishing himself by writing in the New England Courant, which they printed, until their frequent difagreements, and the harsh treatment he experienced from his brother, induced him to leave Boston privately, and take a conveyance by sea to New York. This happened in 1723. From New York he immediately proceeded, in quest of employment, to Philadelphia, not without some distressing adventures. His own description of his first entrance into that city, where he was afterwards in fo high a fituation, is too curious to be omitted.

Northamp-

"On my arrival at Philadelphia, I was in my working drefs, my beft clothes being to come by fea. I was covered with dirt; my pockets were filled with fhirts and ftockings: I was unacquainted with a fingle foul in the place, and knew not where to feek for a lodging. Fatigued with walking, rowing, and having paft the night without fleep, I was extremely hungry, and all my money confifted of a Dutch dollar, and about a fhilling's worth of coppers, which I gave to the boatmen for my paflage. As I had affifted them in rowing, they refufed it at firft, but I infifted on their taking it. A man is fometimes more generous when he has little, than when he has much money; probably becaufe in the firft cafe, he is defirous of concealing his poverty.

"I walked towards the top of the ftreet looking eagerly on both fides, till I came to Market-ftreet, where I met a child with a loaf of bread. Often had I made my dinner on dry bread. I enquired where he bought it, and went ftraight to the baker's fhop which he pointed out to me. I afked for fome bifcuits, expecting to find fuch as we had at Bofton; but they made, it feems, none of that fort at Philadelphia. I then afked for a three-penny loaf. They made no loaves of that price. Finding myfelf ignorant of the prices as well as of the different kinds of bread, I defired him to let me have three-penny worth of bread of fome kind or other. He gave me three large rolls. I was furprifed at receiving fo much: I took them however, and having no room in my pockets, I walked on with a roll under each arm, eating the third. In this manner I went through Market-ftreet to Fourth-ftreet, and paffed the houfe of Mr. Read, the father of my future wife. She was ftanding at the door, obferved me, and thought, with reafon, that I made a very fingular and grotefque appearance."

Notwithstanding this unpromising commencement, Franklin foon met with employment in his bufinefs, working under one Keimer, a very indifferent printer, though, at that time, almost the only one in Philadelphia. In 1724, encouraged by the specious promises of Sir William Keith, governor of the province, Franklin failed for England, with a view of purchafing materials for fetting up a prefs; though his father, to whom he had applied, prudently declined encouraging the plan, on account of his extreme youth, as he was then only 18. On his arrival in England, he had the mortification to find that the governor, who had pretended to give him letters of recommendation and of credit, for the fum required for his purchases, had done no fuch thing; and he was obliged to work at his trade in London for a maintenance. The most exemplary industry, frugality, and temperance, with great quickness and skill in his businefs, both as a preffman and as a compositor, made this rather a lucrative fituation. He reformed the workmen in the houfe where he was employed, proposed new regulations for their proceedings among themfelves, which were established, and was in favour both with the men and their master. Defirous, however, of returning to Philadelphia, he engaged himfelf as bookkeeper 10 a merchant, at fifty pounds a year; which, fays he, was lefs than I earned as a compositor. He left England July 23, 1726, and reached Philadelphia early in October. In 1727, Mr. Denham, the merchant died, and Franklin returned to his occupation as a printer, under Keimer, with a handfome falary. But it was not long before he fet up for himfelf in the fame bufinefs, in concert with one Meredith, a young man whofe father was opulent, and fupplied the money required. Here commenced the rife of Franklin. His indefatigable industry and exact punctuality, fecured him friends and employment, and thefe qualities, ere long, obtained him those lucrative appointments which Bradford, his only formidable opponent, had enjoyed before. The Life of Benjamin Franklin offers a fingular and most useful lesson to young men; it presents the very rare picture of Genius rifing by regular perfeverance, instead of fudden and eccentric efforts. That he had genius cannot be denied, yet his predominant quality was good fense. Meredith, his partner, was of a very different cast, and in 1729, for a very fmall confideration, relinquished the business to him. The year following following he married a lady whom he had loved, and to whom he had vowed fidelity before he went to England, but forgot his vows and flighted her, till he made this reparation. He fpeaks of this misconduct with regret. She was originally a Miss Read, already mentioned, but during the interval of his neglect, had been perfuaded to marry a man of the name of Rogers. This forced union had turned out very unhappy, and the was now a widow. He had at this time a profitable paper which he published, and was become printer to the houfe of allembly, he wrote occasionally with effect, on paper currency, and other political subjects. We find him afterwards fucceffively, clerk to the general affembly of Philadelphia, post-master, and a burgers in the general affembly for Philadelphia. This happened in 1747. In 1753, he was made deputy post-master general; and in 1757, came over to England as agent for the province of Pennfylvania. He had now for many years taken up philosophical enquiries, and purfued them with ardour; and by his difcoveries in electricity, and other branches of science, had gained fo much celebrity, that on his arrival in Europe, he had eafy accefs to the learned focieties of this and other countries, and received honours from our universities. He remained in England five years, and in 1762 returned to America, where he obtained rewards and honours from the province of Philadelphia, for his faithful and judicious In 1764, by the intrigues of the proprietaries, whom fervices. he had always opposed, he lost his feat in the affembly of Philadelphia, but was again appointed provincial agent, and returned to England.

The difcontents were now commencing, which in the end separated America from England : the affair of the stamp-act was in agitation, and the evidence given by Franklin at the bar of the houfe of commons, contributed not a little to its repeal. He then vifited Holland, Germany, and France; and remained in Europe till 1775, when finding that matters would not be accommodated between England and her colonies, he returned to America; having first strenuously endeavoured to perfuade the English ministry, as probably he thought just, to relinquish their demands upon that country. From this time Dr. Franklin bore a high political character. He was elected a member of congress, and when the question of independence was there agitated, was one of those who were strongly for it. He then went to France, negociated the alliance with that country, and finally acted as one of the plenipotentiaries for America, in figning the definitive treaty of peace with England in 1783. Towards the latter end of 1785, he returned to America, where he was highly honoured and efteemed, and did not finally retire from public business till two years before his death, which happened on April 17, 1790.

The

The life of Franklin was remarkable for its activity. By great industry in the business of a printer, and frequent exertions as a writer, he first rose to notice; his distinguished fuc-ceffes as a philosopher added greatly to his fame, and in the close of his life he was no less esteemed as an able politician. Societies of various kinds for public benefit were either planned or fupported by him, and when his country had occasion to form a government, he acted with ability as a legiflator. Eloquence he did not possesse either in speaking or writing, but was remarkable for a clear and fententious brevity, very efficacious in producing conviction. His works confift chiefly of fhort tracts and effays, written with a fimplicity and perspicuity very original. He professed to have formed his style upon that of Addifon, and it is certain that his writings possess many merits of a fimilar kind. Not many inftances can be found of individuals commencing from an origin fo obfcure, and rifing to fuch celebrity as he obtained. His character for integrity feems unimpeached; and if he supported measures which in this country are not univerfally approved, he acted according to what he judged right, as well as expedient. In conversation, his talents are faid to have borne the fame aspect as in other fituations; his words were not numerous, but they were pertinent; and though he could always command attention and refpect, he was not one of those who are courted for the pleasure of their society. He was, however, on the whole, a man of uncommon talents, and one whole name is as little likely to be forgotten as that of any man who has lived within the prefent century. The well-known punning epitaph, which he wrote for himfelf as a printer, is unworthy of the dignity of his character, and undoubtedly was not ufed, fince when he died his other more confpicuous employments had almost effaced the memory of his being of that profession.

FRANK-FLORIS. See FLORIS.

FRANTZIUS (WOLFGANG), a German Lutheran divine, born at Plawen in Voigtland, in 1564; was profeffor, first of history, and then of divinity at Wittemberg. He died there in 1620, at the age of 56. He published, 1. "Animalium Historia facra." 2. "Tractatus de Interpretatione Sacrarum Scripturarum," in 4to; and many other works, which are faid to be rather compilations than compositions.

FREDEGARIUS, called the fcholaftic, the earlieft French hiftorian except Gregory of Tours. By order of Childebrand, brother of Charles Martel, he wrote a chronicle, which extends as far as the year 641. His ftyle is barbarous, his arrangement defective, and his whole narrative too concife and rapid, but he is the only original hiftorian of a part of that period. His chronicle is to be found in the collection of French hiftorians, publifhed by Duchefne and Bouquet.

FREDERIC II. firnamed the Great; the third king of Prussia, fon of Frederic William I. was born Jan. 24, 1712, and educated in fome meafure in adverfity; for when he began to grow up, and discovered talents for poetry, music, and the fine arts in general, his father, fearing left this tafte should feduce him from studies more necessary to him as a king, opposed his inclinations, and treated him with confiderable harfhnefs. In 1730, when the prince was eighteen, this difagreement broke out; he endeavoured to escape, was discovered and thrown into prifon, Kar, a young officer who was to have attended his flight, being executed before his eyes. His marriage in 1733, with the princefs of Brunfwick Wolfenbuttel, reftored at least apparent harmony in the family. But in his forced retirement, · young Frederic had eagerly cultivated his favourite fciences, which continued to divert his cares in the most stormy and anxious periods of his life. He afcended the throne in May, -1740, and almost immediately displayed his ambitious and military dispositions, by demanding Silesia from Maria Therefa, heires of the emperor Charles VI. in his Auftrian and Hungarian dominions; and purfuing his claim by force of arms. The emperor died October 20, 1740, and Lower Silesia had fubmitted to Frederic in November, 1741. France stepped forward to support his pretensions; but in June 1742, he had signed a treaty at Breflaw, with the queen of Hungary, which left him in possession of Silefia and the county of Glatz. In the spring of 1744, either suspecting that the treaty of Breslaw would be broken, or moved again by ambition, he took arms under pretence of supporting the election of the emperor Charles VII. and declared war against Maria Therefa, who refused to acknowledge that prince. The war was continued with various fuccefs, but on the whole very glorioufly for Frederic, till the latter end of the year 1745. It was concluded by a treaty figned at Drefden on Christmas day, by which the court of Vienna left him in possession of Upper and Lower Silefia (excepting fome districts, and the whole county of Glatz) on condition that he should acknowledge Francis I. of Lorraine as emperor.

In 1755, the contest between England and France, concerning their American possession, led those powers to seek allies. England made alliance with Prussia, and France with Austria. The boldness and decision of Frederick's character were now remarkably displayed. Suspecting a design against him among the continental powers, and having even gained intelligence of a secret treaty, in which the king of Poland, elector of Saxony, was concerned, he published a strong manifesto, and marched at once, with a powerful army into Saxony. But the states of the empire, not fatisfied with the reasons he alledged, declared Vol. VI.

war against him, as a disturber of the public peace. In 1757, he found himfelf obliged to contend at once with Ruffia, the German empire, the house of Austria, Saxony, Sweden, and The numerous armies of his enemies overran his France. whole dominions; yet his activity and courage were ready in every quarter to give them battle. He was defeated by the Ruffians, had gained a battle against the Austrians, and had lost another in Bohemia, by the 18th of June, 1757. But on the 5th of November the fame year, he met the Austrians and the French at Rofbach, on the frontiers of Saxony, and repaired his former losses by a fignal victory. His genius had invented a new species of military exercise, and his enemies probably owed their defeat to their imperfect attempts to imitate what his foldiers had completely learned. Within a month he had gained another victory over the Austrians near Breslaw, in consequence of which he took that city, with 15,000 prisoners, and reco-Throughout the war, with an ability almost vered all Silefia. incredible, he gained fo many advantages, and recovered with fuch promptitude the loss he fustained, that the prodigious force combined against him was rendered ineffectual. Peace was at length concluded, Feb. 15, 1763, when the possession of Silefia was confirmed to him, and he, on his part, promifed his fuffrage to the election of Joseph, son of the emperor, as king of the Romans. This was the most splendid military period of his life.

The year 1772 was remarkable for giving a proof of the infecurity of a fmall country fituated between powerful neighbours, in the feizure of confiderable territories belonging to Poland, of which the king of Pruffia had his fhare, with Auftria and Ruffia. The remainder of his reign, with very little exception, was devoted to the arts of peace; and his attention was diligently employed to give his fubjects every advantage, confiftent with a defpotic government, of juft laws, improving commerce, and the cultivation of the arts. Whatever were his errors in opinion, or his offences against other powers, he fought and obtained the attachment of his fubjects, by exemplary beneficence, and many truly royal virtues. He died August 17, 1786, in the 75th year of his age.

Frederic, like Cæfar, united the talents of a writer with thofe of a warrior. He wrote in French, and was a tolerable poet; but his abilities are more difplayed in history. His poem on the art of war is, however, valuable, both from his deep knowledge of the fubject, and the traits of genius it-difplays. His works compose altogether nineteen volumes, 8vo. His poetical compositions which, excepting his poem on the Art of War, confift chiefly of Odes and Epistles, passed through many editions, under the title of "Oeuvres meleés du Philosophe de Sans Souci."

Souci." But all the works published in his life, both in profe and verse, were collected in four vols. 8vo, in 1790, under the title of " Oeuvres primitives de Frederic II, Roi de Prusse, ou collection des ouvrages qu'il publia pendant fon regne." Of this publication, the first volume contains his " Anti-Machiavel; Military inftructions for the general of his army; and his correspondence with M. de la Motte Fouquet." The second, his "Memoirs of the House of Brandenburgh." In the third volume are his poems; and in the fourth, a variety of pieces in profe, philosophical, moral, historical, critical, and literary; particularly, "Reflections on the military talents and character of Charles XII, king of Sweden; a difcourfe on War; Letters on Education, and on the Love of our Country; and a difcourfe on German Literature." His posthumous works had been published still earlier. They appeared at Berlin in 1788, in 15 vols. 8vo. The two first of these contain, the "History of his own Time, to the year 1745." The third and fourth, his "Hiftory of the feven years War." The fifth contains, "Memoirs from the Peace of Hubertsbourg in 1763, to the partition of Poland in 1775." The fixth is filled with miscellaneous matter, particularly " Confiderations on the present State of the political Powers of Europe," and " an Essay on Forms of Government, and on the Duties of Sovereigns." The feventh and eighth volumes contain poetical pieces, and fome letters to Jordan and Voltaire. The remaining feven volumes continue his correfpondence, including letters to and from Fontenelle, Rollin, Voltaire, D'Argens, D'Alembert, Condorcet, and others. Of these productions many are valuable, more especially his " History of his own Times," where, however, he is more impartial in his accounts of his campaigns, than in affigning the motives for his wars, or estimating the merits of his antagonists.

His " Memoirs of the Houfe of Brandenburg," are diftinguished by his correctness in facts, the liveliness of his portraits, the justness of his reflections, and the vigour of his style. The " Frederician Code," difplays him in the light of an able legiflator, copying the Roman law, but adapting it with skill to the nature and circumstances of his own dominions. In his lighter productions he was an imitator of Voltaire, whose friendship he long cultivated, and whofe irreligious opinions unhappily he too completely imbibed. The activity of his mind was eafily difcerned in the vivacity of his eyes and countenance : and he was one of those extraordinary men who by an adroit and regular partition of their time, accompanied with ftrong fpirits and perfeverance, can purfue a variety of occupations which common mortals must contemplate with astonishment. Had he not been a king, he would in any fituation have been a very diffinguished man : being a king, he displayed those talents which usually re-T 2 quire quire the retirement of private life for their cultivation, in a degree of excellence which his fituation and mode of life rendered not lefs extraordinary than those qualities which he possessed in the highest perfection.

As all particulars respecting a man fo eminent are obrects of attention, we shall subjoin the account of his habitual mode of life, as it is given by the best authorities. His drefs was plain in the extreme, and always military; a few minutes early in the morning ferved him to arrange it, and it was never altered in the day; boots always made a part of it. Every moment, from five o'clock in the morning to ten at night, had its regular allotment. His first employment when he arose, was to peruse all the papers that were addressed to him from all parts of his dominions, the lowest of his subjects being allowed to write to him, and certain of an anfwer. Every propofal was to be made, and every favour to be afked in writing; and a fingle word written with a pencil in the margin, informed his fecretaries what answer to return. This expeditious method, excluding all verbal difcuffion, faved abundance of time, and enabled the king fo well to weigh his favours, that he was feldom deceived by his ministers, and feldom affented or denied improperly. About eleven o'clock, the king appeared in his garden, and reviewed his regiment of guards; which was done at the fame hour by all the colonels in his provinces. At twelve precifely, he dined; and ufually invited eight or nine officers. At table, he discarded all etiquette, in hopes of making conversation free and equal: but, though his own bon-mots and livelinefs offered all the encouragement in his power, this is an advantage that an absolute monarch cannot eafily obtain. Two hours after dinner Frederic retired to his study, where he amufed himself in composing verse or prose, or in the cultivation of fome branch of literature. At feven commenced a private concert, in which he played upon the flute, with the skill of a professor; and frequently had pieces rehearfed which he had composed himfelf. The concert was followed by a fupper, to which few were admitted except literary men and philosophers; and the topics of conversation were fuited to fuch a party. As he facrificed many of his own gratifications to the duties of royalty, he exacted a fevere account from officers, and all who held any places under him. But in many things he was indulgent, and particularly held all calumny in fo much contempt, that he fuffered the most fourrilous writers to vent their malice with impunity. " It is my bufinefs," faid he, " to do the duties of my station, and to let malevolence fay what it will."

pofed, and he was banished to Tregui, but the time of his death is unknown. He wrote, 1. An Italian work in nine books on memorable actions, like Valerius Maximus; which has been published only in the Latin translation of Camillo Ghillini. 2. "The Life of Pope Martin V." 3. "A Latin Treatife on learned Ladies." 4. "An Italian Treatife against Love." He is faid to have made writing the amufement of his exile, and to have composed most of his books at that time.

FREHER (MARQUARD), a learned German, was descended from a noble family, and born at Augsburg in 1565. He went into France very young [H], to study the civil law under Cujacius; yet paid fo much attention to history and criticifm, that he became eminent in both. When he was fcarcely three and twenty, he was chosen among the counfellors of Casimir prince of Palatine, and the year after made professor of law at Heidelberg; where he lived in friendship with Leunclavius, Sylburgius, Opfopæus, the younger Douza, and other learned men of his time. Some little time after, he refigned his professor's chair, and was taken into the most important employments by the elector Frederic IV. This prince made him vice-prefident of his court, and fent him in quality of ambaffador to feveral places. In the midft of these occupations, he never intermitted his usual method of studying; and wrote a great many works upon criticism, law, and history, the history of his own country in particular. When we view the catalogue of them given by Melchior Adam, we are ready to imagine, that he must have lived a very long life, and hardly have done any thing but write books; yet he died in his 49th year [1]. Douza fays, that he feems to have been born for the advancement of polite literature : and Thuanus acknowledges, that it would be difficult to find his equal in all Germany. Cafaubon calls him a man of profound and universal knowledge; and Scioppius fays, that he joined great acuteness to an incredible depth of learning. Add to this, that he was perfectly skilled in coins, medals, statues, antiques of all forts, and could paint very well. His moral qualities are defcribed as not inferior to his intellectual; fo that Melchior Adam feems justly to have lamented, that a man, who deferved fo much to be immortal, should have died fo foon.

FREIGIUS (JOHN THOMAS), a German, who acquired great reputation by his learned labours, was born at Friburg in the 16th century; his father being a hufbandman, who lived near Bafil. He studied the law in his native country under Zasius, and had likewise Henry Glarean and Peter Ramus for his masters. He was strongly attached to the principles and method of Ramus. He first taught at Friburg, and asterwards at Bafil; but, finding himfelf not favoured by fortune, he was going to difengage himfelf from the republic of letters, and to turn peafant. While he was meditating upon this plan, the fenate of Nuremberg, at the defire of Jerom Wolfius, offered him the rectorship of the New College at Altorf; of which place he took possession in November, 1575. He discharged the duties of it with great zeal, explaining the historians, poets, Justinian's institutes, &c. He returned to Basil, and died there of the plague in 1583; which diforder had a little before deprived him of a very promifing fon and two daughters. One of the latter was, it seems, a very extraordinary girl; for, as he tells us in the dedication to his Elegies, or Liber Triftium, " though fcarce twelve years old, the had yet made fuch a progrets in the Latin and Greek grammars, and the rudiments of other fciences, that fhe could translate out of her mother tongue into Latin, decline and conjugate Greek, repeat the Lord's Prayer in Hebrew, and fcan verses: she understood addition and subtraction in arithmetic, could fing by note, and play on the lute." And left his reader should conclude from hence, that she had none of those qualities which make her fex useful as well as accomplished, he calls her in the fame place " Oeconomiæ meæ fidelem adminiftram et difpenfatricem," that is, a very notable houfewise.

Freigius published a great number of books; among the rest, "Quæstiones Geometricæ et Stereometricæ:" a supplement to the history of Paulus Æmilius and Ferron, as far as the year 1596. "Logica Confultorum:" a Latin translation of Frobisser's voyages, and of the African wars, in which Don Sebastian, king of Portugal, lost his life. "Ciceronis Orationes perpetuis notis Logicis, Arithmeticis, Ethicis, Politicis, Historicis, illustratæ," 3 vols. 8vo, at Basil, 1583.

FREIND (JOHN), an English physician, and elegant writer, was born in 1675, at Croton in Northamptonshire, of which parish his father, William Freind, a man of great learning, piety, and integrity, was rector. He was fent to Westminsterschool, with his brother Robert, and put under the care of the celebrated Dr. Busby. He was thence elected to Christ-church, Oxford, in 1690, over which Dr. Aldrich at that time presided; and under his auspices undertook, in conjunction with another young man, to publish an edition of Æschines, and Demosthenes, "de Corona," which was well received, and has fince been reprinted. About the fame time he was prevailed upon to revise the Delphin edition of Ovid's Metamorphose, that it might be reprinted, in 8vo, at Oxford.

Hitherto he had been employed in reading the poets, orators, and hiftorians of antiquity, by which he had made himfelf a perfect mafter in the Greek language, and had acquired a great facility of writing elegant Latin, in verfe as well as profe. He now began began to apply himfelf to physic; and his first care, as we are told, was to digeft thoroughly the true and rational principles of natural philosophy, chemistry, and anatomy, to which he added a sufficient acquaintance with the mathematics. The first public specimen that he gave of his abilities in the way of his profession, was in 1669, when he wrote a letter to Dr. (afterwards fir) Hans Sloane, concerning an Hydrocephalus, or Watery Head; and, in 1701, another letter in Latin to the fame gentleman, " De Spasmi rarioris Historia," or concerning some extraordinary cases of perfons afflicted with convulsions in Oxfordshire, which at that time made a very great noife, and might probably have been magnified into fomething fupernatural, if our author had not taken great pains to set them in a true light. It seems a little strange that these letters should not have been thought worthy of a place in the collection of his medical works; they may be found, however, in the " Philosophical Transactions," the former being No. 256, for September, 1699, the latter No. 270, for March and April, 1701.

Being now well known and diftinguished, Freind began to meditate larger works. He observed, that Sanctorius, Borelli, and Baglivi, in Italy, and Pitcairne and Keil here at home, had introduced a new and more certain method of enquiring after medical truths, than had been formerly known; and he refolved to apply this way of reafoning, in order to fet a certain fubject of great importance, of daily use, and general concern, about which the learned have always been divided, in fuch a light as might put an end to disputes. This he did by publishing, in 1703, " Emmenologia: in qua fluxus muliebris menstrui phænomena, periodi, vitia, cum medendi methodo, ad rationes mechanicas exiguntur," 8vo. This work, though at first it met some opposition, and was then and afterwards animadverted upon by feveral writers, has always been reckoned an excellent performance; and is, as all our author's writings are, admirable for the beauty of its style, the elegant disposition of its parts, its wonderful fuccincenefs, and at the fame time perfpicuity, and for the happy concurrence of learning and penetration visible through the whole.

In 1704, he was chosen professor of chemistry at Oxford; and, the year after, attended the earl of Peterborough in his Spanish expedition, as physician to the army there, in which post he continued near two years. From thence he made the tour of Italy, and went to Rome, as well for the fake of feeing the antiquities of that city, as for the pleasure of visiting and conversing with Baglivi and Lanciss, men eminent at that time for their skill in physic. On his return to England in 1707, he found the character of his patron very rudely treated; and, from a spirit of gratitude, published a defence of him, entitled, "An T 4 Account of the Earl of Peterborough's conduct in Spain, chiefly fince the raifing the Siege of Barcelona, 1706;" to which is added, "The Campaign of Valencia. With Original Papers, 1707," 8vo. This piece, relating to party-matters, made a great noife, fome loudly commending, others as loudly condemning it; fo that a third edition of it was published in 1708.

In 1707, he was created doctor of physic by diploma. In 1709, he published his "Prælectiones Chymicæ: in quibus omnes fere operationes Chymicæ ad vera principia et ipfius Naturæ leges rediguntur; anno 1704, Oxonii, in Muszo Ashmoleano habitæ." These lectures are dedicated to fir Isac Newton, and are nine in number, befides three tables. They were attacked by the German philosophers, who were greatly alarmed at the new principles; and, therefore, the authors of "Acta Eruditorum," in 1710, prefixed to their account of them a cenfure, in which they treated the principles of the Newtonian philofophy as figments, and the method of arguing made use of in these lectures as absurd; because, in their opinion, it tended to recal Occult Qualities in Philosophy. To this groundless charge an anfwer was given by Freind, which was published in Latin, in the " Philosophical Transactions [K], and added, by way of appendix, to the fecond edition of the "Prælectiones Chymicæ." Both the anfwer and the book have been translated, and printed together in English.

In 1711, Dr. Freind was elected a member of the Royal Society, and the fame year attended the duke of Ormond into Elanders, as his phyfician. He refided mostly after his return, at London, and gave himfelf up wholly to the cares of his profession. In 1716, he was chosen a fellow of the College of Phyficians; and the fame year published the first and third books of " Hippocrates de morbis popularibus," to which he added, a Commentary upon Fevers, divided into nine fhort differtations. This work was attacked by Dr. Woodward, professor of physic in Gresham-college, in his "State of Physic and of Diseas, with an enquiry into the causes of the late increase of them, but more particularly of the Small-pox, &c. 1718," 8vo: and here was laid the foundation of a difpute, which was carried on with great acrimony and violence on both fides. Parties were formed under these leaders, and several pamphlets were written. Freind fupported his opinion, " Concerning the advantage of purging in the fecond fever of the confluent kind of Small-pox;" (for it was on this fingle point that the difpute chiefly turned:) in a Latin letter addressed to Dr. Mead in 1719, and fince printed among his works. He was likewife fuppofed to be the author of a pamphlet, entitled, " A Letter to the learned Dr.

[x] Nº 331, for July, August, September, 1711.

Woodward

Woodward, by Dr. Byfield," in 1719, wherein Woodward is rallied with great spirit and addrefs; for Freind made no ferious answer to Woodward's book, but contented himself with ridiculing his antagonift under the name of a celebrated empyric. In 1717, he read the Gulftonian lecture in the College of Phyficians; and, in 1720, fpoke the Harveian oration, which was afterwards published. In 1722, he was elected into parliament for Launceston in Cornwall; and acting in his station as a fenator with that warmth and freedom which was natural to him, he diftinguished himself by some able speeches against measures which he difapproved. He was supposed to have a hand in Atterbury's plot, as it was then called; and this drew upon him fo much refentment, that the Habeas Corpus act being at that time fuspended, he was, March 15, 1722-3, committed to the Tower. He continued a prisoner there till June 21, when he was admitted to bail, his fureties being Dr. Mead, Dr. Hulfe, Dr. Levet, and Dr. Hale; and afterwards, in November, was difcharged from his recognizance.

The leifure afforded him by this confinement was not fo much diffurbed by uneafy thoughts and apprehenfions, but that he could employ himfelf in a manner fuitable to his abilities and profeffion; and accordingly he wrote another letter in Latin to Dr. Mead, "Concerning fome particular kind of Smallpox." Here, alfo, he laid the plan of his laft and most elaborate work, the hiftory of Physic; the title of which runs thus: "The Hiftory of Physic, from the time of Galen to the beginning of the fixteenth century, chiefly with regard to practice: in a difcourfe written to Dr. Mead." The first part was published in 1725, the fecond, the year following. This work, though justly deemed a masterly performance, both for use and elegance, did not escape censure; but was animadverted upon both at home and abroad.

Soon after he obtained his liberty, he was made phyfician to the prince of Wales; and, on that prince's accellion to the throne, became phyfician to the queen, who honoured him with a fhare of her confidence and efteem. He did not, however, long enjoy this place; but died of a fever, July 26, 1728, in his 52d year. Their majefties expressed the utmost concern at his death, and fettled a pension upon his widow. He left one fon, who was educated 'at Westminster-school, and became afterwards a student at Christ-church in Oxford. He was buried at Hitcham in Buckinghamssifter, near which he had a feat; but there is a monument erected to him in Westminster-abbey [L], with a suitable infeription. He had himssifter rendered the like kind office to more than one of his friends, being peculiarly happy in this fort of composition; for the infeription on the monument of Sprat, bishop of Rochester, was from his pen. That on Philips, which had been aferibed to him, is fince afeertained to be by Atterbury [M]. Dr. Wigan published his Latin works together at London, in 1733, in folio, adding to them, a translation of his "History of Physic" into the fame language, with an excellent historical preface; and to the whole is prefixed, an elegant dedication to his royal patroness the late queen, by his brother Dr. Robert Freind. His works were reprinted at Paris in 1735, 4to.

The family was further diffinguished by means of Dr. Robert Freind, brother to the physician, who was a man of learning, and head master of Westminster-school; and Dr. William Freind, fon of Robert, who was dean of Canterbury.

FREINSHEMIUS (JOHN), a most ingenious and learned man, was born at Ulm in Suabia, in 1608. He is faid to have understood almost all the European languages, besides Latin, Greek, and Hebrew. He was professor of eloquence at Upfal, librarian and hiftoriographer to Chriftina of Sweden, and afterwards professor at Heidelberg, where he died in 1660. He rendered many fervices to the republic of letters, and first by his critique upon Florus, whom he corrected and explained very happily. The learned Bernegger, whole daughter he had married, engaged him in this work; and was afterwards furprifed at the great penetration and judgement which Freinsheim had shewn in difcovering what had escaped all the learned before him. His notes have been printed entire in the best editions of this author. So have his notes upon Tacitus; which, though fhort, are very judicious, relating to fuch particulars as Lipfius and the other critics either knew not or omitted.

But the works by which he has been most diftinguisted, are his famous supplements to Quintus Curtius and Livy. There was a supplement, indeed, to Quintus Curtius before; but as that was nothing more than a miferable compilation from Justin and Arrian, without either judgement or order, Freinscheim thought it expedient to draw up a new one. For this purpose, he confulted every author, Greek and Latin, ancient and modern, which could be of the least use, and executed his task fo much to the approbation and fatisfaction of the public, that they almost ceased to deplore the loss of the two first books of this entertaining historian. Some, however, have still more admired his supplement to Livy, which is composed with equal judgement and learning, and must have been a Herculean labour. Le Clerc has printed this supplement, with his edition of Livy at Amsterdam, 1710. He declares the whole to be very ingenious and learned, but thinks that there is most purity and elegance in the first ten books of it; some speeches in which are incomparable. The fact is, that these ten books were published in the author's life-time; the other ninety-five, after his death. Besides what has been mentioned above, Freinschemius wrote notes upon Phædrus, and other philological performances.

FREIRE DE ANDRADA (HYACINTHE), an elegant Portuguese writer in prose and verse, was born in 1597, at Beja in Portugal, and became abbé of St. Mary de Chans. He appeared at first with some distinction at the court of Spain, but his attachment to the houfe of Braganza impeded his advancement. In 1640, when John IV. was proclaimed king of Portugal, he went to his court, and was well received. Yet it was found difficult to advance him, for he was of too light and carelefs a character to be employed in diplomatic bufinefs; and though the king would have gone fo far as to make him bifhop of Visieu, this dignity he had the wildom to refuse, wellknowing that the pope who did not acknowledge his mafter as king, would never confirm his appointment as bishop. He did not choofe, he faid, merely to perfonate a bishop, like an actor on a stage. He died at Lisbon in 1657. Notwithstanding the levity of his character, he had a generous heart, and was a firm and active friend. He wrote with much fuccess; his " Life of Don Juan de Castro," is esteemed one of the best written books in the Portuguese language. It was published in folio, and was translated into Latin by Rotto, an Italian jesuit. He wrote also a finall number of poems in the fame language, which have confiderable elegance.

FREMINET (MARTIN), a celebrated French painter; was born at Paris in 1567. When he was studying at Rome, the fuffrages of that place were divided between Michael Angelo Caravaggio, and Joseph of Arpino, called Giuseppino: and he succeeded in imitating the excellencies of both. He was a great master of design, and of the sciences connected with his art, perspective and architecture; but there is a boldness in his manner, approaching to hardness, which is not always approved. Henry IV. however, appointed him his chief painter, and Louis XIII. honoured him with the order of St. Michael. He painted the cieling in the chapel at Fontainbleau, and died at Paris in 1619, at the age of 52.

FRERET (NICOLAS), an author of profound learning and confiderable abilities, was born at Paris in 1688. He was bred nominally to the law, but his inclinations and talents not being fuited to that profession, he gave himfelf, from an early period, to his favourite studies of chronology and history. At twentyfive he was admitted into the Academy of Inscriptions, where he produced at the fame time, "A Discourse on the Origin of the French." This treatife, at once bold and learned, added to fome indifcreet converfations, obtained him the honour of the Baftille. In his confinement, he could obtain no book but the dictionary of Bayle, which he confequently read fo earneftly as almost to learn it by heart. He imbibed, at the fame time, no fmall portion of the fcepticist of Bayle; which fome of his writings afterwards evinced. These were, I. "Letters of Thrafybulus to Leucippe," in which atheism is reduced to a fyftem. 2. "Examination of the Apologists for Christianity," a posthumous work (not published till 1767), no less obnoxious than the other. Besides these, his principal productions were, 3. Several very learned memoirs in the volumes of the academy, to which his name is prefixed; and a few light publications of no confequence. He died in 1749, in his 61st year.

FRE'RON (ELIE CATHERINE), a French journalist, generally known for having been the conftant object of the fatire of Voltaire, was born at Quimper, in 1719. His talents were confiderable, and he cultivated them in the fociety of the Jefuits, under fathers Biumoy and Bougeant. In 1739, on some difgust, he quitted the Jesuits, and for a time affisted the abbé des Fontaines in his periodical publications. He then published feveral critical works on his own account, which were generally admired, but sometimes suppressed by authority. His " Letters on certain writings of the time," began to be published in 1749, and were extended, with fome interruptions, to 13 volumes. In 1754, he began his " Année Litéraire," and published in that year feven volumes of it; and afterwards, eight volumes every year, as long as he lived, which was till 1776. In this work, Fréron, who was a zealous enemy of the modern philosophy, attacked Voltaire with spirit. He represented him as a skilful plagiary; as a poet, brilliant, indeed, but inferior to Corneille, Racine, and Boileau; as an elegant, but inaccurate historian; and rather the tyrant than the king of literature. A great part of this Voltaire could bear with fortitude; but a very skilful and victorious attack upon a bad comedy, " La Femme qui a raifon," drove him beyond all bounds of patience; and henceforward his pen was constantly in motion against Fréron, whose very name at any time would put him in a rage.

Fréron, though very fkilful in his criticisms, and of uncommon abilities (as Voltaire himself confessed before he was irreconcileably provoked) fuffered by the perpetual hostilities of an antagonist fo high in reputation. His "Année Littéraire," being constantly accused by Voltaire of partiality, began to be suffected, and the fale latterly decreased. In foreign countries few suppose him to have been a man of any merit. He is the hero of Voltaire's Dunciad, and nothing more is known about him. He was, in truth, a man of great natural genius and livelines, livelinefs, with a correct tafte, acute powers of difcrimination, and a peculiar talent of entertaining his reader, while he pointed out the faults of a work. He had an active zeal against falfe philosophy, innovation, and affectation, and was steadily attached to what he confidered as found principles. In private life he was easy and entertaining. Such were the real talents of this formidable journalist. It must be owned also, that he had his partialities; that he was fometimes too precipitate in his judgements, and too fevere in his censures. Too strong a refentment of injustice fometimes rendered him unjust. His language also was fometimes over refined, though always perfectly pure. He died in March, 1776, at the age of 57.

Besides his periodical publications, Fréron left feveral works. 1. "Miscellanies," in three volumes: comprising feveral poems, to which it has only been objected that they are rather overpolissed. 2. "Les Vrais Plaisers;" or the loves of Venus and Adonis; elegantly translated from Marino. 3. Part of a translation of Lucretius. He also superintended and retouched Beaumelle's critical commentary on the Henriade, and affisted in feveral literary works.

FRESNAYE (JOHN VAUQUELIN DE LA), an early poet of France, the first who wrote satires in that language, and an Art of Poetry. He was bred a lawyer, and became the king's advocate for the bailliage of Caen, and afterwards lieutenant-general and prefident of that city. He died at the age of 72, in the year 1606. He wrote 1. " Satires," which though efteemed less strong than those of Regnier, and less witty than those of Boileau, have truth and nature, and contain fome fimple narratives, the style of which has fomething pleafing. 2. " The Art of Poetry." Copious specimens of this performance may be feen in the notes of St. Marc, on Boileau's art of poetry. It has confiderable merit, but a merit which has been superseded by later efforts. 3. Two books of Idyllia, and three of epigrams, epitaphs, and fonnets. 4. A poem on the monarchy. All these were collected by himself in an edition of poems, published at Caen in 1605.

FRESNE (CHARLES DU CANGE DU), a learned Frenchman, was defcended from a good family, and born at Amiens in 1610. After being taught polite literature in the Jefuits-college there, he went to fludy the law at Orleans, and was fworn advocate to the parliament of Paris in 1631. He practifed fome time at the bar, but without intending to make it the bufinefs of his life. He then returned to Amiens, where he devoted himfelf to fludy, and ran through all forts of learning; languages and philofophy, law, phyfic, divinity, and hiftory. In 1668, he went and fettled at Paris; and foon after a propofal was laid before Colbert, to collect all the authors, who at different times had written the hiftory hiftory of France, and to form a body out of them. This mis nister liking the proposal, and believing Du Fresne the best qualified for the undertaking, furnished him with memoirs and manufcripts for this purpole. Du Fresne wrought upon these materials, and drew up a large preface, containing the names of the authors, their character and manner, the time in which they lived, and the order in which they ought to be arranged. Being informed from the minister that his plan was not approved, and that he must adopt another, and convinced that if he followed the order prefcribed the whole work would be fpoiled, he frankly told his employers, that fince he had not been happy enough to pleafe those in authority, his advice was, that they should look out fome of the best hands in the kingdom; and at the fame time he returned them all their memoirs. Being thus disengaged from a tedious and laborious undertaking, he finished his Glossary of low Latin, or, "Glossarium Mediæ et infimæ Latinitatis," which was received with general commendation; and though Hadrian Valefius, in his preface to the Valefiana, notes feveral mistakes in it, it is nevertheless a very excellent and useful work. It was afterwards enlarged by the addition of more volumes; and the edition of Paris, by Carpentier, in 1733, makes no less than fix in folio; to which Carpentier afterwards added four of fupplement. Both have been fince excellently abridged, confolidated, and improved, in fix volumes 8vo. published at Halle 1772-1784. His next performance was a "Greek Gloffary of the middle age," confifting of curious paffages and remarks, most of which are drawn from manuscripts very little known. This work is in two volumes, folio. He was the author and editor alfo of feveral other performances. He drew a genealogical map of the kings of France. He wrote the hiftory of Conftantinople under the French emperors, which was printed at the Louvre, and dedicated to the king. He published an historical tract concerning John Baptist's head, some relics of which are supposed to be at Amiens. He published, lastly, editions of Cinnamus, Nicephorus, Anna Commena, Zonaras, and the Alexandrian Chronicon, with learned differtations and notes.

Du Cange, as he is more commonly called, died in 1688, aged 78; and left four children, on whom Louis XIV. fettled good penfions, in confideration of their father's merit.

FRESNOY (CHARLES ALPHONSE DU), a celebrated poet and painter, was the fon of an apothecary at Paris, and born there in 1611. His father educated him as a fcholar, with a defign to make him a phyfician; and his progrefs in learning was fuch, that it was fuppofed he would anfwer all the expectations conceived of him. At length, he difcovered a most violent attachment to the Muses, and would undoubtedly have been a great poet, if the art of painting, a mistrefs equally beloved, had had not divided, and thus weakened his affections, or talent. And now, all thoughts of phyfic being laid afide, he gave himfelf up entirely to the folicitations of his genius, and made the art of painting his fludy. He was about twenty years of age, when he learned to defign under Perrier and Vouet; and in 1634 he went to Rome, where he contracted a friendship with Mignard, which proved as lasting as his life. It is faid, that when Frefnoy first came to Rome, he was under great difficulties, fo as fcarcely to know how to get bread; for, having displeased his parents, by neglecting the profession they had chosen for him, he had no supplies from them, and what he carried with him was foon spent. However, he bore all with patience, comforting himself with the opportunities he had of improving in painting, which he continued with ardor, till Mignard came, and then he fared better.

He had not a foul that could be fatisfied with a fuperficial knowledge of his art : he made himfelf familiar with the Greek and Latin poets; studied anatomy, and the elements of geometry, with the rules of perspective and architecture; defigned after the life, in the academy; after Raphael, in the Vatican; and after the antiques, wherever he found them; and, making critical remarks as he proceeded, he drew up a body of them in Latin verse, and laid the plan of his poem, "De Arte Graphica." In conformity to the principles therein established, he endeavoured to put his own thoughts in execution; but as he never had been well instructed in the management of his pencil, his hand was extremely flow, and he feemed to do what he performed with pain. Befides, having employed most of his time in a profound attention to the theory of painting, he had very little left for the practical part; fo little, that his performances do not exceed fifty historical pieces, exclusively of his copies after others. He painted the remains of ancient architecture in and about Rome; but fold his pictures to fupply the wants of the moment, and fo cheap that he might be faid to give them away.

His poem was the fruit of more than twenty years of fludy and labour. He communicated it to the masters of greatest note, in all places where he went; and particularly to Albani and Guercino, at Bologna. He confulted also the men of letters, and the best authors on painting, as well as the works of the most celebrated professors of the art, before he confidered it as Upon his return home from Italy in 1656, he feemed finished. inclined to give it to the public; but imagining that it would be of little use without a French version, and, by means of his long absence, not retaining enough of his native tongue to undertake it himfelf, he laid afide for a time all thoughts of publishing it. At length, De Piles, who was intimately acquainted with him, made a profe translation of it; and, as he tells us in his preface, " according to the true fense of the author, and to his liking." Freinoy Frefnoy yet deferred to publish it, intending to illustrate it with a commentary; but was prevented by a paralysis, of which he died in 1665, aged 53 years.

After his death, his poem was printed, with the profe tranflation and notes by De Piles, and dedicated to Colbert. It was afterwards tranflated into Englifh by Dryden, who prefixed to it an original "Preface, containing a parallel between Painting and Poetry." Richard Graham, efq. republifhed this work, and added to it, "A fhort account of the most eminent Painters, both ancient and modern." It has fince had the honour of being translated by Mr. Mason in blank verse, with excellent notes by that author; and, though a wretched poem, certainly contains a good collection of precepts.

Frefnoy had a particular veneration for Titian, whom of all painters he looked upon as the most perfect imitator of nature; and is faid to have imitated him with some success. He followed him in his manner of colouring; as he did the Carraccis in their style of defign.

FRESNY (CHARLES RIVIERE DU), a French poet, chiefly celebrated for his dramatic writings, was born at Paris in 1648. He had a good natural tafte for mufic, painting, fculpture, architecture, and all the fine arts. He had, alfo, a tafte for laying out gardens, and this procured him the place of overfeer of gardens to the king, which he fold for a moderate fum, as a fupply to his extravagance, which was unbounded. He was valet-dechambre to Louis XIV. and highly in favour with him; but his love of expence outwent even the bounty of his master. " There are two men," faid Louis, " whom I shall never enrich, Frefny and Bontems." Thefe were his two valets-de-chambre, who were well matched in extravagance. At length Frefny fold all his appointments at court, and flew from the constraint of Versailles to the liberty of Paris, where he became a writer for the stage. He is the perfon who is humoroufly reprefented by Le Sage, in his " Diable Boiteux," as marrying his laundrefs by way of paying her bill. He was twice married, and both times, it is faid, in a fimilar way. He wrote many dramatic pieces, fome of which were long established on the stage. These were, " La Reconciliation Normande, Le Double Voyage, La Coquette de Village, Le Marriage rompu, L'Esprit de Contradiction, Le Dedit." He was also the author of cantatas; which he fet to music himself; feveral songs, some of which were famous; a little work, often reprinted, called, " Les Amúfements ferieux et comiques ;" and " Nouvelles Hiftoriques ;" all enlivened by a fingular and gay fancy. He died, aged 76, in 1724. D'Alembert has drawn a parallel between Deftouches and him as comic writers. His works were collected in 6 volumes, duodecimo.

FRISCHLIN (NICODEMUS), a léarned German, famous for criticism and poetry, was born at Baling in Suabia, in 1547. His

His father, being a minister and a man of letters, taught him the rudiments of learning, and then fent him to Tubingen. Here he made fo amazing a progrefs in the Greek and Latin tongues, that he is faid to have written poetry in both, when he was no more than thirteen years of age. He continued to improve himfelf in compositions of feveral kinds, as well profe as verse; and at twenty years old was made a professor in the uni-versity of Tubingen. Though his turn lay principally towards poetry, infomuch that, as Melchior Adam tells us, he really could make verses as fast as he wanted them, yet he was acquainted with every part of fcience and learning. He used to moderate in philosophical disputes; to read public lectures in mathematics and altronomy, before he had reached his twentyfifth year. In 1579, his reputation being much extended, he had a mind to try his fortune abroad, and, therefore, prepared to go to the ancient university of Friburg, where he had promifed to read lectures.' But he was obliged to defift from this purpose, partly because his wife refused to accompany him, and partly because the duke of Wirtemberg would not confent to his going thither, or any where elfe.

Hitherto Frischlin had been prosperous; but now an affair happened, which laid the foundation of troubles, that did not end but with his life. In 1580, he published an oration in praise of a country life, with a paraphrafe upon Virgil's Eclogues and Georgics. Here he compared the lives of modern courtiers with those of ancient husbandmen; and noting some pretty feverely, who had degenerated from the virtue and fimplicity of their anceftors, made himfelf fo obnoxious, that even his life was in danger. He made many public apologies for himfelf; his prince even interceded for him, but all would not do; nor could he continue fafe any longer at home. With his prince's leave, therefore, he went to Laubach, a town of Carniola in the remote part of Germany, and kept a school there; but the air not agreeing with his wife and children, he returned in about two years to his own country. He met with a very ungracious reception; and therefore after staying a little while, he went to Francfort, from Francfort into Saxony, and from thence to Brunfwick, where he became a schoolmaster again. There he did not continue long, but paffed from place to place, till at length, being reduced to neceffity, he applied to the prince of Wirtemberg for relief. His application was difregarded; which he supposing to proceed from the malice of his enemies, let himfelf loofe, and wrote feverely against them. He was imprisoned at last in Wirtemberg-castle; whence attempting to escape by ropes not strong enough to support him, he fell down a prodigious precipice, and was dathed to pieces among the rocks.

His

His death happened in 1590, and was univerfally and juftly lamented; for he was certainly ingenious and learned in a great degree. He left a great many works of various kinds, as tragedies, comedies, elegies, translations of Latin and Greek authors, with notes upon them, orations, &c. While he was mafter of the school at Labacum, or Laubach, he composed a new grammar; for there was no grammar extant that pleafed him. This was more methodical, and shorter than any of them; and, indeed, was generally approved. So far then he had done well, but he was not fatisfied; he would go further; and, not content with giving a grammar of his own, chose to attack others. For this purpofe, he drew up another piece, called, " Strigil Grammatica," in which he disputes with fome little acrimony against all other grammarians; and this, as was natural, increased the number. of his enemies. With all his parts and learning, he feems not a little to have wanted prudence.

FROBENIUS (JOHN), an eminent and learned German printer, was a native of Hammelburg in Franconia, where he was from his childhood trained to literature. Afterwards he went to the university of Basil, where he acquired the reputation of being uncommonly learned. With a view of promoting useful learning, for which he was very zealous, he applied himfelf to the art of printing; and, becoming a master of it, opened a shop at Basil. He was the first of the German printers who brought the art to any perfection; and, being a man of great probity and piety, as well as skill, he was, what very few have been, particularly choice in the authors he printed. He would never fuffer libels, or any thing that might hurt the reputation of another, to go through his prefs, for the fake of profit; but very juftly thought all fuch practices difgraceful to his art, difgraceful to letters, and infinitely pernicious to religion and fociety. The great reputation and character of this printer was the principal motive which led Erasimus to fix his residence at Basil, in order to have his own works printed by him. The connection between Erafmus and Frobenius grew very clofe and intimate; and it was not fuch a connection as ufually fubfifts between a printer and an author, where each is endeavouring to make the best bargain he can, but it was a connection of friendship and the fincerest cordiality. Erasimus loved the good qualities of Froben, as much as Froben could admire the great ones of Erasmus.

There is an epiftle of Erafinus extant, which contains fo full an account of this printer, that it forms a very curious memorial for his life. It was written in 1527, on the occasion of Froben's death, which happened that year; and which, Erafmus tells us, he bore fo extremely ill, that he really began to be assumed of his grief, fince what he felt upon the death of his own own brother was not to be compared to it. He fays, that he lamented the lofs of Froben, not fo much becaufe he was the most warmly affectioned towards him, but because he seemed raifed up by providence for the promoting of liberal studies. Then he proceeds to defcribe his good qualities, which were indeed very great and numerous; and concludes with a particular account of his death, which was fomewhat remarkable. He relates that, about five years before, Froben had the misfortune to fall from the top of a pair of stairs, on a brick pavement: which fall, though he then imagined himfelf not much hurt by it, is thought to have laid the foundation of his fubfequent malady. The year before he died, he was feized with most exquisite pains in his right ancle: but was in time fo relieved from these, that he was able to go to Frankfort on horseback. The malady, however, whatever it was, was not gone, but had fettled in the toes of his right foot, of which he had no ufe. Next, a numbnefs feized the fingers of his right hand; and then a dead palfy, which taking him when he was reaching fomething from a high place, he fell with his head upon the ground, and difcovered few figns of life afterwards. He died at Basil in 1527, lamented by all, but by none more than Eraf. mus, who wrote his epitaph in Greek and Latin. Both thefe epitaphs are at the end of this epifile; and it may not be amily to transcribe the Latin:

" Arida Joannis tegit hic lapis offa Frobeni, Orbe viret toto nefcia fama mori.

Moribus hanc niveis meruit studiisque juvandis,

Quæ nunc mæsta jacent orba parente suo.

Rettulit, ornavit veterum monumenta sophorum,

Arte, manu, curis, ære, favore, fide.

Huic vitam in cœlis data numina justa perennem,

Per nos in terris fama perennis erit."

A great number of valuable authors were printed by Frobenius with great care and accuracy, among which were the works of Jerome, Augustin, and Erasmus. He had formed a design to print the Greek fathers, which had not yet been done; but death prevented him. That work, however, was carried on by his fon Jerome Frobenius and his fon-in-law Nicolas Episcopius, who, joining in partnership, carried on the business with the fame reputation, and gave very correct editions of those fathers.

FROBISHER (Sir MARTIN), an English navigator, was born near Doncaster in Yorkshire; of low parents, but it is not known in what year. Being brought up to navigation, he very early displayed the talents of an eminent failor; and was the first Englishman that attempted to find out a north-west pass.

fage to China. He made offers of this to feveral English merchants for fifteen years together; but, meeting with no encouragement from them, he at length obtained recommendations to Dudley earl of Warwick, and other perfons of rank and fortune. Under their influence and protection, he engaged a fufficient number of adventurers, and collected proper fums of money. The fhips he provided were only three; namely, two barks of about twenty-five tons each, and a pinnace of ten tons. With thefe he failed from Deptford, June 8, 1576; and the court being then at Greenwich, the queen beheld them as they paffed by, "commended them, and bade them farewell, with thaking her hand at them out of the window [N]."

Bending their courfe northward, they came on the 24th within fight of Fara, one of the islands of Shetland: and on the IIth of July difcovered Friezeland, which flood high, and was all covered with fnow. They could not land, by reafon of the ice, and great depth of water near the fhore: the east point of this island, however, they named, "Queen Elizabeth's Foreland." On the 28th they had fight of Meta Incognita, being part of New Greenland; on which also they could not land, for the reasons just mentioned. August the 10th, he went on a defert island, three miles from the continent; but staid there only a few hours. The next day he entered into a strait which he called, " Frobifher's Strait;" and the name is still retained. On the 12th, failing to Gabriel's Island, they came to a found, which they named Prior's Sound, and anchored in a fandy bay The 15th they failed to Prior's Bay, the 17th to Thomas there. Williams's Island; and the 18th came to an anchor under Burcher's Island. Here they went on shore, and had some communication with the natives; but he was fo unfortunate, as to have five of his men and a boat taken by those barbarians. They were like the Tartars, or Samoeids, with long black hair, broad faces, flat nofes, and tawny: the garments both of men and women were made of feal fkins, and did not differ in fashion; but the women were marked in the face with blue streaks down the cheeks, and round the eyes. Having endeavoured in vain to recover his men, he fet fail again for England the 26th of August; and, notwithstanding a terrible storm on the 7th, arrived fafe at Harwich on the 2d of October.

He took possession of that country in the queen of England's name; and, in token of such possession, ordered his men to bring whatever they could first find. One among the rest brought a piece of black stone, much like sea-coal, but very heavy. Having at his return distributed fragments of it among his friends, one of the adventurerer's wives threw a fragment into the fire; which being taken out again, and quenched in vinegar, glittered like gold; and, being tried by fome refiners in London, was found to contain a portion of that rich metal. This circumstance raising prodigious expectations of gold, great numbers earnestly pressed Frobisher to undertake a second voyage the next fpring. The queen lent him a fhip of the royal navy of 200 tons; with which, and two barks of about 30 tons each, they fell down to Gravesend, May 26, 1577, and there received the facrament together; an act of religion, not fo frequently performed as it ought to be among men exposed to fo many perils, and more particularly under the protection of heaven. They failed from Harwich on the 31st of May, and arrived in St. Magnus Sound, at the Orkney Iflands, upon the 7th of June; from whence they kept their course for the space of twenty-fix days, without feeing any land. They met, however, with great drifts of wood, and whole bodies of trees; which were either blown off the cliffs of the nearest lands by violent ftorms, or rooted up and carried by floods into the fea. At length, on the 4th of July, they difcovered Friezeland; along the coafts of which they found illands of ice of incredible bignefs, fome being 70 or 80 fathoms under water, befides the part that ftood above water, and more than half a mile in circuit. Not having been able fafely to land in this place, they proceeded for Frobisher's Straits; and on the 17th of the fame month made the North Foreland in them, otherwife called Hall's Ifland; as alfo a fmaller ifland of the fame name, where they had in their last voyage found the ore, but could not now get a piece fo large as a walnut. They met with fome of it, however, in other adjacent islands, but not enough to merit their attention. They failed about to make what difcoveries they could, and gave names to feveral bays and ifles; as Jackman's Sound, Smith's Island, Beare's Sound, Leicester's Isle, Anne countefs of Warwick's Sound and Island, York Sound, &c.

The captain's commiffion directed him in this voyage only to fearch for ore, and to leave the further difcovery of the northweft paffage till another time. Having, therefore, in the countefs of Warwick's Ifland, found a good quantity, he took a lading of it; intending the first opportunity to return home. He fet fail the 23d of August, and arrived in England about the end of September. He was most graciously received by the queen, whose fingular pleasure and glory it was to extend the English name and trade to the utmost parts of the habitable world: and, as the gold ore he brought had an appearance of riches and profit, and the hopes of a north-west passage to China was greatly increased by this fecond voyage, her majesty appointed commissioners to make trial of the ore, and examine thoroughly into the whole affair. The commissioners did fo, and reported the great value of the undertaking, and the expediency of further carrying on the difcovery of the north-weft paffage. Upon this, fuitable preparations were made with all poffible difpatch; and, becaufe the mines newly found out were fufficient to defray the adventurers charges, it was thought neceffary to fend a felect number of foldiers, to fecure the places already difcovered, to make further difcoveries into the inland parts, and to fearch again for the passage to China. Befides three fhips as before, twelve others were fitted out for this voyage, which were to return at the end of the fummer with a lading of gold ore. They affembled at Harwich the 27th of May, and failing thence the 31st, they came within fight of Friezeland on the 20th of June; when the general, going on shore, took possession of the country in the queen of England's name, and called it West-England. They met with many storms and difficulties in this voyage, which retarded them fo much, that the feafon was too far advanced to undertake difcoveries; fo that, after getting as much ore as they could, they failed for England, where, after a ftormy and dangerous voyage, they arrived about the beginning of October.

It does not appear how captain Frobisher employed himself from this time to 1585, when he commanded the Aid, in fir Francis Drake's expedition to the West Indies. In 1588, he bravely exerted himfelf against the Spanish Armada, commanding the Triumph, one of the three largest ships in that fervice, and which had on board the greatest number of men of any in the whole English fleet. July 26th, he received the honour of knighthood, from the hand of the lord high admiral, at fea, on board his own fhip; and when afterwards the queen thought it neceffary to keep a fleet on the Spanish coast, he was employed in that fervice, particularly in 1590, when he commanded one squadron, as fir John Hawkins did another. In 1594, he was fent with four men of war, to affift Henry the fourth of France, against a body of leaguers and Spaniards then in possession of part of Bretagne, who had fortified themfelves very ftrongly at Croyzon near Breft. But in an affault upon that fort, Nov. 7, he was wounded with a ball in the hip, of which he died, foon after he had brought the fleet fafely back to Plymouth; and was buried in that town. Stow tells us, the wound was not mortal in itfelf, but became fo through the negligence of his furgeon, who only extracted the bullet, without duly fearching the wound and taking out the wadding, which caufed it to fefter.

He was a man of great courage, experience, and conduct, but accufed by fome of having been harfh and violent. There is a good painting of him in the picture gallery at Oxford.

FROISSARD, or FROISSART (JOHN), a celebrated hiftorian, was born at Valenciennes in 1337. He was bred to the church, church, but was of a lively turn, loved gaiety and fhew, and paffed much time in travelling, in England, Scotland, Italy, and elfewhere. His chief work is, his " Chronicle," which comprifes what happened in France, Spain, and England, from 1326 to 1400. He took care to inform himfelf well of things; and for this purpose went to the courts of princes, either to collect memoirs, or to get the best information from those who had the management of state affairs. The best edition is that of Lyons, 1559, in four volumes, folio. There is an abridgement of it by Sleidan; and it was continued to 1466 by Monstrelet. Froiffart was alfo a poet as well as an hiftorian, though his poems have been but little known. He refided a confiderable time in the court of queen Philippa of Hainault, wife of Edward III. king of England, who was his chief patronels and friend; after whose death he retired into his own country. He has been accufed of having beftowed too many encomiums on the English, and too few on the French, because the latter did not pay him for his labours, while he received a good falary from the former. After his return into his own country he obtained the cure of Leffines, but not relifhing that confinement, he began to travel again. After some time, however, he was preferred to the canonry and treasurership of Chimai, where he died about 1410.

FRONTINUS (SEXTUS JULIUS), a Roman writer, who was in high repute under Vespasian, Titus, Domitian, Nerva, and Trajan. He was a man of confular dignity, a great officer who commanded the Roman armies in England, and elfewhere, with fuccefs; and he is mentioned in high terms of panegyric by all the writers of his time. He was city-prætor, when Vef-pafian and Titus were confuls. Nerva made him curator of the aquæducts, which occasioned him to write his treatife, "De Aquæductibus Urbis Romæ." He wrote alfo "Tres libros ftratagematum," or, concerning the ftratagems used in war by the most eminent Greek and Roman commanders; and afterwards added a fourth, containing examples of those arts and maxims, discourfed of in the former. These two works are still extant, together with a piece, " De Re Agraria:" and another, " De Limitibus." They have been often printed separately, but were all published together, in a neat edition at Amsterdam in 1661, with notes by Robertus Keuchenius, who has placed at the end the fragments of feveral works of Frontinus, that are loft. This eminent man died under Trajan, and was fucceeded as augur by the younger Pliny, who mentions him with honour. He forbade any monument o be erected to him after his death; declaring, that every man was fure to be remembered without any fuch testimonial, if he had lived fo as to deferve it. His words, as Pliny has preferved them, were thefe : s. Impenia -UA

" Impenía Monumenti fupervacua eft; Memoria nostri durabit, 'fi vita meruimus."

FRONTO (MARCUS CORNELIUS), a Roman rhetorician, who counted among his difciples the emperors L. Verus, and M. Aurelius. Being made conful by the latter, he erected a statue to his honour. His eloquence was not florid, but noble and majeflic; and supported by a certain auftere gravity, which in that age of ornament, recalled the memory of Cicero. None of his works are extant, but he is mentioned with high commendation by Macrobius, Aufonius, St. Jerom, and others. The exact times of his birth and death are not known.

FROWDE (PHILIP), an English poet, was the fon of a gentleman, who had been post-master in the reign of queen Anne. He was fent to the university of Oxford, where he had the honour of being diffinguished by Addison, who took him under his protection. While he remained there, he became the author of feveral pieces of poetry, fome of which, in Latin, were pure and elegant enough to entitle them to a place in the Muse Anglicanæ. He wrote likewise two tragedies: " The Fall of Saguntum," dedicated to fir Robert Walpole; and " Philotas," addreffed to the earl of Chefterfield'. He died at his lodgings in Cecil-street in the Strand, in 1738; and in the London Daily-Post had the following character given him: " Though the elegance of Mr. Frowde's writings has recommended him to the general public efteem, the politeness of his genius is the least amiable part of his character; for he esteemed the talents of wit and learning, only as they were conducive to the excitement and practice of honour and humanity. Therefore, with a foul chearful, benevolent, and virtuous, he was in conversation genteelly delightful, in friendship punctually sincere, in death christianly refigned. No man could live more beloved; no private man could die more lamented."

FRUGONI (CHARLES INNOCENT), a celebrated Italian poet, born at Genoa, in 1692, of an illustrious family. He entered early into the congregation of the Sommafques, and taught polite literature with success in Rome, Genoa, Bologna, Parma, and other celebrated places. At Parma he obtained leave from the pope to quit the clerical state, and became a secular divine. When the duke of Parma established an academy of fine arts, Frugoni was appointed perpetual fecretary. His works were printed at Parma in 1779, and confift of nine large volumes, 8vo, containing every species of minor poem. He died in 1768, at the age of 76.

FRUMENTIUS, a Romifh faint, called the apoftle of Æthiopia, because he was the first who planted Christianity in that country. He was a Tyrian by birth, and went with a brother named Edessa to Æthiopia, where they became so much in favour with the king, that they were enabled to introduce the Christian faith. In confequence of this fervice, Frumentius was ordained bishop of Æthiopia in 331, by St Athanasius. By his means Christianity was widely spread in Æthiopia, and so firmly established, that so late as the seventh century, the king of that country acknowledged the authority of the pope. Missionaries were accordingly sent at that time, but their interference was not of any service.

FRYTH (JOHN), a martyr to the Reformation, was born at Sevenoaks in Kent, where his father was an innkeeper. He was educated at King's-college in Cambridge, where he took a batchelor of arts degree, but afterwards went to Oxford, and became one of the junior canons of cardinal Wolfey's college. Some time before 1525, he fell into the acquaintance of William Tyndale, a zealous Lutheran; who, conferring with him about the abufes of religion, made a convert of him. Fryth fhortly professed himself; upon which, being seized and examined by the committary of the university, he was imprisoned within the limits of his college. Being releafed in 1528, he went beyond the feas; where, being greatly confirmed in his religious opinions, he returned to England about two years after. leaving his wife behind. Wandering about, he was taken up for a vagabond at Reading in Berkshire, and fet in the stocks: but the schoolmaster of the town, discovering his merit and qualities, procured his releafe, and supplied him with victuals and money. Afterwards he went to London; where, endeavouring to make profelytes, he was by the care of fir Thomas More, then lord-chancellor, feized and fent prisoner to the Tower. He had feveral conferences there with fir Thomas and others. At length, being examined by the bifhops fitting in St. Paul's cathedral, he was urged to recant his opinions; but, refufing, was condemned to be burnt, and accordingly fuffered in Smithfield in 1533. His works are thefe: "Treatife of Purgatory .--Antithefis between Chrift and the pope.-Letters unto the faithful followers of Chrift's Gospel, written in the Tower, 1532.-Mirror, or Glafs to know thyfelf, written in the Tower, 1532. -Mirror, or Looking, Glafs, wherein you may behold the Sacrament of Baptifm .-- Articles, for which he died, written in Newgate prifon, June 23, 1533 .- Anfwer to fir Thomas More's dialogues concerning Herefies .- Anfwer to John Fifher bifhop of Rochefter, &c." all which treatifes were reprinted at London, 1573, in folio.

FUGGER (HULDRIC), an eminent perfon born at Augfburg. in 1526, deferves a place in this work for his affection to learning and learned men. His family was confiderable for its antiquity and riches; and Thuanus relates, that when Charles V. changed the government of Augfburg, in 1548, he nominated nated the family of the Fuggers among those who thenceforward were to be raifed to the dignity of fenators. Yet this illustrious family, as all the genealogical writers of Germany take notice, fprung from a weaver, who in 1370 was made free of the city of Augfburg. Huldric had been chamberlain to pope Paul III. and afterwards turned protestant. He laid out great fums in purchasing good manuscripts of ancient authors, and getting them printed; and for this purpose he for fome time allowed a falary to the famous Henry Stephens. His relations were fo incenfed at him for the money he expended in this way, that they brought an action against him, in confequence of which he was declared incapable of managing his affairs. Thuanus, and fome other writers obferve, that this fentence pronounced against Fugger plunged him into a deep melancholy, which accompanied him almost to his grave; but it is declared in his epitaph, that he was unmoved at the fhock, and that he was foon after restored to his estate. He had retired to Heidelberg, where he died in 1584; having bequeathed his library, which was very confiderable, to the elector Palatine, with a fund for the maintenance of fix fcholars.

FUCHSIUS, or FUCHS (LEONARD), a celebrated phyfician and botanift of Germany, was born in 1501, at Wembdingen in Bavaria. He practifed phyfic with great reputation at Munich and Ingolftadt, and was raifed to equefirian dignity by the emperor Charles V. Cofmo, duke of Tufcany, in vain offered him an appointment of 600 crowns to fettle in his dominions. There is reafon to believe that the Fox-glove derived its name from him, as Fuchs fignifies a fox; and he mentions having first named it digitalis, or finger-hut. The most celebrated of his works, is his "Historia Stirpium," printed at Bale in 1542, in folio. He died in 1566.

FULGENTIUS (St.) an ecclesiaftical writer, was born at Telepta, about 468. He was of an illustrious family, the fon of Claudius, and grandfon of Gordianus, a fenator of Carthage. Claudius dying early, left his son, then very young, to the care of his widow Mariana. He was properly educated, in the knowledge of the Latin and Greek languages, and made fuch progrefs in his fludies, that while yet a boy he could repeat all Homer, and fpoke Greek with fluency and purity. As foon as he was capable of an employment, he was made procurator or receiver of the revenues of his province. But this fituation difpleafed him, becaufe of the rigour he was forced to use, in levying taxes; and therefore, notwithstanding the tears and diffuafions of his mother, he left the world, and took the monaftic vows under Faustus, a persecuted bishop, who had founded a monaftery in that neighbourhood. The continued perfecutions of the Arians, foon feparated him and Fauftus; and not long after, the the incurfions of the Moors obliged him to retire into the country of Sicca; here, however, he met with firipes and impriforment. Afterwards he refolved to go into Egypt; but in his voyage was diffuaded by Eulalius bifhop of Syracufe, becaufe the monks of the eaft had feparated from the catholic church. He confulted alfo a bifhop of Africa, who had retired into Sicily; and this bifhop advifed him to return to his own country, after he had made a journey to Rome. King Theodoric was in that city when he arrived there, which was in 500. After he had paid his devoirs to the fepulchres of the apoftles, he returned to his own country where he built a monaftery.

Africa was then under the dominion of Thrafimond king of the Vandals, an Arian, and a cruel enemy to the catholics. He had forbidden to ordain catholic bifhops in the room of those who died: but the bishops of Africa were determined not to obey this order. Fulgentius, under these circumstances, wished to avoid being a bifhop; and when elected for the fee of Vinta in 507, fled and concealed himfelf, but being foon difcovered, was appointed bishop of Ruspa, much against his will. On this elevation he did not change either his habit or manner of living, but used the fame austerities and abstinence as before. He still loved the monks, and delighted to retire into a monaftery, as often as the business of his episcopal function allowed him time. Afterwards he had the fame fate with all the catholic bifhops of Africa, whom king Thrasimond banished into the island of Sardinia: and though he was not the most ancient among them, yet they paid fuch refpect to his learning, as to employ his pen in all the writings produced in the name of their body. So great was his reputation, that Thrafimond had, a curiofity to fee and hear him; and having fent for him to Carthage, he proposed to him many difficulties, which Fulgentius folved to his fatisfaction: but becaufe he confirmed the catholics, and converted many Arians, their bishop at Carthage prayed the king to fend him back to Sardinia. Thrafimond dying about 523, his fon Hilderic recalled the catholic bifhops, whereof Fulgentius was one. He returned, to the great joy of those who were concerned with him, led a most exemplary life, governed his clergy well, and performed all the offices of a good bifhop. He died in 533, on the first day of the year, being then 65.

His works, as many of them as are extant, have often been printed; but the laft and completeft edition is in one volume, 4to, Paris, 1684. Fulgentius did not only follow the doctrine of St. Auftin, but he alfo imitated his ftyle. His words, indeed, are not quite fo pure; but then he did not play with them, as St. Auftin frequently did. He had a quick and fubtle fpirit, which eafily comprehended whatever he applied himfelf to learn; and he had a clear and copious way of fetting it off; too copious, indeed, deed, for he often repeats the fame things in different words, and turns the queftion many different ways. He was deeply verfed in the Holy Scriptures, and as well read in the fathers, particularly St. Auftin: but he loved thorny and fcholaftic queftions, and fometimes introduced them in the difcuffion of mysteries.

FULK (WILLIAM), an English divine, was born, and received the first part of his education, in London. He was a youth of great parts and fpirit; and it is reported of him, that, having a literary contest with Edmund Campian, while he was at fchool, and lofing the filver pen which was proposed to the victor, he was feized with grief and anger to the higheft degree imaginable. Afterwards he was fent to St. John's-college, Cambridge, in 1555, of which he was chosen fellow in 1564. He had fpent fix years of this interval in the fludy of the law, at Clifford's-inn, in compliance with the wifhes of his father, who was fo offended at his returning to college, that, though very rich, he refused to grant him any supplies. Fulk, however, made his way by his parts and learning. He applied himfelf to mathematics; to languages, oriental in particular; to divinity; and became eminent, and published books on all these subjects. After a time, he was fuspected of puritanism, which he was fupposed to have imbibed from Cartwright, the divinity professor, his intimate friend; and on this account was expelled from his college. He then took lodgings in Cambridge, and maintained himfelf for fome time by reading lectures. The earl of Leicefter, labouring at that time to ingratiate himfelf with the eminent divines of all denominations and principles, took Fulk under his patronage; and, in 1571, prefented him to the living of Warley in Eslex, and two years after to that of Didington in Suffolk. Soon after the earl fent him to Cambridge, with a mandamus for his doctor of divinity's degree, in order to qualify him to attend, as he afterwards did, an ambassador into France. Upon his return he was made master of Pembrokehall, and Margaret professor of divinity, in Cambridge; and, in possession of these preferments, he died in 1589. He had a wife and family.

His works are numerous, written in Latin and Englifh, levelled chiefly against the Papists, and dedicated, feveral of them, to queen Elizabeth and the earl of Leicester. The most confiderable of them is his Comment upon the Rheims Testament, printed in 1580, and re-printed in 1601 with this title : "The Text of the New Testament of Jesus Chrift, translated out of the vulgar Latin by the Papists of the traiterous Seminarie at Rhemes. With arguments of books, chapters, and annotations, pretending to difcover the corruptions of divers translations, and to clear the controversies of these days. Whereunto is added the translation out of the original Greek, commonly used in the Church Church of England: with a confutation of all fuch arguments, gloss, and annotations, as containe manifest impietie of Herefie, Treason, and Slander against the Catholike Church of God, and the true teachers thereof, or the translations used in the Church of England. The whole worke, perused and enlarged in divers places by the author's owne hand before his death, with fundry quotations and authorities out of Holy Scriptures, Counfels, Fathers, and History. More amply than in the former Edition." This work was published again, 1617 and 1633, in folio, as it was before. It is one of those the author dedicated to the queen.

FULLER (NICHOLAS), was born at Southampton in 1557, and educated at the free-school in that town. He did not go directly thence to the university, but was taken into the family of the bishop of Winchester, Dr. Robert Horne; where spending fome time in ftudy, he was made at length his fecretary, and afterwards continued in that office by his fucceffor, Dr. Watfon. But, Watfon dying also in about three years, Fuller returned home, with a refolution to follow his fludies. Before he was fettled there, he was invited to be tutor to the fons of a knight in Hampshire, whom he accompanied to St. John's-college, Oxford, in 1584. His pupils leaving him in a little time, he removed himfelf to Hart-hall; where he took both the degrees in arts, and then retired into the country. He afterwards took orders, became a prebendary in the church of Salifbury, and rector of Bishop's-Waltham in Hampshire. He died in 1622. He was extremely learned in the facred tongues, and, as Wood quaintly fays, " was fo happy in pitching upon ufeful difficulties, tending to the understanding of the Scripture, that he surpassed all the Critics of his time." His " Miscellanea Theologica," in four books, were published at Oxford in 1616, and at London in 1617. Thefe miscellanies coming into the hands of John Drusius in Holland, excited his envy; he charged Fuller with plagiarifm, and with taking his best notes from him without any acknowledgment. But Fuller, knowing himfelf guiltlefs, as having never seen Drusius's works, published a vindication of himfelf at Leyden, in 1622, together with two more books of " Miscellanea Sacra." All these miscellanies are printed in the ninth volume of the " Critici Sacri," and dispersed throughout Pool's "Synopfis Criticorum." There are fome manufcripts of Fuller in the Bodleian library at Oxford, which shew his great skill in Hebrew and in philological learning : as, "An Exposition of Rabbi Mordechai Nathan's Hebrew Roots, with notes upon it," and "A Lexicon."

FULLER (THOMAS), an English historian and divine, was fon of Mr. Fuller, minister of Akle in Northamptonshire, and born there in 1608. The chief assistance he had in the rudiments ments of learning was from his father, under whom he made fo extraordinary a progrefs, that he was fent at twelve years of age to Queen's-college in Cambridge; Dr. Davenant, who was his mother's brother, being then mafter of it, and foon after bifhop of Salifbury. He took his degrees in arts, and would have been fellow of the college : but there being no vacancy for his county, he removed to Sidney in the fame univerfity. He had not been long there, before he was chosen minister of St. Bennet's in the town of Cambridge. In 1631, he obtained a fellowship in Sidney-college, and at the fame time a prebend in the church of Salifbury. This year also he issue that first publication, a work of the poetical kind, now but little known. It was a divine poem, entitled, "David's Hainous Sin, Heartie Repentances and Heavie Punishment," in a thin octavo.

He was foon after ordained prieft, and prefented to the rectory of Broad Windfor in Dorfetshire; where he married, and had one fon, but loft his wife about 1641. During his retirement at this rectory, he began to complete feveral works he had planned at Cambridge: but growing weary of a country parish, and uneasy at the unsettled state of public affairs, he removed to London; and diffinguished himself for much in the pulpits there, that he was invited by the master and brotherhood of the Savoy to be their lecturer. In 1640, he published his "Hiftory of the Holy War :" it was printed at Cambridge in folio. April 13, 1640, a parliament was called, and then alfo a convocation began at Westminster, in Henry VII's chapel, of which our author was a member. He continued at the Savoy, to the great fatisfaction of his people, and the neighbouring nobility and gentry, labouring all the while in private and in public to ferve the king. To this end, on the anniverfary of his inauguration, March 27, 1642, he preached at Westminster-abbey, on this text, 2 Sam. xix. 30. "Yea, let him take all, fo that my Lord the King return in peace :" which fermon being printed, gave great offence to those who were engaged in the opposition, and brought the preacher into no fmall danger. He foon found that he must expect to be filenced and ejected, as others had been; yet defifted not till he either was, or thought himfelf unfettled. This appears from what he fays in the preface to his "Holy State," which was printed in folio that fame year at Cambridge.

April 1643, he conveyed himfelf to the king at Oxford, who received him gladly. As his majefty had heard of his extraordinary abilities in the pulpit, he was now defirous of knowing them perfonally; and accordingly Fuller preached before him at St. Mary's church. His fortune upon this occasion was very fingular. He had before preached and published a fermion in London, upon "the new-moulding church-reformation," which caufed caufed him to be cenfured as too hot a Royalift; and now, from his fermon at Oxford, he was thought to be too lukewarm: which can only be afcribed to his moderation, which he would fincerely have inculcated in each party, as the only means of reconciling both. He refolved, however, to recover the opinion of his fidelity to the royal caufe, by openly trying his fortune under the royal army: and, therefore, being well recommended to Sir Ralph Hopton, in 1643, he was admitted by him, in quality of chaplain. For this employment, he was quite at liberty, being deprived of all other preferment. And now, attending the army from place to place, he conftantly exercifed his duty as chaplain; yet found proper intervals for his beloved fludies, which he employed chiefly in making historical collections, and efpecially in gathering materials for his "Worthies of England."

After the battle at Cheriton-Down, March 29, 1644, lord Hopton drew on his army to Bafing-houfe, and Fuller, being left there by him, animated the garrifon to fo vigorous a defence of that place, that Sir William Waller was obliged to raife the fiege with confiderable lofs. But the war hastening to an end, and part of the king's army being driven into Cornwall under lord Hopton, Fuller, having leave of that nobleman, took refuge at Exeter; where he refumed his studies, and preached constantly to the citizens. During his refidence here, he was appointed chaplain to the princefs Henrietta Maria, who was born at Exeter in June, 1643; and the king foon after gave him a patent for his presentation to the living of Dorchester in Dorfetshire. He continued his attendance on the princess, till the Surrender of Exeter to the parliament, in April 1646; but did not accept the living, because he determined to remove to London at the expiration of the war. He relates an extraordinary circumstance which happened, as he fays, during the fiege of Exeter. "When the city of Exeter, fays he, was befieged by the parliament forces, fo that only the fouth fide thereof towards the fea was open to it, incredible numbers of larks were found in that open quarter, for multitude like quails in the wildernefs; though, bleffed be God, unlike them in the caufe and effect ; as not defired with man's destruction, nor fent with God's anger : as appeared by their fafe digestion into wholesome nou-Hereof I was an eye and mouth-witnefs. I will rishment. fave my credit in not conjecturing any number; knowing that herein, though I should stoop beneath the truth, I should mount above belief. They were as fat as plentiful; fo that being fold, for two-pence a dozen and under, the poor who could have no cheaper, and the rich no better meat, used to make pottage of them, boiling them down therein. Several caufes were affigned hereof, &c. but the caufe of caufes was the divine providence ; thereby 3 thereby providing a feast for many poor people, who otherwise had been pinched for provision [0]."

When he came to London, he met but a cold reception among his former parifhioners, and found his lecturer's place filled by another. However, it was not long before he was chofen lecturer at St. Clement's-lane, near Lombard-ftreet; and fhortly after removed to St. Bride's in Fleet-ftreet. In 1647, he publifhed in 4to. "A Sermon of Affurance, fourteen years agoe preached at Cambridge, fince in other places; now, by the importunity of his friends, expofed to public view." He dedicated it to Sir John Danvers, who had been a Royalift, was then an Oliverian, and next year one of the king's judges; and in the dedication he fays, that " it had been the pleafure of the prefent authority to make him mute; forbidding him till further order the exercife of his public preaching."

About 1648, he was prefented to the rectory of Waltham in Effex by the earl of Carlifle, whofe chaplain he was just before made. He spent that and the following year betwixt London and Waltham, employing fome engravers to adorn his copious profpect or view of the Holy Land, as from mount Pilgah; therefore called his " Pifgah-fight of Palestine and the confines thereof, with the hiftory of the Old and New Testament acted thereon," which he published in 1650. It is an handsome folio, embellished with a frontispiece and many other copper-plates, and divided into five books. As for his "Worthies of England," on which he had been labouring fo long, the death of the king for a time difheartened him from the continuance of that work : " For what shall I write," fays he, " of the Worthies of England, when this horrid act will bring fuch an infamy upon the whole nation, as will ever cloud and darken all its former, and suppress its future rising glories ?" He was, therefore, bufy till the year last mentioned, in preparing that book and others; and the next year he rather employed himfelf in publishing some particular lives of religious reformers, martyrs, confessors, bishops, doctors, and other learned divines, foreign and domeftic, than in augmenting his faid book of English Worthies in general. To this collection, which was executed by feveral hands, as he tells us in the preface, he gave the title of "Abel Redivivus," and published it in 4to, 1651.

And now, having lived above twelve years a widower, he married a fifter of the vifcount Baltinglasse about 1654; and the next year she brought him a son, who, as well as the other before-mentioned, survived his father. In 1656, he publissed in folio, "The Church History of Britain, from the birth of Jesus Christ to the year 1648:" to which work are subjoined, "The [0] Worthies of England, in Exeter, p. 273.

Hiftory

Hiltory of the University of Cambridge since the conquest," and "The Hiftory of Waltham Abbey in Effex, founded by " King Harold.". His Church Hiftory was animadverted upon by Dr. Heylin in his " Examen Hiftoricum;" and this drew from our author a reply : after which they had no further controverfy, but were very well reconciled. A fhort time before the restoration, Fuller was re-admitted to his lecture in the Savoy, and on that event reftored to his prebend of Salifbury. He was chosen chaplain extraordinary to the king; created doctor of divinity at Cambridge by a mandamus, dated August 2, 1660; and, had he lived a twelvemonth longer, would probably have been raifed to a bifhopric. But upon his return from Salifbury in August 1661, he was attacked by a fever, of which he died the 16th of that month. His funeral was attended by at least two hundred of his brethren ; and a fermon was preached by Dr. Hardy, dean of Rochefter, in which a great and noble character was given of him.

In 1662, was published in folio, with an engraving of him prefixed, his "Hiftory of the Worthies of England." This work, part of which was printed before the author died, feems not fo finished as it would probably have been, if he had lived to fee it completely published : nevertheles, it certainly did not deferve the heavy cenfures of Nicholfon. Whatever errors may be found in it, as errors undoubtedly may be found in all works of that nature, the characters or memorials there affembled of fo many great men, will always make it a book neceffary to be. confulted.

Befides the works already mentioned in the courfe of this memoir, Fuller was the author of feveral others of a fmaller nature: as, 1. "Good Thoughts in bad times." 2. "Good Thoughts in worse times." These two pieces printed separately, the former in 1645, the latter in 1647, were published together in 1652. He afterwards published in 1660, 3. " Mixt Contemplations in better times." 4. "Andronicus: or, The Unfortunate Poli-tician. Lond. 1649," 8vo. 5. "The Triple Reconciler; stating three controverfies, viz. whether ministers have an exclusive power of barring communicants from the facrament; whether any person unordained may lawfully preach; and whether the Lord's Prayer ought not to be used by all Christians, 1654." 8vo. 6. " The speech of birds, also of flowers, partly moral, partly mystical, 1660," 8vo. He published also a great many sermons, feparately and in volumes.

Dr. Fuller was in his perfon tall and well-made, but no way inclining to corpulency; his complexion was florid; and his hair of a light colour and curling. He was a kind husband to both his wives, a tender father to both his children, a good friend and neighbour, and a well-behaved civilized perfon in every re- $\mathbf{X}$ spect. He was a most agreeable companion, having a great deal of wit: too much, as it should seem, fince he could not forbear mixing it in his most ferious compositions.

Of the powers of his memory, fuch wonders are related as are not quite credible. He could repeat five hundred ftrange words after twice hearing, and could make use of a fermon verbatim, if he once heard it. He undertook in passing from Templebar to the furthest part of Cheapside, to tell at his return every sign as it stood in order on both sides of the way, repeating them either backwards or forwards: and he did it exactly. His manner of writing is also reported to have been strange. He wrote, it is faid, near the margin the first words of every line down to the foot of the paper; then, by beginning at the head again, would so perfectly fill up every one of these lines, and without spaces, interlineations, or contractions, would so connect the ends and beginnings, that the fense would appear as complete, as if he had written it in a continued feries after the ordinary manner.

It was fufficiently known, how fteady he was in the Protestant religion, against the innovations of the Presbyterians and Independents; but his zeal against these was allayed with greater compassion than it was towards the Papists: and this raised him up many adversaries, who charged him with Puritanism. He used to call the controversies concerning episcopacy, and the newfangled arguments against the church of England, "infects of a day:" and carefully avoided polemical disputes, being altogether of Sir Henry Wotton's opinion, "disputandi pruritus, ecclesize scales." To conclude, whatever exceptions may be made to him as a writer, he was a man of great goodness, and an ornament to the times in which he lived.

FULLER (ISAAC), an Englifh painter of fome celebrity, had a genius for drawing and defigning hiftory; which however the did not always execute with due decency, nor after an hiftorical manner: for he was apt to modernize and burlefque his fubjects, and was guilty of other extravagances, which correfponded with his temper and manners. The Refurrection at All-Souls college chapel at Oxford, and that at Magdalen college chapel in the fame univerfity, were painted by him. There is alfo at Wadham-college a hiftory-piece of his, in two colours only, admirably well performed; for though this mafter wanted the regular improvements of travel to confider the antiques, and to form a better judgment, he may be reckoned among the foremoft in the account of Englifh painters. He ftudied many years in France under Perrier, and underflood the anatomical part of painting, perhaps not lefs than Michael Angelo; following it fo clofely, that he was very apt to make the mufcles too strong and prominent. He died in London towards the end of Charles II's reign.

FULVIA, an extraordinary Roman lady, and wife of Mark Antony, who had, as Paterculus expresses it, nothing of her fex but the body, " nihil muliebre præter corpus ferens," for her temper and courage breathed only policy and war. After the victory gained at Philippi over Brutus and Caffius by Octavius and Antony, the latter went into Asia to fettle the affairs of the Eaft. Octavius returned to Rome, where falling out with Fulvia, he could not decide the quarrel but by the fword: for this woman took arms against him in the most literal She was not fatisfied with retiring to Præneste, and sense. withdrawing thither the fenators and knights of her party: fhe armed herfelf in perfon; fhe gave the word to the foldiers; and made them fpeeches. She had two hufbands before the married Antony: the first was Clodius, the great and mortal enemy of Cicero; the fecond Curio, who was killed in Africa on Cæfar's fide, before the battle of Pharsalia. As brave and violent as Antony was, he met with his match in Fulvia. " She was a woman," fays Plutarch, " not born for fpinning or houfewifry, nor one that could be content with the power of ruling a private husband, but a lady capable of advising a magistrate, and of ruling the general of an army; fo that Cleopatra had great obligations to her for having taught Antony to be fo good a fervant, he coming to her hands tame and broken in all obedience to the commands of a mistrefs." Antony had, however, the courage at length to fhew great anger against Fulvia, for levying war against Ostavius: and he treated her with fo much contempt and indignation, when he returned to Rome, that the went into Greece, and died there of a difease occasioned by her grief. This lady was an admirable coadjutrix to her cruel husband, during the massacres of the triumvirate. She put feveral perfons to death on her own authority, either out of avarice, or from a spirit of revenge; and even people whom her husband did not know. Antony caufed the heads of those whom he had proscribed to be brought to a table, and fed his eyes a long while with thefe unhappy spectacles. The head of Cicero was one of them, which he ordered to be fixed on the roltrum; from whence Cicero had made fo many speeches against him? But, before that order was executed, Fulvia took the head, and fpit upon it; and placing it on her lap, drew out the tongue, which she pierced feveral times with her bodkin, uttering all the while the most opprobrious language against Cicero. "" Behold," fays Bayle, "a wicked woman of a strange species. There are some villains whom we are almost forced to admire, because they shew a cer-tain greatness of soul in their crimes: here is nothing to be seen X 2 but but brutality, baseness, and cowardice, and one cannot help conceiving an indignation full of contempt."

FUNCCIUS or FUNCK (JOHN NICOLAS), a native of Marpurg, and a celebrated critic in the Latin language, was born in the year 1693. He was educated at the univerfity of Rintlen in Weftphalia, and was a writer of feveral philological tracks in Latin. But the most celebrated part of his works consists of feveral treatifes which he published fuccessively on the history of the Latin language, beginning with its original formation, and pursuing it through the feveral ages, from youth to extreme old age. His treatifes De Origine Latinæ Linguæ, and De Pueritia Latinæ Linguæ, were published in 1720. He died in 1778.

FURETIERE (ANTONY), an ingenious and learned lawyer, was: born at Paris in 1620; and, after a liberal education, became eminent in the civil and canon law. He was first an advocate in the parliament; and afterwards, taking orders, was prefented with the abbey of Chalivoy, and the priory of Chuines. Many works of literature recommended him to the public: but he is chiefly known and valued for his "Univerfal Dictionary of the French Tongue," in which he explains the terms of art in all sciences. He had not, however, the pleasure of feeing this useful work published before his death; which happened in 1688. He was of the French academy, but, though a very useful member, was excluded in 1685, on the accusation of having composed his dictionary, by taking advantage of that of the academy, which was then going on. He justified himfelf by statements, in which he was very severe against the aca-' demy. He wished notwithstanding, a little before his death, to be re-admitted ; and he offered to give any fatisfaction, which could reasonably be expected from a man, who owned he had been carried too far by the heat of disputation. . .

FURIUS, called Bibaculus, perhaps from his exceffive drinking, an ancient Latin poet, was born at Cremona about the year of Rome 650, or 100 before Chrift. He wrote annals, of which Macrobius has preferved fome fragments. Quintilian fays, that he wrote Iambics alfo in a very fatirical firain, and therefore is cenfured by Cremutius Cordus, in Tacitus, as a flandering and abufive writer. Horace is thought to have ridiculed the falfe fublime of his tafte; yet, according to Macrobius, Virgil is faid to have imitated him in many places.

FURST (WALTER, or FURSTIUS, a Swifs, whole memory is revered by his countrymen, as he was one of the founders of their liberty. In 1307, animated by the defire of fhaking off the tyrannic yoke of Albert of Auftria, he united himfelf, with feveral brave affociates; and with them fucceeded in feizing all the forts by which the country had been kept in awe. Thefe

These forts were immediately demolished, and thus commenced the liberty of Switzerland. Furst was living in 1317.

FUST, or FAUST (JOHN), a goldfmith of Mentz, one of the three artifts confidered as the inventors of printing, the two others being Guttemberg and Schæffer. It is not, however, certain, that he did more than fupply money to Guttemberg, who had made attempts with moveable metal types at Strafburg, before he removed to Mentz. This happened in 1444. But it has been strongly argued, that Laurence Koster, at Harlaem, had first conceived the art of cutting wooden blocks for this purpole in 1430, which he immediately improved, by fubstituting feparate wooden types. Schæffer undoubtedly invented the method of cafting the metal types, in 1452. The first printed book with a date, is faid to have been a Pfalter, published at Mentz in 1,457; the next, perhaps, is Durandi Rationale divinorum Officiorum, by Fust and Schæffer in 1459. The Catholicon followed in 1460. There are, however, fome books without dates, which are fuppofed to be still older. Fust was at Paris in 1466, and it is imagined that he died there of the plague, which then raged in that capital.

FUZELIER (LOUIS), a dramatic writer of Paris, and one of the conductors of a periodical work called the Mercure, from 1744 to 1752, in which year he died, being then 80 years of age. He wrote operas, tragedies, comedies, for the Italian theatre, and even pieces for puppet-shews. He is faid to have written with spirit as well as facility.

GABRIEL (JAMES), a celebrated French architect, the pupil of the famous Manfard. He was born at Paris in 1661, and, becoming very eminent in his profession, was the constructor of many celebrated buildings in various parts of France. He role by his merit to the place of inspector-general of buildings, gardens, arts, and manufactures; and also to that of first architect, and chief engineer of bridges and public ways throughout the kingdom. He obtained also the ribband of the order of St. Michael; and died at Paris in the year 1742, at the age of 77. GABRINO. See RIENZI.

GACON (FRANCIS), a French poet, well known by his fatirical pieces against Bossuet, Rousseau, La Motte, and others, was the fon of a merchant, and born at Lyons in 1667. He became a father of the Oratory; obtained the poetical prize at the French academy in 1717; and died in his priory of Baillon Among his works are, " Le Poete fans fard," a fain 1725. tirical piece, which cost him fome months of imprisonment; a French translation of "Anacreon," with notes, which was the best of his works; " L'Anti-Rousseau," an attack against J. Baptiste Rouffeau, the poet; " L'Homere vengé," against La Motte. Gacon alfo attacked La Motte, and turned him into ridicule, in a small piece, entitled, " Les Fables de M. de la Motte, traduites en vers Francois, par P. S. F. au Caffé du Mont Parnasse, &c." This poet's natural propensity to fatire and criticism, led him to attack all forts of writers, and involved him in all the literary quarrels of his times. The French academy acted with great impartiality, when they adjudged him the prize; for he had written in fome shape or other against almost all the members of that illustrious body; and on this account it was, that he was not fuffered to make his fpeech of thanks, as is usual on fuch occasions. "Gacon," fays Voltaire, " is placed by father Niceron in the catalogue of illuftrious men, though he has been famous only for bad fatires.---Such authors cannot be cited but as examples to be detefted." In fact, though he wrote with care, his style was heavy and diffuse in profe, and low in verse.

GADDESDEN (JOHN OF), an English physician, author of a famous treatise on medicine, entitled, "Rosa Anglica," flourisched towards the beginning of the fourteenth century; and was the first Englishman employed at court as a physician. His 4 book contains a compendium of the whole practice of physic ufed in England in his time, and difplays fome curious instances of knowledge mixed with a vast abundance of quackery and low superstition. He points out the method of rendering falt-water fresh by distillation, generally thought to have been a much later difcovery; yet as a remedy for the epilepfy he recommends the patient to hear the mass for the fast of the ember weeks, at church, and afterwards to wear a verse of the day's gospel round his neck upon a scroll. Like other physicians of those times, he was an ecclesiastic, and enjoyed church preferments.

GAFFARELL (JAMES), a learned French writer, was the fon of Dr. Gaffarell, by Lucrece de Bermond his wife [A]; and was born at Mannes in Provence about 1601 [B]. He was educated at the university of Apt in that county [c], where he profecuted his studies with indefatigable industry; and applying himfelf particularly to the Hebrew language and Rabbinical learning, was wonderfully pleafed with the mysterious doctrines of the Cabala, and commenced author in their defence at the age of twenty-two. He printed a quarto volume at Paris in 1623, under the title of, " The secret mysteries of the divine Cabala, defended against the triffing objections of the Sophists [D]." The following year he published a paraphrase upon that beautiful ode the 137th pfalm, " By the waters of Babylon we fat down and wept, when we remembered thee, O Sion, &c." He began early to be inflamed with an ardent defire of travelling for his improvement in literature, wherein his curiofity was boundlefs.

This disposition, added to his uncommon talents, did not escape the notice of cardinal Richelieu, who appointed him his library-keeper [E], and fent him into Italy, to collect the best books, printed or MS. that could be found. This employment extremely well fuited Gaffarell's taste, both as it gave him an opportunity of furnishing his own library with fome curious pieces, in oriental and other languages, and of making enquiries into that branch of literature which was his chief delight. With this view, while he was at Rome, he went with fome others to visit Campanella, the famous pretender to magic : his defign in this vifit was, to procure fatisfaction about a passage in that author's book, " De sensu rerum et magia." Campanella was then in the inquisition, where he had been cruelly used; the calves of his legs all beaten black and blue, and most of the flesh torn of his buttocks, in order to force him to confess the crimes laid to his charge. At their entrance into his chamber, he begged they would have a little patience, till he had finished a small note which he was writing to cardinal Magaloti. As foon as they were feated, they observed him to make certain wry faces, which being fuppofed to proceed from pain, he was afked if he felt no pain; to which, fmiling, he anfwered, No! and gueffing the caufe of the queftion, he faid he was fancying himfelf to be cardinal Magaloti, as he had heard him defcribed. This was the very thing Gaffarell wanted; and convinced him, that in order to difcover another perfon's thoughts, it was not fufficient, as he had before underftood Campanella, barely to fancy yourfelf to be like the perfon, but you must actually affirme his very physiognomy [E]. In 1629, he published, "Rabbi Elea, de fine mundi, latine versus, cum notis," Paris, 8vo. i. e. " A Latin version of Rabbi Elea's treatife concerning the end of the world, with notes;" and the fame year came out his " Curiofitez Inoüez, &c. Unheard-of Curiofities concerning the talifmanic fculpture of the Persians; the horoscope of the Patriarchs, and the reading of the ftars." This curious piece went through three editions in the space of fix months. In it the author undertakes to shew, that talifmans, or constellated figures, had the virtue to make a man rich and fortunate, to free a house and even a whole country from certain infects, and venomous creatures; and from all the injuries of the air. He started many other bold affertions concerning the force of magic; and having alfo made fome reflections upon his own country, and mentioned the decalogue according to the order of the Old Testament, and the protestant doctrine, he was cenfured by the Sorbonne, and thereupon retracted thefe and fome other things advanced therein, as errors; fubmitting his faith in all points to the doctrine of the catholic and apostolic church.

In 1633, he was at Venice, where, among other things, he took an exact measure of the velicles brought from Cyprus and Constantinople, that were deposited in the treasury of St. Mark, at the request of the learned Peiresc, with whom he had been long acquainted, and who had a great esteem for him. During his abode in this city, he was invited to live with M. de la Thuillerie, the French ambalfador, as a companion. He accepted the invitation, but was not content with the fruitlefs office, of merely diverting the ambaffador's leifure hours by his learned conversation. He aimed to make himself of more importance, and to do this friend fome real fervice. He refolved therefore to acquaint himself with politics, and in that view wrote to his friend Gabriel Naudé, to send him a list of the authors upon political fubjects; and this request it was, that gave birth to Naudé's " Bibliographia Politica [F]." Gaffarell at this time was doctor of divinity and canon law, prothonotary of the apostolic see, and commendatory prior of St. Giles's. After his return home, he was employed by his patron cardinal Richelieu, in his project for bringing back all the protestants to the Roman church, which he calls a re-union of religions; and to that end was authorized to preach in Dauphiné against the doctrine of To the fame purpose he also published a piece purgatory. upon the pacification of Christians.

He furvived the cardinal many years, and wrote feveral books befides those already mentioned; a lift of fome of which is inferted below [G]. In the latter part of his life, he was emploved in writing a hiftory of the fubterranean world; containing an account of the caves, grottos, mines, vaults, and catacombs, which he had met with in thirty years travel: and the work was fo nearly finished, that the plates were engraven for it, and it was just ready to go to the prefs, when he died at Sigonce, of which place he was then abbot, in his 80th year, 1681; being also dean of canon law in the university of Paris, prior of le Revest de Brousse, in the diocese of Cisteron, and commandant of St. Omeil. His works shew him to have been a man of prodigious reading, and uncommon subtlety of genius; but he unfortunately had alfo a superstitious credulity, as appears from the following paffage in his "Unheard-of Curiofities." Treating of omens, he cites Camerarius, affirming that fome people have an apprehension and knowledge of the death of their friends and kindred, either before or after they are dead, by a certain ftrange and unufual reftleffnefs within themfelves, though they are a thoufand leagues off. To fupport this idle notion, he tells us, that his mother Lucrece de Bermond, when the was living, had fome fuch fign always given her: for none of her children ever died, but a little before the dreamt either of hair, eggs, or teeth mingled with earth; this fign, fays he, was infallible. I myfelf, when I had heard her fay the had any fuch dream, obferved the event always to follow [H].

GAGNIER (JOHN), an eminent Orientalift, was a native of Paris, where he was educated; and, applying himfelf to fludy the eaftern languages, became a great mafter in the Hebrew and Arabic. He was trained up in the Roman Catholic religion, but afterwards grew diffatisfied with it. Being, on this account, obliged to quit his native country, he came to Eugland, and embraced the faith and doctrine of that church, in the beginning of the 18th century. He was well received here, and met with many friends, who gave him handfome encouragement [1]. He had a mafter of arts degree conferred upon him at Cambridge; and, going thence to Oxford, for the fake of profecuting his fludies in the Bodleian library, he was admitted to the fame degree in that univerfity, where he fupported himfelf by teaching Hebrew.

In 1706, he published an edition of Joseph Ben Gorion's "History of the Jews," in the original Hebrew, with a Latin translation, and notes, in 4to. In 1710, at the appointment of Sharp, abp. of York, he affisted Grabe in the perusal of the Arabic manuscripts in the Bodleian library, relating to the Clementiae Constitutions: on which the abp. had engaged Grabe to write a treatife against Whiston. Gagnier accordingly read and interpreted diligently to Grabe all that might be ferviceable to his purpose in any of them.

In 1717, he was appointed to read the Arabic lecture at Oxford, in the abfence of the profeffor Wallis; and, in 1723, published Abulfeda's "Life of Mohammed," in Arabic, with a Latin translation and notes, at Oxford, in folio. He also prepared for the prefs the fame Arabic author's Geography; to which end he printed proposals for a subscription, but the attempt proved abortive for want of encouragement. It is faid that he wrote a life of Mahommed, in French, published in two vols. 12mo. at Amsterdam, in 1730. But this was probably a translation of the former life. Gagnier had before this inferted Graves's Latin translation of Abulfeda's defeription of Arabia, together with the original, in the third volume of GAGUIN (ROBERT), a French historian, was born at Colines near Amiens; and Guicciardini, as Voffius obferves, is miftaken in fixing his birth elfewhere. He had his education at Paris, where he took a doctor of laws degree; and the reputation of his abilities and learning became fo great, that it advanced him to the favour of Charles VIII. and Louis XII. by whom he was employed in several embassies to England, Germuny, and Italy. He was keeper of the royal library, and general of the order of the Trinitarians. He died in 1501, certainly not young; but we are not able to afcertain his age. He was the author of feveral works; the principal of which is, a Hiftory in eleven books " De gestis Francorum," in folio, from 1200 to 1500. He has been accused of great partiality to his country ; and Paul Jovius fays, that he has not been very exact in relating the affairs of Italy. Erasinus had a great value for him, as may be feen from one of his letters. He translated the Chronicle of abp. Turpin, wrote a bad Roman Hiftory, and fome Epiftles and Poems.

GAILLARD (DE LONJUMEAU), bifhop of Apt, from 1673 to 1695, in which year he died, is chiefly memorable for having firit projected a great and univerfal Hiftorical Dictionary, in the execution of which work he employed and patronized Moreri, who was his almoner. Towards the perfecting of this undertaking, he had refearches made in all the principal libraries of Europe, but particularly in the Vatican. Moreri, in dedicating his first edition to this patron, pays him the highest encomiums, which he is faid to have very thoroughly deferved, by his love for the arts, and still more by his virtues.

GAINAS, a Goth, whom his own valour and the weaknefs of the empire, raifed to the dignity of a Roman general. He caufed Rufinus, who afpired to the Imperial throne, to be put to death; and ruined the eunuch Eutropius, who probably had a fimilar ambition; but after his death, he continued to ravage the empire. The weak Arcadius met him at Chalcedonia to treat for peace. Not being able to obtain of St. Chryfoftom a church for the Arians, he fell upon Thrace with fire and fword. Flavitas repelled him to the Danube, where he was killed in the year 400. His head was expofed by Arcadius throughout the ftreets of Conftantinople.

GALAS (MATTHEW), a general in the Imperial fervice, was born in 1589, and from being page to baron Beaufremont, rofe to fuch a diffinction, that after the death of the famous Tilli, under under whom he had ferved, he was raifed to the rank of general. He rendered fignal fervice to the emperor Frederic II. and to Philip IV. of Spain. He even attempted to conquer Burgundy, but fuffered a defeat; and after fome fuccetles against the Swedes, being yet more completely defeated by Torstenson, near Magdebourg, he fell into difgrace. After fome time he was restored to the command, but did not long enjoy it, for he died foon after at Vienna. This event happened in 1647. He left behind him the reputation of being one of the greatest generals of his time.

GALATEO FERRARI (ANTONIO), was born in 1444, at Galatino in the territory of Otranto. His fludy was that of medicine, which, however, did not diminifh his attachment to Greek and Roman literature. He was intimate with Sannazarius and Pontanus, who efteemed him for his talents and acquirements, and by their intereft he was appointed phyfician to the king of Naples. But ill health combining with other circumftances to call him from court, he died at Lecce in his native province of Otranto in 1517. He wrote, 1. "A Defcription of the part of Italy called Japygia." 2. "A Tract in praife of the Gout." 3. "Verfes both in Italian and Latin," and feveral other performances.

GALE (THOMAS), an English furgeon, in the early days of the art in England. All that we know of him is collected from his writings. He was born in 1507; and educated under Richard Ferris, who was afterwards ferjeant furgeon to queen Elizabeth. He ferved Henry VIII. as furgeon in the army at Montrueil in 1544; and in the fame capacity he attended Philip H. of Spain at St. Quintin in 1557. He was afterwards fettled in London, and became very eminent in his profession. He was still diving in 1586, and a list of his writings, which are now more matters of curiofity than use, may be found in Bishop Tanner, and in Aikin's Biog. Mem. of Medicine.

GALE (JOHN), a learned divine, and an eminent preacher among the Baptifts, was born May 26, 1680, at London. His father was a citizen of good repute; and obferving the natural turn of his fon to be from his infancy grave and composed, he refolved to breed him for the ministry. He fpared no cost in his education, and the boy's diligence was fuch, that, both in fchool and out of fchool, he applied attentively to his learning. This gravity and industry were by no means the effect of  $[\kappa]$ dulnefs, on the contrary, he made fuch a proficiency, that he became not only master of the Latin and Greek, but of the Hebrew language also, at the age of feventeen; when he was fent to Leyden, to finish what he had so happily begun.

Soon after his arrival there, he received the news of his mother's death; and, being feufible that this would haften his return home, he made it a fpur to his induftry; and fo furprifing was his progrefs in academical learning, that he was thought worthy of the degrees of mafter of arts and doctor of philofophy in his 19th year, and accordingly received those honours in 1699, having performed the ufual exercises with universal applause [L]. This extraordinary testimony of his fon's merit, could not fail to be very acceptable to the father; and the rector of the university communicated it, in a strong letter of commendation. Upon this occasion, our author published his "Thesis," and dedicated it to his father and his two uncles, Sir John and Sir Joseph Wolf; and a noble attess of his merit was subjoined by Adrian Reland in a Latin panegyric.

Thus honoured at Leyden, he went to Amfterdam, where he continued his fludies under profeffor Limborch. At the fame time, he contracted an acquaintance with John Le Clerc, took all opportunities of vifiting him, fettled a correspondence with him, and became afterwards a zealous as well as able defender of his character [M]. Upon his return home, he continued his studies with equal ardor; and, improving himfelf particularly in the oriental languages, obtained critical skill in the books of the Old and New Testament. He had not been above four years thus employed, when the university of Leyden fent him an offer of a doctor's degree in divinity, provided he would affent to the Articles of Dort: but he result that honour, on the principle of preferving a freedom of judgment.

This was about 1703; and Wall's defence of Infant Baptifm coming out in lefs than two years after, proved an occasion for Gale to exert his talents in controvers. Soon after the publication of that book, he undertook to answer it, and pursued the subject in feveral letters written in 1705 and 1706; which were handed about in manuscript feveral years, till he confented to make them public in 1711, under the title of, "Reflections on Mr. Wall's History of Infant Baptism." The extraordinary merit of this piece raised him to the first place among the Baptist; yet he did not think fit to take upon himself the preacher's office immediately. He was five and thirty years of age before he began to preach conftantly and flatedly [N]; when he was chosen one of the ministers of the Baptist congregation in Paul's-alley near Barbican.

As he was zealous to maintain and propagate those notions which he thought authorized by primitive antiquity, he became chairman to a fociety for promoting primitive christianity, from July 3, 1715, to Feb. the 10th following. This fociety met every week, at Mr. Whiston's house in Crofs-street, Hattongarden, which they named the " Primitive Library." But though Dr. Gale testified a strong defire to extinguish all disputes among Christians, he was by no means willing to give up his own peculiar opinions. Hence was it that when Mr. Wall confented to hold a conference with him upon the fubject of Infant Baptifm, the difpute ended, as ufual, without any good iffue; and Wall was fo far from being fatisfied with the arguments of his, antagonist, that he drew up an answer to the Reflections, and published it under the title of, "A Defence of the History of Infant Baptism," in 1719. This book, as well as the History, was fo much approved by the univerfity of Oxford, that he was honoured with the degree of doctor of divinity upon the occa-It must be confessed, however, on the other hand, that fion. Dr. Gale's Reflections were not without confiderable advocates; and it is fupposed, that he meditated an answer to Dr. Wall's reply. A premature death prevented the execution of feveral defigns which he had formed, for the promotion of Oriental learning, and his own notions of scriptural knowledge, as he was feized with a fever, Dec. 1721.; of which, after an illness of about three weeks, he died, in his 42d year.

In his perfon, Dr. Gale was rather taller than the common fize, and of an open pleafant countenance; in his temper, of an eafy and affable behaviour, ferious without any tincture of morofenefs. In his manners and morals, chearful without levity, having a most perfect command over his passions. He was greatly esteemed by, and lived in friendship with, Bradford biss of Rochester, Hoadly bission of Bangor, and the lord chancellor King; men of the fame good fense, moderation, candour, and learning, with himself. After his death, a collection of his fermons were printed by subscription: the fecond edition whereof was published 1726, in 4 vols. 8vo. to which is prefixed an account of his life. It appears, from fome passings in his Funeral Sermon, that he was married; but we have no account of his family.

Of his best performance it may be faid, that, as Wall's Hiftory of Infant Baptism is the best vindication of this doctrine, so the answer of Gale is the best defence of the Baptists; which, as the subject had been handled by very great men before, is an ample commendation of both parties.

GALE (THEOPHILUS), a learned divine among the Nonconformists, was born in 1628, at King's-Teignton in Devonshire, where his father Dr. Theophilus Gale was then vicar, with which he likewife held a prebend in the church of Exeter. Being descended of a very good family in the West of England, his education was begun under a private preceptor, in his father's house, and he was then sent to a school in the neighbourhood, where he made a great proficiency in claffical learning, and was removed to Oxford in 1647. He was entered a commoner in Magdalen-college, a little after that city, with the univerfity, had been furrendered to the parliament; and their vifitors in the general reformation (as they called it) of the university, had put Dr. Wilkinfon into the prefidentship of Magdalen-college, who took particular notice of young Gale, and procured him to be appointed a demy of his college in 1648. But the current of kindnefs to him was far from stopping here ; he was recommended to the degree of batchelor of arts, Dec. 1649, by the commissioners, long before the time appointed for taking that degree by the statutes of the university [0], of which they were fo fensible, that care was taken by them to have a particular reafon fet forth, for conferring it fo early upon him; expreffing, that he was fully ripe for that honour, both in respect of his age, and the excellence of his abilities. It was probably owing to the countenance of the fame patrons, that he was chosen fellow of his college in 1650, in preference to many of his feniors, who were set aside to make room for him. It is acknowledged, however, that he deferved those distinctions. He took the degree of master of arts June 18, 1652, and being encouraged to take pupils, foon became an eminent tutor [P].

In the mean time he continued to profecute his own ftudies with vigour; and choofing divinity for his profession, applied himfelf particularly to that ftudy. On reading Grotius, on the "Truth of the Christian Religion," he began to think it possible to make it appear, that the wifest of the Pagan philofophers borrowed their more fublime contemplations, as well natural and moral, as divine, from the Scriptures: and that, how different sever they might be in their appearance, not only their Theology, but their Philosophy and Philology, were derived from the Sacred Oracles. Upon this principle, he undertook the arduous work, which from this time became the principal object of his theological refearches for many years [Q].

He did not, however, neglect the duties of the priefthood, and his difcourfes from the pulpit were fo many confpicuous proofs of his diftinguifhed piety and learning. He was invited to Winchefter, and became a flated preacher there in 1657; in this flation he continued for fome years, generally admired and efteemed, both for his excellent fermons and his exemplary life and converfation. But, being bred up in puritanical principles, he was unalterably devoted to them; fo that upon the re-eftablifhment of the church by Charles II. he could not prevail with himfelf to comply with the Act of Uniformity in 1661, and, rather than violate his confcience, choice to fuffer all the penalties of the law.

Thus excluded from the public fervice of his function, and deprived of his fellowship at Oxford, he found friends among his own party, and was taken into the family of Philip lord Wharton, in quality of tutor to his two fons. The state of the universities at home being now very discordant to the principles of lord Wharton, he fent his fons, with their tutor, in 1662, to Caen in Normandy, a feminary which flouriss at that time, under the direction of the most distinguissed professions of the reformed religion in France: among whom was the celebrated Bochart. With this learned divine, and feveral other perfons of distinguissed erudition, Gale became acquainted, and by this intercourse, as well as by travel, greatly improved himfelf, without neglecting his charge.

In 1665, he returned to England with his pupils, and attending them home to their father's feat at Quainton in Buckinghamshire, continued in the family till 1666: when, being released from this employ, he set out thence for London, and was struck on the road with the dreadful fight of the city in flames. The first shock being over, he recollected his own papers, his greatest treasure, which when he left England, he had committed to the care of a particular friend in London. He foon learnt that the house of this friend was burnt, and gave up his papers as loft, and with them all hopes of completing his great work. They had, however, by a fortunate accident, been preferved, and " the Court of the Gentiles" was deftined to receive its completion. At this period he became affiltant to Mr. John Rowe, his countryman, who had then a private congregation in Holborn; and continued in that flation till the death of his principal, Oct. 12, 1677, when Mr. Gale was chofen to fucceed him, together with Mr. Samuel Lee, his affiftant.

In the mean time the publication of his Court of the Gentiles had proceeded gradually, in confequence of the great care he took to complete and digeft his collections, and to make the work in all refpects a mafterly production. The first part was published at Oxford in 1669, and, being received with great applause, was followed by the other three, the last of which came out in 1677, the year when he succeeded Mr. Rowe.

But this work, large and laborious as it was, did not prove fufficient to employ his fpare hours: he wrote alfo, within the fame period, feveral other works; namely, 2. "The true Idea of Janfenifm, 1669," 4to. With a large preface by Dr. John Owen. 3. "Theophilus, or a Difcourfe of the Saints amity with God in Chrift, 1671," 8vo. 4. "The Anatomy of Infidelity, &c. 1672," 8vo. 5. "A Difcourfe of Chrift's coming, &c. 1673," 8vo. 6. "Idea Theologiæ tam contemplativæ quam activæ, ad formam S. S. delineata, 1673," 12mo. 7. "A Sermon, entitled, Wherein the Love of the World is inconfiftent with the Love of God, 1674;" printed alfo in the Supplement to the morning exercife at Cripplegate. 8. "Philofophia generalis in duas partes difterminata, &c. 1676," 8vo. 9. "A Summary of the two Covenants;" prefixed to a piece publifhed by him, entitled, "A Difcourfe of the two Covenants," written by William Strong, fometime preacher at the Abbey-church at Weftminfter. "The Life and Death of Thomas Tregoffe, Minifter of the Gofpel at Milar and Mabe in Cornwal, with his character," was alfo written by him, and publifhed in 1671, though he feems to have concealed the circumftance as much as poffible.

Such were the fruits of our author's studies; for the fake of profecuting which, with the privacy requifite, he chofe Newington for his retreat; where he inftructed a few young perfons under his own roof. But he was frequently visited by persons of distinction, and some of a different opinion from him in religious matters, out of a defire to teftify their efteem for unaffected piety and extensive learning. In 1678, he published propofals for printing by subscription, " Lexicon Græci Teftamenti Etymologicon, Synonymum, five Gloffarium Homonymum." This, as the title imports, was intended by him for a Lexicon and Concordance together : he finished it as far as the letter Iota, and the most confiderable words were also placed under other letters. But he was prevented from carrying it further by his death [R]; which happened in March that year, when he was not quite fifty. As to his character, befides what has been already mentioned, he was a most zealous Non-con-

Eut, notwithstanding this warm concern for fupporting and propagating his own communion, he was not without charity for those who differed from him, whom he would labour to convince, but not to compel; being as much an enemy to fedition, as he was to perfecution. Hence we find even Wood giving him all his just commendations, without those abatements and restrictions which are usual in his characters. It was allowed alfo, that, in his Court of the Gentiles, and other works, he thewed extensive learning, and confiderable abilities.

GALE (THOMAS) [s], celebrated for his knowledge of the Greek language and antiquities, and descended from a family confiderable in the North and East Riding of Yorkshire [T], was born in 1636, at Scruton in Yorkshire. He was sent to Westminster-school, and, being admitted king's-scholar there, was elected to Trinity college, Cambridge, and became Fellow of that Society. He took his degree of B. A. in 1656; of M. A. in 1662. In the profecution of his studies, he applied himself to classi-. cal and polite literature, and his extraordinary proficiency procured him early a feat in the temple of Fame. His knowledge of the Greek tongue recommended him, in 1666, to the Regius Professor of that language in the university [v]; and his majefty's choice was approved by the accurate edition which he gave of the ancient Mythologic writers, as well phyfical as moral, in Greek and Latin, published at Cambridge in 1671, This brought his merit into public view; and the fol-8vo. lowing year he was appointed head mafter of St. Paul's School in London; foon after which, by his majefty's direction, he drew up those inscriptions which are to be seen upon the Monument, in memory of the dreadful conflagration in 1666, and was honoured with a prefent of plate made to him by the city. His excellent conduct and commendable industry in the school abundantly appear, from the great number of perfons, eminently learned, who were educated by him: and, notwithstanding the

He accumulated the degrees of B. and D. D. in 1675 [x]; and June 7, 1676, was collated to the prebend Confumpt. per mare in the cathedral of St. Paul [y]. He was also elected into the Royal Society, of which he became a very constant and useful member, was frequently of the council; and prefented them with many curiofities, particularly a Roman urn with the afhes, found near Peckham in Surry (part of these burnt bones he gave to Mr. Thoresby) [z]; and in 1685, the society having refolved to have honorary fecretaries, who would act without any view of reward, Dr. Gale was chofen with Sir John Hofkyns into that office, when they appointed the celebrated Halley for their clerk-aflistant, or under-fecretary [A], who had been a distinguished scholar of our author's at St. Paul's School. Dr. Gale continued at the head of this school with the greatest reputation for 25 years [B], till 1697, when he was promoted to the deanry of York; and being admitted into that dignity Sept. 16, that year, he removed thither. This preferment was no more than a just reward of his merit, but he did not live to enjoy it many years. On his admission, finding the dean's right to be a canon-refidentiary called in queftion, he was at the expence of procuring letters patent in 1699, to annex it to the deanry, which put the matter out of all difpute. On his removal from London, he prefented to the new library, then lately finished at his college in Cambridge, a curious collection of Arabic manufcripts. During the remainder of his life, which was fpent at York, he preferved an hospitality suitable to his station; and his good government of that church is mentioned with honour. Nor has the care which he took, to repair and adorn that stately edifice, passed without a just tribute of praise c.

Having poffeffed this dignity little more than four years and a half, he was taken from the world, April 8; 1702, in his 67th year. He died in the deanery-house, and was interred with a. fuitable epitaph, in the middle of the choir of his cathedral. There is a fine portrait of him in the library of Trinity-college, Cambridge, the gift of his fon; and there is another at Scruton.

In Phil. Tranf. N° 231, is a letter from Thorefby to Lifter, 1697, concerning two Roman altars found at Collecton and Blenkinfop caftle in the county of Northumberland, with notes by Dr. Gale. This was the Greek infcription to Hercules. See Horfley, p. 245.

Dr. Gale married Barbara daughter of Thomas Pepys, efq; of Impington, in the county of Cambridge, who died 1689, and by whom he had three fons and a daughter. To his eldeft fon he left his noble library of choice and valuable books, befides a curious collection of many esteemed manuscripts, a catalogue of which is printed in the "Catalogus MSS torum Angliæ & Hiberniæ," III. p. 185.

GALE (ROGER), efq; F. R. and A. SS. eldeft fon of the dean, was educated at Trinity-college, Cambridge, 1691, made fcholar of that houfe 1693, and afterwards Fellow (being then B. A.) in 1697. He was polfeffed of a confiderable effate at Scruton, in Yorkfhire; and reprefented North Allerton, in that county, in the first, fecond, and third parliament of Great Britain, at the end of which last he was appointed a commissioner of excife. He was the first vice-prefident of the fociety of Antiquaries, and treasurer to the Royal Society. Though he was confidered as one of the most learned men of his age, he only published the following books;

1. "Antonini Iter Britanniarum Commentariis illustratum Thomæ Gale, S. T. P. nuper Decani Ebor. Opus posthumum revisit, auxit, edidit R. G. Mr. Gough has three copies of this edition, enriched with many valuable MS. notes by Mr. Roger Gale, Nicholas Man, efq. and Dr. Abraham Francke, fellow of Trinity-college, Cambridge, and rector of West Dene in Wiltschire, 1728; and a fourth with MS. various readings from the two MSS.

He prefented to Mr. Drake's History of York a plate of a beautiful little bronze female buft, which he fupposed to be a Lucretia, found at York, and in his possession, engraved by Vertue. To him also Mr. Drake acknowledges himfelf obliged for a difcovery that fixes the building of the Chapter-house at York to archbithop Grey. He died at Scruton, June 25, 1744, in his 72d year, univerfally efteemed, and much lamented by all his acquaintance; and left all his MSS. by will to Trinity-college, Cambridge [1], of which he was once fellow, and his cabinet of Roman coins to the public library there  $\lceil \kappa \rceil$ , with a complete catalogue of them drawn up by himfelf. His correspondence included all the eminent antiquaries of his time; and Mr. George Allan of Darlington is possessed, by the gift of his grandson, of a large collection of letters to and from him, the principal of which are printed in the Reliquiæ Galeanæ, as a valuable addition to antiquarian literature.

1754, at the age of 72. There are fome curious effays by him in the Archaelogia, published by the fociety of antiquaries.

GALEANO (JOSEPH), a phyfician of great repute at Palermo; and not for fkill and learning in his profeffion only, but for his tafte alfo, and knowledge of theology, mathematics, poetry, and polite literature in general, was born in 1605. There are feveral works of his in Italian, upon different maladies; and fome alfo in Latin, particularly "Hippocrates Redivivus paraphrafibus illuftratus," publifhed in 1650. We owe to him alfo a collection of little pieces of the Sicilian poets, in five volumes. He died in 1675, greatly regretted; for he was a kind of oracle with his countrymen.

GALEN (ĆLAUDIUS), after Hippocrates, prince of the Greek phyficians, was a native of Pergamus in the Leffer Afia, where he was born about A. D. 131, in the reign of the emperor Adrian. His father, whofe name was Nicon, was an able architect, and fpared neither trouble nor expence in the education of his fon. Galen fludied with fuccefs all the philofophy of his time, but finally applied himfelf to medicine as his profeffion. Satyro and Pelops, two eminent phyficians of his time, were his chief preceptors in that fcience. But his application to the works of Hippocrates contributed more than any other inftruction to the eminence he attained.

Having exhaulted all the fources of literature that could be found at home, he refolved to travel, in order to improve himfelf among the moft able phyficians in all parts; intending at the fame time to take every opportunity, which his travels would give him, of infpecting on the fpot the plants and drugs of the feveral countries through which he palled. With this view he went first to Alexandria, where he continued fome years, induced by the flourithing flate of the arts and fciences in that city. From thence he paffed into Cilicia; and, travelling through Palefline, vifited the ifles of Crete and Cyprus, and other places. Among the reft, he made two voyages to Lemnos, on purpofe to view and examine the Lemnian earth, which was spoken of at this time as a confiderable medicine. With the fame fpirit he went into the lower Tyria, to get a thorough infight into the true nature of the Opobalfamum, or balm of Gilead. Having completed his defign, he returned home by the way of Alexandria.

He was now only twenty-eight years of age, yet had made fome confiderable advances toward improving his art. He had acquired, for inflance, a particular skill in the wounds of the nerves, and was possessed of a method of treating them never known before; for Galen, as well as all other ancient physicians, united furgery to medicine. The pontiff of Pergamus gave him an opportunity of trying his new method upon the gladiators, and he was so fuccessful that not a fingle man perished by any  $Y_4$  wounds wounds of this kind. He had been four years at Pergamus, exercifing his faculty with unrivalled fame, when, being made uneafy by fome feditious diffurbances, he quitted his country. and went to Rome, refolving to fettle in that capital. But his views were disappointed. The physicians there, sensible of the danger of fuch a competitor, found means by degrees fo completely to undermine him, that he was obliged, after a few years, to leave the city. He had, however, in that time made feveral acquaintances, both of confiderable rank, and the first character for learning. Among others, he had a particular connection with Eudemus, a peripatetic philosopher of great repute. This perfon he cured of a fever, which from a quartan had degenerated into a triple quartan, by the ill-judged application which the patient had made of the theriacum; and what is fomewhat remarkable, Galen cured the malady with the fame medicine that had caused it; and moreover predicted when the fits would first ceafe to return, and in what time the patient would have entirely recovered. In effect, fo prodigious was his skill and fagacity in these fevers, that if we may believe his own words, he was able to predict from the first visit, or from the first attack, what species of a fever would appear, a tertian, quartan, or quotidian. He was also greatly efteemed by Sergius Paulus, prætor of Rome; as alfo by Barbarus, uncle to the emperor Lucius; by Severus, then conful, and afterwards emperor; and lastly, by Boethus, a perfon of confular dignity, in whofe prefence he had an opportunity of making diffections, and of fhewing, particularly, the organs of respiration and the voice. His reputation, likewife, was much increased by the fucces which he had in recovering the wife of Boethus, who on that occasion prefented him with four hundred pieces of gold. But that on which he valued himfelf most, was the cafe of a lady, who was faid to lie in a very dangerous condition; whofe diforder he difcovered to be love, the object of which was a rope-dancer; thus rivalling the discovery of the love of Antiochus for Stratonice, which had given fo much celebrity to Erafistratus.

After a refidence of about four or five years at Rome, he returned to Pergamus [1]. But he had not been there long, when the emperors Marcus Aurelius and Lucius Verus, who had heard of his fame, fent for him to Aquileia, where they then refided. He had no fooner arrived in this city, than the plague, which had fhewn itfelf a little before, broke out with fresh and greater fury, fo that the emperors were obliged to remove, attended by a very small retinue. Lucius died on the road, but his corpse was carried to Rome; and Galen found means, though not without fome trouble, to follow foon after. He had not been long returned; when Marcus acquainted him with his intention to take him in his train to Germany; but Galen excufed himfelf, alledging, that Æfculapius, for whom he had a particular devotion, ever fince the God cured him of a mortal impofthume, had advertifed him in a dream never to leave Rome again. The emperor yielding to his folicitations, he continued in the city; and it was during the abfence of Marcus that he compofed his celebrated treatife, "De ufu partium," and fome others.

All this while the faculty perfecuted him continually, infomuch that he was apprehensive of some design against his life. Under this fuspicion, he retired very often to a country-house, where Commodus the emperor's fon refided. That prince was then under the tuition of Pitholaus, to whom the emperor had given orders, if his fon fhould be taken ill, to fend for Galen. This order gave him an opportunity of attending the prince in a fever, which appeared very violent on the first access. He had the good fortune to remove the difeafe, and the following eulogium was made by Faustina the princess. "Galen," fays she, " shews his skill by the effects of it, while other physicians give us nothing but words." He alfo cured Sextus, another fon of Aurelius Marcus, and predicted the fuccefs, against the opinion of all his colleagues. Thus he raifed his fame above the reach of envy; and he continued not only to preferve, but increase it, The emperor, after his return from the German expedition, was fuddenly feized in the night with violent pains in the bowels, which, being followed by a great flux, threw him into a fever. Next day, he took a dofe of hiera picra, and another of the theriacum [M]; after which, the phyficians who had attended his perfon in the army, ordered him to be kept quiet, giving him nothing but a little broth for the fpace of nine hours. Galen, being called in foon after, attended with the reft, and they, upon feeling the patient's pulfe, were of opinion that he was going into an ague. The emperor, observing that Galen flood still

[M] The emperor during his abfence had fent to Galen to prepare the theriacum in the manner he had feen it done by his firft phyfician Demetrius. The commiffion was executed entirely to the fatisfaction of Marcus, as he fignified after his return to Rome. Galen obferves, that the emperor was a good judge of this medicine, being ufed to take it every day as a prefervative againft poifon; and he found that made by Galen fo good, that he refolved to make ufe of it foon after it was finished, contrary to the ufual cuftom of letting it ftand awhile, till the opium had loft fome of its foporiferous quality. Ibid. de Antidotis, lib. i. It is remarkable, that this medicine was fo much efteemed by a fucceffion of emperors after Nero, that in preparing it, they ordinarily examined the drugs themfelves. To this purpofe, we find our author obferving in the fame work (lib. xiii.) that he had made the theriacum for the emperor Severus, but it was not fo good as this made for Marcus; becaufe Commodus, who fucceeded this laft prince, had not taken care to get good drugs, the cinnamon efpecially, which was one of the principal, being bad.

without approaching him, asked the reason: Galen replied, that his pulfe being touched twice by his phyficians, he depended upon them, not doubting but they were better judges of the pulse than he was. The emperor, little fatisfied with this anfwer, immediately held out his arm. Whereupon Galen having confidered the pulfe with great attention, "I pronounce (fays he) that we have nothing to do here with the access of an ague: but the ftomach is overcharged with fomething that remains undigested, which is the true cause of the fever." These words were no fooner uttered, than the prince cried out aloud, " That is the very thing, you have hit the cafe exactly;" and repeating the words three times, asked what must be done for his relief. " If it was the cafe of any other perfon," replied Galen with exact addrefs, " I should order a little pepper infused in wine, which I have often tried with fuccess in this case; but as it is the cuftom to administer to fovereign princes only mild remedies, it fuffices to apply hot to the stomach a piece of flannel dipped in the oil of fpike." Marcus did not neglect to make use of both thefe remedies; and in the iffue fays to Pitholaus, his fon's governor, "We have but one phyfician [N]. Galen is the only valuable man of the faculty."

Thus diftinguished above his contemporaries, did this prince of physicians continue to practife at Rome, the capital of the world, till he was obliged to submit to fate. His death happened A. D. 201, in his 70th year. He had usually enjoyed a perfect state of health, the effect of observing a strict regimen both in diet and exercise: for, being subjected to frequent diforders in his younger days [0], he studied his own constitution, and having fixed the methods of preferving it, followed them strictly. This was nothing more than taking care to eat such meats as were of easy and equal digestion, abstaining particularly from fummer fruits, confining himself to figs and raisins, and using a constant and equal exercise. By following these rules, he never had any distemper, except once a fever of one day's continuance, occasioned by too much study and over-fatigue.

He was a man endowed with excellent parts, and, having the advantage of the best education, became not only an eminent physician, but also a great philosopher; and was particularly [N] It is fomewhat remarkable, that notwithftanding his frequent attendance, as well as cures performed upon this emperor, he never acquired the title of Archiater. Le Clerc's Hift. Lib. xi. c. i. p. 3. Perhaps the title was not coined at that time.

[0] Before he was eight and twenty, he hardly pailed a year without fome diforder; we have already mentioned an impofthume, which was cured by the affiftance of Æfculapius. Of this he gives the following account: "Being afflicted," fays he, " with a fixed pain in that part where the diaphragm is fastened to the liver, I dreamt, that Æfculapius advifed me to open that artery which lies between the thumb and fecond finger of my right hand. I did fo, and immediately found myself well."

happy in a facility of expression, and an unaffected eloquence. His flyle is Afiatic, however, that is, extremely diffuse; his fentences are fometimes perplexed, and fometimes absolutely obfcure. The great number of books which we have of his composing, to pass over those we have lost [P], are a convincing proof how little pains it cost him to write. Suidas tells us, that he wrote not only on physic and philosophy, but also on geometry and grammar. There are reckoned above five hundred books of his upon physic only, and about half that number upon other sciences. He even composed two books, containing a catalogue of his works; shewing the time and place in which some of them were composed, together with the occasion of writing them, and the proper order of reading them [Q].

As a physician, his character is too well known at this time of day to need any commendation. We shall only take notice of the efteem which the ancients had for him. Athenaus, his contemporary, fhews the great opinion he had of his merit as a philosopher, by making him a guest at his feast of the philosophers; where he not only compliments him upon the great number of his writings, but adds, that in elocution and perfpiculty of ftyle he was inferior to none [R]. Eusebius, who lived about an hundred years after him, obferves, that the veneration in which Galen was held as a phylician, was fuch, that many looked upon him as a God, and even paid him divine worfhip [s]: accord-ingly Trallian gives him the title of "most divine," Oribasius, who flourished soon after Eusebius, and was himself an Archiater [T], testified his esteem for Galen, by the extracts he made of his works, as well as by the praifes which he beftows upon him. Ætius and Paulus Ægineta have alfo copied Galen, especially the last, and his works were commented on by Stephen the Athenian. Avicenna, Averroes, and the reft of the Arabian phylicians, who take the best of what they have from Galen, have not been wanting in their praifes of him. After all, however, it is certain he had in his own time a confiderable party to contend with, and these latter ages have raised up some powerful adversaries to his name. The practice of Hippocrates, which he laboured to re-establish, did not triumph over the other fects, immediately upon Galen's declaring against them. The fect of the Methodists (as it was called) supported its credit for some ages from that time, and even furnished physicians to the emperors long after. Yet it gradually mouldered away; and notwithstanding the efforts of the moderns, the party of Galen is very numerous at this day.

Thus we have exhibited the bright fide of this phyfician's character, but we must not close this memoir without shewing the other fide alfo. For the greatest geniuses have their blemishes and defects, which too are often in proportion greater, or at least are feen more confpicuously, by being linked to fo much fplendor. The foible, which stands foremost on this fide of Galen's character, is his vanity. It is true, this is a weaknefs mostly incident to great talents; but in Galen it was so excessive, as to carry him beyond the bounds of prudence and decency, His writings are fulfomely filled with his own praifes, and he magnifies himfelf in the fame degree as he debafes other phyficians who differed from him; in refuting whom, he throws out the flowers of an acrimonious rhetoric with an unsparing hand. We have already given a convincing proof of the good opinion he entertained of himfelf, and how little forupulous he was to make his own eulogium in his recital of M. Aurelius's diforder. That whole book abounds with stories of the fame cast, which alfo at the fame time ferve to impeach him of pride alfo, and that the most unfociable species of it: I mean, a difdain and contempt of every body elfe upon the comparison. In this spirit, we see him giving way to most injurious reproaches against the methodists, whom he calls " the asses of Thessalus [u]". He observed, indeed, more decency towards Erasistratus, Afclepiades, and others of the more ancient phyficians; but still, among the praises he bestows upon them, there escapes from him haughtinefs enough. But he grows abfolutely infupportable, in the oftentatious parade which he makes of having done in phyfic fomething like what Trajan had done in the Roman empire. 16 No perfon whatfoever before me (fays he) hath fhewn the true method of treating difeafes. Hippocrates, indeed, pointed out the fame road; but as he was the first who discovered it, fo he went not fo far therein as was to be wifhed."

Galen is likewife reproached with being fuperfitious; and we have given an inftance of his opening a vein, in confequence of a dream. He tells us alfo in the fame place, that he had two more dreams of the fame kind; and fays in another place, that, being once confulted in the cafe of a fwelled tongue, he directed a purge, and fomewhat cooling to be held upon the part: the patient took the purge, and had a dream the fame night, in which he was ordered to apply a gargle of lettuce juice, which fucceeded very well [x]. But this fuperfittion was the religion of his country, of which Æfculapius, as he tells us, was the God [x], and was held to be that particular God whofe province it was to affift the fick in dreams.

He is alfo charged with bearing a particular enmity to the Chriftians: it is true that, fpeaking of the methodifts and other fects in phyfic, he fays, "That their feveral followers were as obftinately attached to their parties, as the difciples of Mofes and Chrift were to theirs." But this does not imply any particular ill-will against the Chriftians, or that he thought worse of them than the pagans generally did. As to the ftory that is told, of Galen's hearing in his old age of the miracles wrought in Judæa by the name of Jesus, and resolving to take a journey thither to fee them, but that he died on the road, or upon the borders of the country, after lying ill ten days of a fever [z]; it is merely a monkish forgery.

GALEOTI (MARTIO), was born at Narni in the papal territory, and was for fome time an inftructor of youth at Bologna, but removed and kept a private school in Hungary. Being there diftinguished by Matthias Corvinus king of Hungary, he was admitted into his family, made his private fecretary, and, it is fupposed, presided over the education of his fon John Corvinus. He was also keeper of the library at Buda. In this fituation his fame reached Louis the XIth king of France, who invited him into that kingdom. Galeoti went accordingly to meet the king at Lyons, but Louis happening to come out of the city, they met a little without the gates, and Galeoti, attempting to defcend haftily to pay due honours to the king, fell, and, being very fat, was fo much hurt that he died very foor after. In 1478, Galeoti published a collection of the bon-mots of Matthias Corvinus, inferted in the folio collection of writers on the hiftory of Hungary. There is also by him a treatife in quarto, entitled, " De homine interiore et de corpore ejus." The monks accused him of herefy, and he had fome contentions with them, but he was protected by pope Sixtus IV. who had been his pupil.

GALIGAI (ELEONORA), the family name of the marechale d'Ancre, wife of Concini, marechal d'Ancre. (See CONCINI.) Nothing can be more extraordinary than the hiftory of this woman. Born in very humble life, the daughter of a joiner, and [x] Ibid. lib. xiv. c. 8. No wonder, that the God fhould indicate a medicine of the fame nature which Galen had directed. There is plainly nothing more in it than this: the patient had in his head fome cooling remedy all day, and dreamt at night that the juice of lettuce was what he wanted; and at the fame time dreamt that Æsculapius told him to apply that juice. It would be wrong to think the patient lefs credulous than the doctor, who had fo much faith in Æsculapius.

a washerwoman in Italy, she enjoyed for some time an irresselible dominion in France; and perished at last by a judicial sentence pronounced upon her for crimes; fome of which were not proved, and others impossible to be committed. She was fosterfifter to Mary of Medicis, who loved her with the tenderest affection. It was, doubtlefs, the favour fhe enjoyed with this princefs, that induced Concini to marry her, for the was plain to a most formidable degree. Her talents, however, made amends for the defects of her perfon. They went into France with Mary of Medicis, whom madame Concini governed fo completely, that the made herfelf virtually queen, and afterwards regent of France. She could not bear her elevation with fufficient felf-command, but at length by her exceffive infolence, fo difgusted Louis XIII. the fon of her protectress, that he gave her up to that destruction which the envy and hatred of the court at large was perfectly prepared to bring upon her. Concidi was alfaffinated, or fomething nearly equivalent, by order of the king; and his wife, who might have been fent away into Italy, was brought to a trial, in which, for want of other crimes fufficient of themselves to justify her condemnation, she was acculed of forcery. Being afked by what magic she had so fascinated the queen, her answer is very famous: " By that power," faid fhe, " which ftrong minds naturally poffefs over the weak." She was condemned in May, and executed in July, 1617. She died with the utmost fortitude and refignation. She left a fon and a daughter; the latter died foon after the mother; the fon, though he loft his nobility, retired into Italy, with an ample fum, which the avarice of his parents had grafped and accumulated.

Galigai is faid to have received the news of her hufband's death in a manner which fhewed them to have been united rather by interest than affection. She did not shed a tear, and her first care was to conceal her jewels. She put them into the matting of her bed, and caufing herfelf to be undreffed, got into bed: but the provoft's men, who went into her chamber to fearch for them, made her get up, and found them. She faid afterwards to those that guarded her, "Well; they have killed my husband, does not that fatisfy them? Let me be fuffered to leave the kingdom." When fhe was told that they had hung up his body, the appeared to be moved, but without weeping; and foor after faid, that " he was a prefumptuous infolent man; that he had. met with nothing but what he deferved; that he had not been in bed with her for the last three years; that he was a bad man; and that, to get rid of him, fhe had determined to retire into Italy that fpring, and had prepared every thing for her journey;" which fhe offered to prove. At her trial fhe behaved with much affurance, feemed not to apprehend any danger, and even faid that she hoped to be taken again into favour.

GALILEI (GALILEO), the celebrated aftronomer and mathematician, was the fon of Vincenzo Galilei, a nobleman of Florence, not lefs diftinguished by his quality and fortune, than confpicuous for his skill and knowledge in music; about some points in which science he maintained a dispute with the famous Zarlinas. His wife brought him this fon [A], Feb. 19, 1564, either at Pifa, or, which is more probable, at Florence. Galileo received an education fuitable to his birth, his tafte, and his abilities. He went through his studies early, and his father then wished that he should apply himself to medicine; but having obtained at college fome knowledge of mathematics, his genius declared itself decisively for that study. He needed no directions where to begin. Euclid's Elements were well known to be the best foundation in this science. He, therefore, set out with reading that work, of which he made himfelf mafter without affistance, and proceeded thence to fuch authors as were in most esteem, ancient and modern. His progress in these sciences was so extraordinary, that, in 1589, he was appointed professor of mathematics in the university of Pifa, but being there continually harraffed by the scholastic professors, for opposing some maxims of their favourite Aristotle, he quitted that place at the latter end of 1592 for Padua, whither he was invited very handfomely to accept a fimilar profefforship: foon after which, by the efteem arifing from his genius and erudition, he was recommended to the friendship of Tycho Brache [B]. He had already, even long before 1686, written his "Mechanics," or a treatife of the benefits derived from that science and from its instruments, together with a fragment concerning percuffion [c]; as alfo his " Balance," wherein, after Archimedes's problem of the crown, he shewed how to find the proportion of alloy, or mixt metals, and how to make the faid inftrument. These he had read to his pupils, foon after his arrival at Padua, in 1593.

While he was professor at Padua, in 1609, visiting Venice, then famous for the art of making glass, he heard of the invention of the telescope by James Metius in Holland. This notice was fufficient for Galileo; his curiosity was raifed; and the refult of his enquiry was, a telescope of his own, produced from this hint, without having feen the Dutch glass. All the discoveries he made in astronomy were easy and natural confequences of this invention, which opening a way, till then unknown, into the heavens, thereby gave that science an entirely new face. Galileo, in one of his works, ridicules the unwillingness of the Aristotelians to allow of any discoveries not known to their mas-

[B] Tychonis Vita, p. 174. Paris, 1674, 4to. [c] The first of these was published by Mersennus at Paris, in 1634, inter Mersenni opera, vol. i. and both of them by Menoless. vol. i. ter, by introducing a fpeaker who attributes the telescope to him, on account of what he fays of feeing the ftars from the bottom of a deep well. " The well," fays he, " is the tube of the tetelescope, the intervening vapours answer to the glasses." He began by observing the moon, and calculating the height of her mountains. He then discovered four of Jupiter's fatellites, which he called the Medicean stars or planets, in honour of Cosmo II. grand-duke of Tuscany, who was of that noble family. Cosmo now recalled him from Padua, re-established him at Pifa, with a very handfome flipend, in 1610; and the fame year, having lately invited him to Florence, gave him the post and title of his principal philosopher and mathematician.

It was not long before Galileo discovered the phases of Venus, and other celestial phænomena. He had been, however, but a few years at Florence, before he was convinced by fad experience, that Aristotle's doctrine, however ill-grounded, was held too facred to be called in question. Having observed some folar spots in 1612, he printed that discovery the following year at Rome; in which, and in fome other publications, he ventured to affert the truth of the Copernican fystem, and brought feveral new arguments to confirm it [D]. This startled the jealoufy of the Jesuits, who thereupon procured a citation for him to appear before the Holy-office at Rome, in 1615; where he was charged with herefy, for maintaining thefe two propositions: I. That the fun is in the centre of the world, and immoveable by a local motion; and, 2. That the earth is not the centre of the world, nor immoveable, but actually moves by a diurnal motion. The first of these positions was declared to be absurd, falle in philosophy, and formally heretical, being contrary to the express word of God: the fecond was also alledged to be philosophically false, and, in a theological view, at least erroneous, in point of faith. He was detained in the Inquifition, till Feb. 1616, on the 25th of which month fentence was passed against him; whereby he was enjoined to renounce his heretical opinions, and not to defend them either by word or writing, nor even to infinuate them into the mind of any perfon whatfoever; and he obtained his discharge only by a promise to conform himfelf to this order. It is hard to fay, whether his fentence betrayed greater weaknefs of understanding, or perversity of will. Galileo clearly faw the poifon of both in it; wherefore, following the known maxim, that forced oaths and promifes are not binding to the confcience, he went on, making further new difcoveries in the planetary fystem, and occasionally publishing them with fuch inferences and remarks as necessarily followed from them, notwithstanding they tended plainly to establish the truth of the abovementioned condemned propositions.

He continued many years confidently in this course, no juridical notice being taken of it; till he had the prefumption to publish at Florence his "Dialogi della due massime Systeme del mondo, Tolemaico et Copernicano;" Dialogues of the two greatest systems of the world, the Ptolemaic and Copernican, in 1632. Here, in examining the grounds upon which the two fystems were built, he produces the most specious as well as ftrongeft arguments for each of those opinions; and leaves, it is true, the question undecided; as not to be demonstrated either. way, while many phænomena remained infolvable. But this is done in fuch a manner, that his inclination to the Copernican fystem might be easily perceived. Nor had he forborne to enliven his production by feveral fmart strokes of raillery against those who adhered so obstinately, and were such devotees to Aristotle's opinions, that they thought it a crime to depart the breadth of a needle's point from them.

Here was matter enough to fet the holy brotherhood in a flame. Accordingly, he was again cited before the Inquifition at Rome; the congregation was convened; and, in his prefence, pronounced fentence against him and his books. They obliged him to abjure his errors in the most folemn manner, committed him to the prifon of their office during pleafure, and enjoined. him, as a faving penance for three years, to repeat once a week the feven penitential pfalms; referving, however, to themfelves the power of moderating, changing, or taking away altogether, or in part, the abovementioned punishment and penance. Upon this fentence he was detained a prisoner till 1634, and his " Dialogues of the System of the World" were burnt at Rome. One shall rarely meet with a more glaring instance of blindness and bigotry than this [E]; and it was treated with as much contempt by our author as confifted with his fafety.

He lived ten years after it, seven of which were employed in making still further discoveries with his telescope: but, by continual application to that inftrument, added to the damage he received in his fight from the nocturnal air, his eyes grew gradually weaker, till, in 1639, he became totally blind. He bore this great calamity with patience and refignation, worthy of a philosopher. The loss neither broke his spirit, nor hindered the course of his studies. He supplied the defect by constant meditations, whereby he prepared a large collection of materials; and began to dictate his own conceptions, when, by a differiper of three months continuance, walting away by degrees, he expired at Arcetri near Florence [F], Jan. 8, 1642, in his 78th year, and was privately buried. In stature he was small, but in afpect venerable, and his conftitution vigorous; in company he was affable and free, and full of pleafantry. He took great delight in architecture and painting, and defigned extremely well. He played admirably on the lute; and, as often as he fpent any time in the country, took great pleafure in hufbandry. He was the author of feveral noble and ufeful inventions and difcoveries in astronomy, geometry, and mechanics: the principal of which, befides those already mentioned, are in the first of those fciences, the trepidation or vibration of the moon, as alfor the inequalities or mountains in its furface. By the frequent eclipfes of the Medicean stars, he had thoughts of finding out the longitude much better than by the lunar eclipses; upon which he composed his tables of their motions, leaving them with Vincenzo Renieri, a mathematician of Pifa, who, correcting and perfecting them, intended them for the prefs. In geometry, he invented the cycloid, or trochoid; and, in mechanics, first found the exact degree of celerity in the defcent of bodies by the force of gravity.

His various works were collected in three volumes, 4to, in 1718, under the title of "L'Opera di Galilei Lynceo." Some of these, with others of his pieces, were also translated into English, and published by our countryman, Thomas Salisbury, efq. in his " Mathematical Collections," &c. in two volumes, folio: the fecond whereof contains an account of his life, to which we owe most of the materials in this article. A volume alfo of his letters to feveral learned men, and folutions to feveral problems, was printed at Bologna, in 4to. Besides these, he wrote many others, unfortunately lost through his wife's devotion, who, folicited by her confessor, gave him leave to peruse her hufband's manufcripts, of which he tore and took away as many as, he faid, were not fit to be allowed. He left a fon, named Vincenzo, after his grandfather, a man of great learning and genius, and author of feveral inventions in mechanics and music [G]. Galileo's last disciple, Vincenzo Viviani, proved likewise an eminent mathematician; he methodized a piece of his master's, and published it under this title, " Quinto libro de gli Elementi d'Euclidi," &c. published some more of Galileo's writings, the titles whereof may be feen below [H]. Torricelli, alfo, the inventor of the barometer, was his pupil.

GALLAND (AUGUSTUS), was proctor-general of the domain of Navarre, counfellor of state, and deeply versed in the knowledge of the royal rights in France, and in the hiftory of that country. His works are replete with a curious and profound erudition. They are, 1. " Memoirs for the History of France and Navarre," folio. 2. " Treatifes on the Enfigns and Standards of France," &c. 3. " Discourse addressed to the King on the Origin and Rife of the City of Rochelle," 8vo. 4. " A Treatife against the Franc-alleu, a claim of Exemption from Imposts and personal Services," in 4to. He is supposed to have died about 1644, but at what age is uncertain.

GALLAND (ANTONY), a learned antiquary of France, member of the Academy of Inscriptions, and professor of Arabic in the royal college at Paris, was born of poor parents at Rollo, a little town of Picardy, in 1646. After having laid the foundation of learning at Noyon, he went to Paris to perfect it. There he learned Hebrew and the Oriental languages; and afterwards made a long voyage into the East, where he acquired an uncommon knowledge of the manners and of the doctrines of the Mahometans. He returned to his own country, and was made Arabic professor in 1709; but did not live many years after, his death happening at Paris in 1715. He was the author of feveral works, the principal of which are, 1. " An account of the death of Sultan Ofman, and of the coronation of the Sultan Mustapha." 2. " A collection of Maxims and Bon Mots drawn from the Oriental writers." 3. "A Treatife upon the origin of Coffee." 4. "Arabian Tales." All thefe are in French. He was the author alfo of many curious differtations upon fome fcarce medals, which have been highly commended. He had likewife prepared a translation of the Alcoran, with notes; and a fystem of the Mahometan theology, more exact than any that has yet appeared: but he did not live long enough to publish them.

GALLIENUS, the emperor, fon of Valerian, and affociated, with him in the empire, from the time of his accession in 253. When his father was taken prifoner by Sapor king of Perfia, in 260, he became sole emperor, but very ingloriously suffered his father to languish in captivity, without attempting to obtain his release. He had been distinguished in arms before his final elevation, but from that time became remarkable chiefly for effeminate luxury, cruelty, and unfeeling infenfibility, even to his own interests and glory. When countries and provinces were loft, he only asked, whether the empire could not exist without their productions. His refeript to Verianus concerning the manner of treating the revolted Illyrians, is a fufficient proof of his inhuman cruelty. He writes thus. " I shall not be pleafed with you, if you put to death only those who bear arms, whom the fate of war might have carried off. All the males should be massacred, if old men and children could be put to death without giving room to blame us. I order you to kill every one who has been ill-difpofed towards me : every one who has spoken against me, the son of Valerian, the father and brother of fo many princes. Ingenuus was proclaimed emperor: then tear, flay, cut in pieces. That you may completely understand me, adopt the very anger of my mind [1] who have written these orders with my own hand [K]." This dreadful cruelty continually produced new revolts. Yet when Odenatus, prince of Palmyra was fuccefsful against Sapor in the east, as commander of the Roman forces, Gallienus had the abfurd vanity to have a triumph for it at Rome, by which he made himfelf ridiculous as well as odious. At length, in 268, while he was besieging the rebel Aureolus in Milan, his generals Marcian and Claudius confpired against him, and caused him to be affaffinated. So hateful was his name in Rome, that the rejoicings at his death were in danger of rifing to a very formidable tumult : yet this strangely depraved man had courage, eloquence, learning, wit, and genius. He was even a good poet, if we may judge by five verfes which remain of an Epithalamium which he made for his nephews, beginning " Ite, agite, O juvenes [L]." Indeed his hiftorian fays expressly, that he furpaffed all the writers of his age, both in his orations and in his verfes. Of his wit, no bad specimen appears in the anecdote of his giving the crown of victory to a wretched archer, who had missed a bull ten times, faying, "It is a very difficult thing to mifs a bull fo often." Gallienus was indulgent to the Chriftians. GALLIGAI. See GALIGAI.

GALLITZIN (BASIL), a nobleman of one of the most il-Instrious and powerful families in Ruffia, greatly favoured, and much confulted, by the regent princefs Sophia, fifter of the minor ezars Peter I. and Iwan Alexowitz, who reigned jointly. He was of an ambitious and intriguing character, and not a little fuspected of defiring to afcend the throne himfelf. He had feveral great appointments, as that of viceroy of Cafan and of Aftracan, and keeper of the great feals of Ruffia. But he was not fuccefsful in his military expeditions, and his failure in this point caufed his ruin. After an unfortunate expedition against the Tartars, he was recalled to Mofcow in 1688, where, though he was well received by the czar Iwan, he was feverely reproached by the other czar, Peter, for his ill fuccefs. In 1689 he folicited to be fent out again in hopes of recovering his glory, but this campaign ended no better than the former, and the intrigues of his protectrefs Sophia, who plotted to deftroy her brother Peter, and marry Gallitzin, being discovered, she was confined in a monastery which she had built near Moscow, and he was banifhed to Kargapol in Siberia. His vaft fortune, which he had accumulated by various exactions, was confifcated; and thus ended the regency. Some time after, his exile was alleviated, by permitting him to refide near Mofcow, at an effate he was allowed to retain; and he retired at length to a monaftery, where he lived in great aufterity, and died in 1713 at the age of 80. Notwithstanding his faults and misfortunes, Gallitzin is justly regarded as a perfon to whom the Ruffian empire is much indebted: he made feveral regulations which tended to introduce civilization and better arrangement, and is confidered as having prepared the way for the exertions of the great Peter II.

GALLITZIN (MICHAEL, MICHAELOWITZ, prince of), was born in 1674, and of the fame family as the preceding. He ferved under the czar Peter the Great, in his war against Charles the XIIth, and was in almost all his battles by land and fea. After having commanded upwards of ten years in Finland, he put a happy termination to that war by the peace of Neusstatt. His fervices were not without their reward. In 1725, he was made field marshall, and after the death of the czar, was declared prefident of the college of war. He died in 1730 with the reputation of a great general, and an able minister. A favourable trait of his character is that, when after the victory at Lerna in 1708, the czar offered him his choice of his reward, he asked only the pardon of one of the captives. He had a fon who fignalized himself in the Russian army in 1769.

GALLOCHE (LOUIS) a painter celebrated in the French School, the difciple of Boullongne, and matter of le Moine, was the author of feveral capital pictures in the principal churches of Paris. He had the honour of being lodged and penfioned by the king, and died rector and chancellor of the Royal Academy in 1761, at the advanced age of 91.

GALLOIS (JOHN), a learned Frenchman, was born of a good family, at Paris, in 1632. He had fludied divinity, ecclefiaftical and profane hiftory, philosophy, mathematics, the Z 3 oriental, oriental, together with the Italian, Spanish, English, and Geraman languages [M]: in fhort, he was an universal scholar, He is now memorable chiefly for having been the first who publisted the Journal des Scavans, in conjunction with M. de Sallo, who had formed the defign of this work. The first journal was published on Jan. 5, 1665: but these gentlemen played the critics To rigoroully, and cenfured the new books with fo much feverity, that the whole tribe of authors role up against their work, and effectually cried it down. De Sallo abandoned it entirely, after having published a third journal, in March following, Gallois was determined to continue it, yet did not venture to fend out a fourth journal till Jan. 1666, and then not without a most humble advertisement in the beginning of it, wherein is declared, that the author " will not prefume to criticize, but only fimply to give an account of books." This, and the protection shewn by the minister Colbert, who was greatly taken with the work, gradually reconciled the public to what it at first was extremely prejudiced against. Thus began Literary Journals, which have been continued from that time to this under various titles, and by various authors; among whom are the illustrious names of Bayle and Le Clerc, Gallois continued his journal to the year 1674; when more important occupations obliged him to drop it, or rather transfer it to another perfon. Colbert had taken him into his house the year before, with a view of being taught Latin by him; and the minister of state, it is faid, took most of his leisons in his coach, as he journeyed from Verfailles to Paris. Voltaire observes on this occasion, that " the two men, who have been the greatest patrons of learning, Louis XIV. [N] and Colbert, neither of them understood Latin." Gallois had been made member of the Academy of Sciences in 1668, and of the French Academy in 1673. He loft his patron in 1683; and then, being at liberty, was first made librarian to the king, and afterwards Greek professor in the Royal-college. He died of the dropfy in 1707; and, in 1710, a catalogue of his books was printed at Paris, confifting of upwards of 12,000 volumes. It is remarkable of this learned man, that though he had ferved many friends by his interest with Colbert, yet he had neglected to make any provision for himfelf: whence it happened, that, at the death of that minister, he was but in poor circumstances, although an abbé.

GALLONIO (ANTONIO), a priest at Rome, celebrated for his writings on the faints, martyrs, and holy virgins. He publisted, 1. in 1591, his most celebrated work in 4to. entitled, " Trattato de gli instrumenti di Martirio," a treatise on the instruments of Martyrdom, ornamented with fine engravings, by

In the fame year (1591) his "History of the Virgins," also in Italian. 3. "The Lives of certain Martyrs," 4to. 1597. 4. "The Life of St. Philip Neri;" and, 5. "De Monachatu Sancti Gregorii," the account of St. Gregory when a monk, in 1604. Gallonio died in 1605.

GALLUCCI (TARQUINIO), an Italian jesuit, who publissed a small volume of orations on various literary arguments, an oration recited by him at the funeral of cardinal Bellarmine, also "Virgilianæ Vindicationes," with three commentaries on Tragedy, Comedy, and Elegy, 4to. Rome, 1621. He was a strenuous defender of Virgil, in whose behalf, against Homer, he contended with Madam Dacier. He was born in 1574, and died in 1649.

GALLUCCI (GIOVANNI PAULO) a learned Italian astronomer, whose works on that subject are considerable, flourished in the fixteenth century. He published a treatise in 4to. "Degli Stromenti di Astronomia," on the instruments of astronomy. Venice, 1597 2. "Speculum Uranicum," solio. 3. "Cœlestium Corporum explicatio," solio: also, 4. "Theatrum mundi et temporis," folio.

GALLUCCI (ANGELO), another Italian jesuit, born at Macerata, wrote "Commentarii de Bello Belgico," from the year 1593 to 1609, published at Rome in 1671, in two volumes folio. The author died in 1674.

GALLUS (CORNELIUS), an ancient Roman poet, and person of distinction, was born at Frejus, then called Forum Julium, in France. He was the particular favourite of Augustus Cæfar, who made him the governor of Egypt, after the death of Antony and Cleopatra; but he was guilty of fuch mal-administration in his government, that he was condemned to banishment, and deprived of his estate. This disgrace so afflicted him, that he put an end to his life, when he was about forty-three years of age. Virgil has complimented him in many places; and the whole tenth Eclogue is on the subject of his love to Ly-. coris, the poetical name of Gallus's miltrefs, whole cruel difdain is there lamented. Gallus had written four books of Elegies on his amour, which Propertius commends; but Quintilian thinks him not fo tender as Tibullus or Propertius. As to those fix Elegies which have been published under his name, the critics are agreed that they are spurious. Aldus Manutius met with some fragments at Venice ascribed to Gallus; which, though written in a better tafte than the former, Joseph Scaliger has proved to be alfo spurious. Gallus died the year of Rome 728, seven years before Virgil.

GALLUS (VIBIUS TREBONIANUS), emperor of Rome for part of three years, was born about 206, but of what family is not known. All that appears of his previous life is that he had been conful, and was a commander in the army of Decius in 251, when he is faid to have betrayed that emperor to the Goths, that he might become his fucceffor. His reign, however, was indolent and inglorious, and the foldiery, who had raifed him to the empire, finding him unworthy of that dignity, murdered him, with his own fon and affociate Volufianus, in 253.

GALLY (HENRY), born at Beckenham, in Kent, in August 1696, [0]; was admitted pensioner of Bennet College, under the tuition of Mr. Fawcett, May 8, 1714, and became fcholar of the house in July following. He took the degree of M. A. in 1721, and was upon the king's lift for that of D. D. (to which he was admitted April 25, 1728) when his majefty honoured the univerfity of Cambridge with his prefence. In the year 1721 he was chosen lecturer of St. Paul's Covent Garden, and inftituted the fame year to the rectory of Wavenden, or Wanden, in Buckinghamshire. The lord chancellor King appointed him his domestic chaplain in 1725, preferred him to a prebend in the church of Gloucester in 1728, and to another in that of Norwich about three years after. He prefented him likewife to the rectory of Afhney, alias Afhton, in Northamptonshire, in 1730; and to that of St. Giles's in the Fields, in 1732; his majefty made him also one of his chaplains in ordinary in October 1735. Dr. Gally died August 7, 1769. He was the author of, 1. "Two sermons on the Misery of Man, preached at St. Paul's Covent-Garden, 1723," 8vo. 2. " The Moral Characters of Theophrastus, translated from the Greek, with notes, and a Critical Effay on Characteristic Writing, 1725," 8vo. 3. " The Reafonableness of Church and College Fines afferted, and the Rights which Churches and Colleges have in their Estates defended, 1731," 8vo. This was an anfwer to a pamphlet called "An Enquiry into the Cuftomary Estates and Tenants of those who hold Lands of Church and other Foundations by the tenure of three Lives and twenty-one years. This was much enlarged in a fecond edition the year following. 6. " A Differtation against pronouncing the Greek language according to Accents, 1754," 1755, 8vo. 7. not noble, till made fo by the honours he acquired. In 1497, Emanuel king of Portugal, earneftly defirous of making difcoveries in those parts of the globe, appointed Gama to command an expedition to endeavour to fail round the Cape, then called the Cape of Tempests. Vasco highly pleased with this appointment, which fuited his undaunted and adventurous fpirit, failed from the Tagus, July 8, having two fhips befides his own, and a ftore fhip. At Lifbon he was generally confidered as going to certain destruction, and the whole equipment as devoted; but though, on his approach to the Cape, he actually encountered dreadful ftorms, his perfeverance was not to be conquered. Like Columbus, he had to contend with the mutinous despondence of his own people, as well as with the elements, but was fuperior to all. Having doubled the Cape on the 20th of November, he failed along the eaftern coaft of Africa, but met with inveterate hostility and treachery from the Moorish fettlers, except the king of Melinda. He proceeded as far as Calicut, doubled the Cape again in April 1499, and returned to Lifbon in the fpace of two years and almost two months. The king and nation were overjoyed at this fuccefs, and he was created count of Vidiguere, and admiral of the Indian, Perfian, and Arabian feas. Gama now rested a few years, while Cabral was sent out with thirteen fhips; and John de Nova, with a reinforcement of three more, visited Calicut; but it was found that greater force was wanted, and in 1502, he fet fail again, having twenty ships under his command. He returned in September 1503, with thirteen fhips laden with riches. When Emanuel, king of Portugal died, the credit of Gama continued unimpaired, and in 1524, he was by his fucceffor, John III. appointed viceroy of India. He returned thither a third time, and established his feat of government at Cochin, but died on the 24th of December 1525, almost as foon as he was fettled. He was honoured with the title of Don for himfelf and his posterity, and created a grandee of Portugal. Gama was formed by nature to conduct the most arduous enterprises. His intrepidity, which was invincible, was not more remarkable than his fagacity and prudence : and the feelings of his heart appear to wonderful advantage, when we find him, amidst all the extravagance of public applause, after his first return from India, drooping for the loss of his brother and companion of his voyage, Paulus de Gama, and unable to enjoy his fame. He had even fent his flag ship home before him, under the command of Coello, his next officer, that he might attend and foothe the death-bed of this beloved brother. Such a victory of tenderness over ardent and successful ambition, gives a better picture of his heart than the most elaborate eulogium. The poem of Camoens, entitled "The Lufiad," on Gama's first expedition, is now well known in this country. GAMACHES

GAMACHES (STEPHEN, SIMON), a writer of fome eminence, and a member of the French Academy of Sciences, who died at Paris in 1756, at the age of 84, was the author of the following works. 1. "Physical Astronomy," 4to. 1740. "Literary and Philosophical Differtations," 8vo. 1755. " System of the Christian Philosopher," 8vo. 1721. 4. " System of the Heart, published in 1708, under the feigned name of Clerigny." 5. " The Elegancies of Language reduced to their Principles," a book called by one writer, the Dictionary of fine Thoughts, and by others pronounced to be a work which every man who writes fhould read.

GAMBARA (LORENZO), an Italian poet of the fixteenth century, protected and beloved by cardinal Alexander Farnefe, whofe writings were much esteemed in his day, but now are thought flat and infipid. He wrote, I. "A Latin Treatife on Poetry, in which he disfuades Christian Poets, from using Pagan. Mythology." 2. " A Latin Poem on Columbus." Alfo Eclogues, entitled, " Venatoria," and other productions. Muretus wrote in his copy of Gambara's Works,

He died in 1586, at the age of 90.

GAMBOLD (JOHN), [P] a truly primitive Christian, and a bishop among the Moravian brethren, was born near Haverford Weft in South-Wales, and became a member of Chriftchurch, Oxford, where he took the degree of M. A. May 30, 1734; and was afterwards vicar of Stanton Harcourt, in Oxfordshire. At this place, in 1740, he wrote " The Martydom of Ignatius, a Tragedy," published after his death by the rev. Benjamin La Trobe, with the Life of Ignatius, drawn from authentic accounts, and from the Epiftles written by him from Smyrna and Troas in his way to Rome, 1773, 8vo. A fermon, which he preached before the university of Oxford, was published under the title of "Christianity, Tidings of Joy, 1741," 8vo. In 1742, he published at Oxford, from the university-press, a neat edition of the Greek Testament, but without his name, " Textu per omnia Milliano, cum divisione pericoparum & interpunctura A. Bengelii," 12mo. Joining afterwards the Church of the Brethren [Q], established by an act of parliament of the year 1749 [R], and known by the name of "Unitas Fratrum," or, The United Brethren; he was, for many years, the regular minister of the congregation settled at London, and refided in Neville's-court, Fetter-lane, where he preached at the chapel of the fociety. His connexion with thefe fectaries commenced in 1748, when Peter Boehler visited Oxford, and held frequent meetings with John and Charles Wefley, for the edification of awakened people, (as they ftyled them) both learned and unlearned. His discourses were in Latin, and were interpreted by Mr. Gambold. He was confecrated a bishop at an English provincial fynod held at Lindsey House in Nov. 1754, and was greatly effeemed for his piety and learning by feveral English bishops, who had been his contemporaries in the university of Oxford. In 1765 a congregation was settled by bishop Gambold, at Coothill, in Ireland. Soon after he had joined the brethren, he published a treatise, written while he was at Stanton Harcourt, and which proves his steady attachment to the church of England, entirely confistent with his connexion with, and ministry in, the Church of the Brethren. The title of it is, "A fhort Summary of Christian Doctrine, in the way of Question and Anfwer; the Anfwers being all made in the found and venerable words of the Common-prayerbook of the Church of England. To which are added, fome Extracts out of the Homilies. Collected for the fervice of a few perfons, members of the established church; but imagined not to be unufeful to others." We know not the exact date of this treatife; but a fecond edition of it was printed in 1767, 12mo. Mr. Gambold alfo published in 1751, 8vo. " Maxims and Theological Ideas and Sentences, collected out of feveral Differtations and Discourses of count Zinzendorf, from 1738 till 1747." His "Hymns for the use of the Brethren" were printed in 1748, 1749, and 1752; fome Hymns, and a small Hymn-book for the children belonging to the Brethren's congregations, were printed entirely by Mr. Gambold's own hand in Lindfey House at Chelsea. A Letter from Mr. Gambold to Mr. Spangenberg, June 4, 1750, containing a concife and wellwritten character of the count of Zinzendorf [s], was inferted in Mr. James Hutton's " Effay towards giving fome just ideas worthy diocesan and patron, to affociate with people, among whom, to anothate might be innocent, have been fome mon-ftrous characters. When he was young, he had nearly perifhed through difregard to his perfon. At this time he was kindly relieved by his brother collegian in the fame department; Dr. Free, a person well known in London; but the tale is not worth gaining."

In 1752 he was editor of "Sixteen Discourses on the Second Article of the Creed, preached at Berlin by the ordinary of the Brethren," 12mo. In June 1753 appeared "The Ordinary of the Brethren's Churches his fhort and peremptory Remarks on the way and manner wherein he has been hitherto treated in controversies, &c. Translated from the High Dutch, with a preface, by John Gambold, minister of the chapel in Fetter-lane." In the fame year he published, "Twenty-one Discourses, or Differtations, upon the Augfburg Confession, which is also the Brethren's Confession of Faith ; delivered by the ordinary of the Brethren's Churches before the feminary. To which is prefixed a Synodical Writing relating to the fubject. Translated from the High Dutch, by F. Okeley, A. B." In 1754 he was editor of "A modest Plea for the Church of the Brethren, &c." 8vo; with a preface by himfelf. In the fame year, in conjunction with Mr. Hutton, fecretary to the Brethren, he alfo drew up " The Representation of the Committee of the English Congregation in union with the Moravian Church," addreffed to the archbishop of York; and also "The plain case of the reprefentatives of the people known by the name of the Unitas Fratrum, from the year 1727 till these times, with regard to their conduct in this country under misrepresentation." And in 1755 he affisted in the publication of "A letter from a minister of the Moravian branch of the Unitas Fratrum; together with fome additional notes by the English editor, to the author of the Moravians compared and detected ;" and also of " An Exposition, or true State of the matters objected in England to the people known by the name of Unitas Fratrum; by the ordinary of the Brethren; the notes and additions by the editor." In the year 1756 he preached at Fetter-lane chapel, and printed afterwards, a fermon upon a public fast and humiliation, setting forth " the Reafonableness and Extent of religious Reverence." He was not only a good scholar, but a man of great parts, and of singular mechanical ingenuity. It was late in both their lives before the learned Bowyer was acquainted with his merits; but he no fooner knew them, than he was happy in his acquaintance, and very frequently applied to him as an occasional affistant in correcting the prefs; in which capacity Mr. Gambold fuperintended (among many other valuable publications) the beautiful and very accurate edition of lord chancellor Bacon's Works in 1765; and in 1767 he was profeffedly the editor, and took an active part in the translation from the High Dutch, of "The Hiftory of Greenland;" containing a "defcription of the country and its inhabitants; and particularly a relation of the miffion carried on for above these thirty years by by the Unitas Fratrum at New Herrnhut and Lichtenfels in that country, by David Crantz; illustrated with maps and other copper plates: printed for the Brethren's Society for the Furtherance of the Gospel among the Heathen," 2 vols. 8vo. In the autumn of 1768 he retired to his native country, where he died, at Haverford West, universally respected, Sept. 13, 1771. GANGANELLI. See CLEMENT XIV.

GARAMOND (CLAUDE), a French engraver and letterfounder, was a native of Paris, and began to diffinguish himfelf about 1510; when he founded his printing types, clear from all remains of the Gothic, or, as it is ufually called, the Black letter. He brought them to fo great a degree of perfection, that he can neither be denied the glory of having furpaffed whatever had been done in this way before, nor that of not being excelled by any of his fucceffors in this uleful mechanic art. His types were prodigioufly multiplied, as well by the great number of matrices which he engraved of every fize, as by the letters which were founded from these, so that all parts of Europe were fupplied with them; and as often as they were ufed by foreigners, they took care, by way of recommending their works, to diffinguish them by his name, both in Italy, Germany, England, and even in Holland; particularly the fmall Roman, by way of excellence, was known among the printers in all these countries by the name of Garamond's small Roman. He likewife, by the fpecial command of Francis I, founded three fpecies of Greek types for the use of Robert Stephens, who printed with them all his beautiful editions, both of the New Testament, and several Greek authors. Garamond died in 1561; and all his fine types came into the hands of Fournier the elder, an eminent letter-founder at Paris.

GARASSE (FRANCIS), a jesuitical writer, the author of the enmity between the Jesuits and the Jansenists, in the church of Rome. He was born at Angoulême in 1585 [T], and having laid a good foundation of grammar learning, entered of the Jesuits college in 1600 [U]. It was the special care of those fathers, to admit none into their fociety but youths of genius; and Garasse was not wanting in good natural parts, nor did he neglect to improve them by reading and study; of which he gave an admirable proof in his book of elegies on the death of Henry IV, and in a poem in heroic verse addressed to Louis XIII, upon his inauguration, in the name of the college at Poictiers [x]. As he had a great deal of fire, a vast imagination, and and a strong voice, so he became a popular preacher in the chief cities of France. He acquitted himself in the pulpit with an uncommon vivacity, and had a peculiar turn for the wit then in vogue, which, being enforced by a suitable delivery, made deep impressions upon his audience.

But he was not content with the honour he thus did to his order. His ambition led him to aim at being more extensively ferviceable by his writings. With that fpirit, while yet in his noviciate, he published in 1614 a defence of the Jesuits against three of their adverfaries at once. This piece he entitled "The Horofcope of Anti-Coton, together with the life, death, burial, and Apotheofis of his two coufin-germans Marteliere and Hardeviliere." The treatife appeared under a feigned name, and was drawn up in the ironical tafte, but too much vitiated by buffoonery; and, in the fame name and style, he printed in 1615, "The Calvinistic Elixir, or Reformed Philosopher's Stone, first dug up by Calvin at Geneva, and afterwards polished by Isaac Casaubon at London, with the testamentary codex of Anti-Coton, lately found upon Charenton bridge [v]." The two fubsequent years he employed his pen in fatire and panegyric, both equally exaggerated to an extreme [z]; and, in 1618, he took the four vows, and became a father of his order. This is the highest title conferred on that or any other of the monastic institutions; and our author, being thereby admitted to read and fludy the fublimest mysteries of his religion, in a few years appeared upon the stage of the public in the character of a zealous champion for the faith, against the Infidels and prophaners of those mysteries.

Meanwhile, his pen was far from lying idle. On the con-trary, in 1620, he printed a piece entitled, "Rabelais reformed by the ministers, particularly Peter du Moulin, minister of Charenton, in answer to the buffooneries inferted in his book;" (of the invocation of pastors) and two years afterwards he ventured to attack the ghost of Stephen Pasquier, in another piece, intituled, " Recherches des Recherches & autres oeuvres d'Etienne Pasquier." There cannot be given a better specimen of the peculiar strain of his fatirical wit, than is furnished by the epiftle dedicatory to this book. It is addreffed to the late Stephen Pasquier, wherever he may be: "For," fays he, " having never been able to find out your religion, I know not the route or way you took at your departure out of this life; and therefore I am forced to write to you at a venture, and to addrefs this packet wherever you may be." This is bold and even licentious, for a Jesuit. Dean Swift, with a similar turn of wit, writing to lord Peterborough, then general in Spain, observes, that his lordship was fo very volatile, and fo often fhifted places, that he could not fo properly be faid to write to him, as to write at him A.

Garasse the next year 1628, published " La Doctrine curieuse des beaux Esprits de ce temps, &c. The curious doctrine of the wits, or pretenders to wit, of this age, containing feveral maxims pernicious to the state of religion and good manners,-refuted and overthrown [B]." He took occasion, in feveral places of this work, to throw out rough and abufive raillery upon Pasquier; and went on in the same strain, in a third production, printed in 1625 [c]. The fons of Pasquier were at last provoked beyond all patience, to see the manes of their father fo irreligiously disturbed. Refolving to revenge his memory, and to pay our author in his own coin, they published a treatife, wherein Garaffe was thus accofted; having recounted the words of his dedication just mentioned ; " This," fay they, in the fingular number," has made me use the fame freedom with you, and forced me to address this packet to you, in what place foever you may be. For, not knowing whether you may be at the fervice tree, which you call a tavern of honour, and where you confess you have had many a good meal freecost; or at the town of Clomar, in the suburbs of St. Germain, where your name is written in fuch fair characters, on all the mantle trees of the chimnies; or in fome other place of the fame kind; I am conftrained to fend you this book at a venture, and to direct it to you in what place foever you be."

It

It is true, these are the words of an enemy, and of an enemy too peculiarly inflamed; fo much however, feems, without any injustice to be inferred, that in general the free course of his life ran parallel to that of his wit, which he had indulged to fuch a height in his "Doctrine curieufe," that notwithstanding the fpecious title against Atheists and Atheistical libertines prefixed by the author, a very different one was bestowed upon it by others, who diftinguished it by the title of "Atheisin reduced to an art[D]." Prior Ogier in particular, having observed that our author was better qualified for a fatirical poet or a merry Andrew [E], than for a catholic doctor, exclaimed against the whole order, for making choice of fuch a champion. This was made public the fame year; and in the following, our author issued a defence, entitled, " Apologie de F. Garasse, &c." To this the prior immediately prepared for a reply; but here the fraternity stepped in, and procured such mediators as found means to end the difpute in an amicable way. The Jefuit prevented his antagonist by a letter full of civilities, which was answered in the same way by the prior, and care was taken to let the public fee those letters, as foon as they were written, in 1624 [F]. By the fame method our author was also reconciled to Balzac, with whole character he had made free, having provided a feat for him among the atheifts of the times.

The "Doctrine curieuse," carried the strongest marks of a most busy and active temper; vivacity was the characteristic of the author, and he had no fooner escaped the difficulties which that treatife brought upon him, but he plunged into another, of a much more threatening afpect. This was created by a book he published in 1625, under the title of " La Somme Theolo-gique des verites capitales de la religion Chretienne." It was this book which first excited the war between the Janfenists and the Jefuits, and in the following manner. The abbot of St. Cyran, observing in Garasse's book a prodigious number of falfifications of foripture and the fathers, befides many heretical and impious opinions, thought the honour of the church required a refutation of them. Accordingly he wrote an answer at large, in four parts. But while the first part was in the prefs, the noife it every where made occafioned Garaffe's book to be more carefully examined. March 2, 1626, the rector of the Sorbonne declared before that fociety, that he had received feveral complaints of it; and, propofing to have it examined, a committee was appointed for that purpose, who should give their opinion of it on the 2d of May following. This matter alarming Garaffe, he presently after this appointment published at Paris, " L'abus decouverte, &c." In this piece he drew up a list of III propositions; the most easy to maintain that he could find, and having composed a censure of them, which he pretended was that of the abbot St. Cyran, he refuted that answer with eafe. This coming to the hands of St. Cyran, March 16; he wrote fome notes upon it the fame day, which were printed with the title of "A refutation of the pretended abuse, and difcovery of the true ignorance and vanity of Father Francis Garaffe :" and the committee of the Sorbonne made their report on the day appointed. But fome perfons who approved the book defired more time, and that the propolitions cenfured might be communicated to them. This was granted ; and on the first of July, attempting partly to defend, and partly to explain it, they. found themfelves under a necessity of confessing, that there were fome passages in it which could not be excused; and that F. Garaffe had promifed to correct them, without performing his promife. Hereupon, the doctors agreeing that the book ought. to be cenfured, the cenfure was accordingly passed Sept. 1, and immediately published, with the title of "Censura S: Facul-tatis Theologicz, &c. The censure of the facred Faculty of. the clergy at Paris, upon a book entitled, Theological Summary of F. Francis Garaffe." The sentence was to this effect; that the fummary contained feveral heretical, erroneous, fcandalous, and rash propositions; several falsifications of passages of Scripture, and of the Holy Fathers, fallely cited, and wrefted from their true fense; and an infinite number of expressions unfit to be written or read by Christians and Divines.

This fentence was perfectly agreeable to the abbot of St. Cyran's critique, which, after many hindrances raifed by the. Jesuits, came out the same year, entitled, "A Collection of the faults and capital falfities contained in the Theological Summary of F. Francis Garasse [G]." In answer to which, our author wrote, " Avis touchant la refutation, &c. Advice concerning the refutation of the Theological Summary of F. Garaffe." This came out also before the end of the year, and concluded the difpute between the two combatants in particular. But the two orders of Jesuits and Jansenists in general, of whom thefe were respectively the champions, grew, from the confequences of it, into fiich an implacable hatred and animofity against each other, as seemed not to be extinguishable but with that religion which they both professed.

With respect to Garaffe, the Jesuits used some kind of prudence. They did not obstinately perfist in supporting him, but banished him to one of their houses at a great distance from Paris, where he was heard of no more. This punishment, to a man of his ambitious and busy temper, was worse than death. Accordingly, as if weary of such a life, when the plague raged violently in Poictiers in 1631, he asked earness of his superiors to attend those that were seized with it: leave was granted, and in that charitable office, catching the contagion, he died among the infected perfons in the hospital, on the 14th of June that year. He is styled by Bp. Warburton, in his "Commentary on the Essay on Man," an eminent cafuist.

GARCILASSO, or Garcias Lasso de la Vega, a celebrated Spanish poet, was born of a noble family at Toledo in 1500. His father was a counfellor of state to Ferdinand and Isabella, and employed by them on feveral important negotiations, particularly in an embassy to pope Alexander VI. Garcilasso was educated near the emperor Charles V. who had a particular regard for him, and took him with him in his military expeditions, where he became as renowned for his courage, as for his poetry. He accompanied that emperor into Germany, Africa, and Provence; and it was in this last expedition that he commanded a battalion, when he received a wound, of which he died at Nice about three weeks after, in his 36th year. The wound was made by a stone thrown by a countryman from a turret, and falling upon his head. The Spanish poetry was greatly obliged to Garcilasso, not only for extending its bounds, but also for introducing new beauties into it. He had ftrong natural talents for poetry; and he did not fail to improve them by culture, ftudying the best poets ancient and modern. His poems are full of fire; have a nobleness and majesty without affectation; and, what is fornewhat fingular, there is in them a great deal of eafe, united with much fubtility. Paul Jovius has not ferupled to fay, that his odes have all the fweetness of Horace. The learned grammarian Sanctius has written commentaries upon all his works; has pointed out his imitations of the ancients; and illustrated him every where with very learned and curious notes. They were all printed at Naples in 1664, with this title, " Garcilasso de la Vega Obras Poëticas con annotationes de Franc. Sanchez," in 8vo. We must not confound this poet with another perfon of the fame name, a native of Cufco, who wrote in Spanish the History of Florida, and that of Peru and the Incas.

GARDINER (STEPHEN), bishop of Winchester, and chancellor of England, was the illegitimate son of Dr. Lionel Woodvill or Wydville, dean of Exeter, and bishop of Salifbury, brother to Elizabeth, queen confort to Edward IV. He was born in 1483, at Bury St. Edmonds in Suffolk, and took his name from his reputed father [H], whom his mother married, though in a menial fituation, to conceal the incontinence of the bilhop. After a proper education at school, he was fent to Trinity-hall in Cambridge; where purfuing his studies with diligence, he foon obtained reputation by the quickness of his parts, and was particularly diftinguished for his elegance in writing and speaking Latin, as well as for his uncommon skill in the Greek language [1]. In the former he made Cicero his pattern, and became fo absolute a master of his style, as to be charged with affectation in that respect. With these attainments in classical learning, he applied himself to the civil and canon law; and took his doctor's degree in the first of these, in 1520, in the latter, the following year; and, it is faid, was the fame year elected master of his college.

But his views were far from being confined to the univerfity. He had fome time before been taken into the family of the duke of Norfolk, and thence into that of cardinal Wolfey, who made him his fecretary. This post he now held, and it proved the foundation of his rife at court. The cardinal having projected the treaty of alliance with Francis I. in 1525, employed his fecretary to draw up the plan, and the king coming to his houfe at More-Park in Hertfordshire, found Gardiner bufy at this work. He looked at it, liked the performance extremely well, the performer's conversation better, and his fertility in the invention of expedients best of all: and from this time Gardiner was admitted into the fecret of affairs, and entirely confided in, both by the king and his first minister. He received a public mark of that confidence in 1527, when he was fent to Rome, in order to negociate the arduous bufinefs of Henry's divorce from queen Katharine. Edward Fox, provoft of King's-college in Cambridge, went with him on this embaffy; but Gardiner was the chief, being efteemed the best civilian in England at this time; and having been admitted into the king's cabinet council for this affair, he is styled, in the cardinal's credential letters to the pope, "primary secretary of the most secret counfels." He was now in fuch favour with the cardinal, that, in these very letters, he called Gardiner the half of himself, " Dimidium fui," than whom none was dearer to him. He wrote that Gardiner fhould unlock his [the cardinal's] breaft to the pope; who, in hearing him fpeak, he might think he heard the cardinal himfelf. The fuccefsful iffue of this embaffy in obtaining a new commiffion, directed to the cardinals Wolfey and Campejus, as well as Gardiner's addrefs in the negociation, may be feen in the general hiftories of England. We fhall only notice one particular not mentioned there, which is his fuccefs in difpofing Campejus to make a tour to England. This requiring fome extraordinary management, Gardiner took it upon himfelf; and having put every thing requitite to fet the affair in a proper light at home, into the hands of his colleague Fox, difpatched him to carry the account to the king, who joined with Anne Boleyn, in applauding [ $\kappa$ ] the ingenuity, intrepidity, and induftry, of the new minifter.

But the loudest in his praiseswas the cardinal, in whose private bufiness Gardiner had reconciled the pope to the endowment of his two colleges at Oxford and Ipfwich [L], out of the revenues of the diffolved leffer monasteries. This added to the rest, made fuch an impression upon the cardinal's mind, that crying out, " O ineftimable treasure and jewel of this realm!" he defired Fox to remark those words, and infert them in his letter. There was still another instance of Gardiner's abilities and attachment to Wolfey, which had its fhare in forcing out this burft of admiration. During the courfe of this embaffy, his holinefs falling dangeroufly ill, the cardinal fet all his engines to work, to fecure the keys provisionally to himfelf, in cafe of a new election. We need not mention with how much fondnefs he fixed his eyes upon the papal chair, fo much that the fuffrages of one-third part of the cardinals were procured for him. He dispatched orders immediately to provide, that those cardinals should be withdrawn to a place of fafety, and fhould there declare him pope, though the majority thould appear against him; affuring his own party, that they fhould be vigoroufly fuftained by king Henry and his allies. The bufinefs, however, came to nothing, by the recovery of Clement VII: but the pains taken in it by the cardinal's agents, among whom Gardiner had at least an equal share, could not fail to be highly pleafing to him. In the even', indeed, the king had most reason to be fatisfied with his minister, who gave his opinion that all folicitations at Rome would be loft time; the pope, in his judgment, being immoveable in the refolution to do nothing himfelf; though he might not improbably be brought to confirm fuch a fentence as his majefty could draw from the legates [M]. Henry, fully perfuaded in the islue of the fincerity and judgment of this advice, recalled Gardiner, refolving to make use of his abilities in managing the legantine Court N.

During his refidence at Rome, he had, among other things, obtained fome favours at that court for bithep Nix of Norwich, who, on his return, rewarded him with the archdeaconry of Norfolk in 1529; and this probably was the first preferment he obtained in the church. In reality, it must be owned that his merit as a divine did not entitle him to any extraordinary expectations that way. As he made his first entrance into business in a civil capacity, fo he continued to exercife and improve his talents in state affairs, which gave him an opportunity of rendering himfelf uleful, and in a manner necessary to the king; who foon after his arrival, took him from Wolfey, and declared him fecretary of state. Thus introduced into the ministry at home, besides the ordinary business of his office, and the large fhare he is faid to have had in the administration of affairs in general, he was particularly advifed with by the king, in that point which lay nearest to his heart; and when cardinal Campejus declared that the caufe of the divorce was evoked to Rome, Gardiner, in conjunction with Fox the almoner, found out Cranmer, and, difcovering his opinion, introduced him to his majefty, whom they thus enabled to extricate himfelf out of a difficulty, then confidered as infuperable.

As this step proved the ruin of Wolfey, in his distrefs he applied to his old fervant the fecretary, who, on this occasion, gave an eminent proof of his gratitude, in foliciting his pardon; which was followed in three days by his reftoration to his archbishopric, and 6000l. fent him, besides plate and furniture for his houfe and chapel. This old fervant alfo, at the cardinal's recommendation in 1530, introduced the provoit of Beverly to the king, who received him gracioufly, and fhewed him that he was his good and gracious lord, and admitted and accepted him as his orator and scholar. These were matters of eafy management. But the year had not expired, when the king's fervice called the fecretary to a task of another nature, which was to manage the university of Cambridge, fo as to procure their declaration in favour of his majelty's caule, after Cranmer's book should appear in support of it. In this most difficult point his old colleague Fox was joined with him; and they spared no pains, address, or artifice in accomplishing it.

[m] The whole letter is inferted in the Biog. Brit. as an inftance of Gardiner's ceedings to be begun before the cardinals elegant style in English, above others written at the same time, or even later.

To make amends for fuch an unreferved compliance with the royal will, a door was prefently opened in the church, through which, by one fingle step, (the archdeaconry of Leicester, into which he was installed in the spring of 1531,) Gardiner advanced to the rich fee of Winchester, and was there confecrated the November [0] following. He, confequently, affisted in the court when the sentence, declaring Katharine's marriage null and void, was passed by Cranmer, May 22, 1533. The fame year he went ambaffador to the French king at Marfeilles, to difcover the defigns of the pope and that monarch in their interview, of which Henry was very suspicious; and upon his return home, being called, as other bishops were, to acknowledge and defend the king's fupremacy, he readily complied, and published his defence for it, with this title, " De vera Obedientia." His conduct was very uniform in this point, as well as in that of the divorce and the fubsequent marriage, and he acquired great reputation by his writings in defence of them.

In 1535, Cranmer visiting the see of Winchester, in virtue of his metropolitan power, Gardiner difputed that power with great warmth. Some time afterwards, he refumed his embaffy to France, where he procured the removal of Pole, (then dean of Exeter, afterwards cardinal) out of the French dominions; having reprefented him as his master's bitter enemy; and this was the original root of that difagreement between them, which in time became public. Before his return this fecond time, being applied to by Cromwell for his opinion about a religious league with the protestant princes of Germany, he declared himfelf against it; and advised a political alliance, which he judged would last longer, as well as answer the king's ends better, if strengthened by subsidies. In 1538, he was sent ambaffador to the German diet at Ratifbon, where he incurred the fuspicion of holding a fecret correspondence with the pope. Whatever truth there may be in this charge, it is certain that Lambert this year was brought to the stake by his instigation, for denying the real prefence in the facrament. This instance of a fanguinary temper was then shown, before the statute of the fix articles was enacted; a law on which many were put to death, and which he undeniably framed and promoted. This act paffed in 1540; and the first perfon condemned by it, and burnt in Smithfield, the fame year, was Robert Barnes, who at his death declared his fulpicion of Gardiner's having a hand in it [P]. Upon the death of Cromwell, his rival long in the king's tavour.

[r] His words at the flake were, that he forgave the world in general, and the bishop of Winchester in particular, if he had any hand in his death; which implying a doubt, Bayle, preposterously enough, infers favour, the univerfity of Cambridge, where he still held his mastership of Trinity-hall, chose him their vice-chancellor; and in return he shewed his sense of it, by an alliduity in his office among them, and a warm zeal to affift them on all occasions with his interest at court; which, as long as the funshine of any fignal fervice lasted, was very good. But in this, his cafe, like other courtiers, was subject to the sudden vicifitudes of light and fhade, which fo remarkably checquered the feries of that reign; and this minister was no more excepted than his fellows, from complying with those conditions of ministerial greatness, which were indiffentible as long as Henry fat at the helm: and, though he tells us himfelf that, after the king had let him into the fecret, that he could look four and talk roughly, without meaning much harm, he ever after bore those fallies with much lefs anxiety, and could ftand a royal rattling pretty well [Q]; yet this was only fometimes, and on fome occasions. For upon others, we find him fubmitting to very difagreeable fupplications and expressions of deep humility, and great sense of his failings, directly contrary to the convictions of his own confcience and understanding. Of this we have the following remarkable instance.

The bifhop had for his fecretary a relation of his own name, Gardiner, who, in fome conferences with Fryth the martyr, had acquitted himfelf fo well that they were judged fit for the public view [R]. This young clergyman was much in his mafter's favour, yet he fell under a profecution upon the act of supremacy; and being very obstinate, was executed as a traitor March 7, 1544. This was made an engine against the bishop by his enemies, who whilpered the king that he was very likely of his fecretary's opinion, notwithstanding all he had written; and that if he was once in the Tower, matter enough would come out against him. On this fuggestion, his majefty confented to his proposed imprisonment. But the bishop being informed of it in time, repaired immediately to court; confelled all that his majefty had charged him with, whatever it was; and thus, by complying with the king's humour, and fhewing the deepest concern for real or pretended failings, obtained full pardon, to the great mortification of his enemies.

[Q] This fecret Henry acquainted him with on the following occasion: Our doctor had been joined with the earl of Wiltshire, his relation by blood, in some affair of confequence, which had not been managed to the king's fatisfaction, upon which he treated Gardiner in the presence of the ter German Gardiner, wherein Men may earl with fuch a ftorm of words as quite confounded him; but before they parted, told him, that he was indeed very angry, yet not particularly with him, though he had used him fo, because he could not take quite fo much liberty with the earl. See his Letter to Somerfet in Fox's Acts and Monuments, and in Biog Brit.

All

All his fagacity, fubtlety, and contrivance, however, were not fufficient to fave him from a cloud, which shewed itself in the close of this reign; a change which might be attributed to the unsteadinels of the master, were there not facts sufficient to throw the imputation in fome measure upon the fervant. Certain it is, though upon what particular provocation is not known, that he engaged deeply in a plot against the life of Cranmer; which being discovered and dispersed by the king, his majesty, fully fatisfied of the archbishop's innocence, left all his enemies, and among the reft Gardiner, to his mercy. The malice, though forgiven by Cranmer, cannot be fuppofed to be forgotten by Henry. But this did not hinder him from making use of this willing fervant, against his last queen, Katharine Parr. That lady, as well as her preceding partners of the royal bed, falling under her confort's distaste, he presently thought of a prosecution for herefy; upon which occasion he fingled out Gardiner, whofe inclinations that way were well known, as a proper perfon for his purpose to confult with. Accordingly the minister listened to his master's suspicions, improved his jealousies, and caft the whole into the form of articles; which being figned by the king, it was agreed to fend Katharine to the Tower. But she had the good fortune and address to divert the storm from breaking upon her head, and to throw some part of it upon her perfecutors. The paper of the articles, being entrusted to chancellor Wriothesly, was dropt out of his bosom, and carried to her: and she, with the help of this discovery to her royal confort, found charms enough left to dispel his fuspicions: the refult whereof was, fevere reproaches to the chancellor, and a rooted difpleafure to the bithop, infomuch that the king would never see his face afterwards. His behaviour to him corresponded with that refentment. In the draught of his majefty's will, before his departure on his last expedition to France, the bishop's name was inferted'among his executors and counfellors to prince Edward. But after this, when the will came to be drawn afresh, he was left out; and though fir Anthony Brown moved the king twice, to put his name as before into it, yet the motion was rejected, with this remark, that " if he [Gardiner] was one, he would trouble them all, and they should never be able to rule him." Befides this, when the king faw him once with fome of the privy-counfellors, he shewed his diflike, and asked his busines, which was, to acquaint his majesty with a benevolence granted by the clergy: the king called him immediately to deliver his meffage, and having received it, went away. Burnet affigns Gardiner's known attachment to the Norfolk family, for the caufe of this difgrace [s]: but whatever was the caule, or whatever usage he met with on other occasions, this justice is undeniably due to him, that he ever shewed a high respect to his master's memory, and always spoke and wrote of him with much deference; whether out of policy or gratitude, or a mixture of both, let others judge.

In this unhinged fituation he flood, when Edward VI. afcended the throne; and his behaviour under the fon more than justified the father's centure upon the unruliness of his temper. Being prevented from disturbing the council within doors, he opposed all their measures without. The Reformation was the great object of this reign; and that, as planned by Cranmer, he could not by any condescension of the archbishop, be brought to approve, or even to acquiesce in. He condemned the diligence in bringing it on as too hafty, which would caufe a mifcarriage; obferving, that under a minority, all should be kept quiet, and for that reason no alterations attempted; and this ferved him alfo for a ground to oppose the war with Scotland, as too hazardous and expensive. From the fame principle, he no fooner heard of the intended royal visitation, than he raised objections to it: he both questioned its legality, and cenfured its imprudence as an innovation; alledging that it would tend to weaken the prerogative as assumed by Henry, in the eyes of the meanest, when they faw all done by the king's power as fupreme head of the church, (on the due use of which all reformation must depend) while he was a child, and could know nothing at all, and the protector, being absent, not much more. These, however, were words only, and he did not ftop there: for when the homilies and injunctions for that visitation were published, he infifted, on the perufal of them, that he could not comply with them, though at the expence of lofing his bifhopric; pretending, that all their proceedings were framed against the law both of God and the king, of the danger of which, he faid, he was well apprized.

Upon his coming to London, he was called before the council, Sept. 25, 1547; and there refufing to promife either to receive the homilies, or pay obedience to the vifitors, if they came into his diocefe, he was committed clofe prifoner to the Fleet. Some days after, he was fent for to the deanery of St. Paul's, by Cranmer, who, with other bifhops, difcourfed in defence of the homily upon juftification; which he had cenfured, as excluding charity from any fhare in obtaining it. The archbifhop proceeded to apologize for Erafmus's "Paraphrafe on the New Teftament," as the beft extant; which, being ordered by the injunctions to be fet up in all churches, had been objected to by Gardiner. His grace, feeing no hopes from arguments, which made no impreffion, let fall fome words of bringing him into the privy-council, in cafe of his concurrence with them; but that that too having no effect, he was remanded to the Fleet, where he continued till the parliament broke up, Dec. 24, and then was fet at liberty by the general act of amnesty, usually passed on the accession of a prince to the throne. He was never charged with any offence judicially, every thing being done in virtue of that extent of prerogative which had been affumed by Henry VIII. and this was thought neceffary for mortifying the prelate's haughty temper, as well as to vindicate their proceedings from the contempt he had fhewn them.

After his discharge, he went to his diocese; and, though he opposed, as much as in him lay, the new establishment in its first proposal, yet now it was settled by act of parliament, he knew how to conform; which he not only did himfelf, but took care that others fhould do the fame. Yet he no fooner returned to town, than he received an order, which brought him again before the council; where after some rough treatment, he was directed not to stir from his house, till he went to give satisfaction in a fermon, to be preached before the king and court in a public audience; for the matter of which he was directed both what he should, and what he should not fay, by fir William Cecil. He did not refuse to preach, which was done on St. Peter's day; but fo contrarily to the purpole required [T], that he was fent to the Tower the next day, June 30, 1548, where he was kept close prisoner for a year.

But his affairs foon after put on a more pleafing countenance. When the protector's fall was projected, Gardiner was deemed a neceffary implement for the purpole; his head and hand were both employed for bringing it about, and the original draught of the articles was made by him. Upon this change in the council, he had fuch affurances of his liberty, and entertained fo great hopes of it, that it is faid he provided a new fuit of cloaths in order to keep that feftival; but in this he flattered himfelf too The change in public affairs by the depofing of Somuch. merset, brought no change of the bishop's private state. On the contrary, his first application for a difcharge was treated with contempt by the council, who laughing faid, " the bifhop had a pleafant head;" for reward of which, they gave him leave to remain five or fix weeks longer in prison, without any notice taken to him of his melfage. Nor did the lords fhew any regard to his next addrefs: and he had been almost two years in the Tower, when the protector, reftored to that high office, went with others, by virtue of an order of council, June 9, 1550, to confer with him in that place. In this conference they pro-poled to release him upon his submission for what was past, and promise of obedience for the future, if he would also subscribe the new fettlement in religion, with the king's complete power and fupremacy, though under age, and the abrogation of the fix articles. He confented to, and actually fubscribed, all the conditions except the first, which he refused, infisting on his innocence. The lords used him with great kindness, and encouraged him to hope his troubles fhould be quickly ended; whereupon, seeing also the protector among them, he flattered him-felf with the hopes of being released in two days, and in that confidence actually made his farewel feast. But the contempt he had at first shewn to the council, being still avowed by his refusing to make a submission now, was not fo readily overlooked. On the contrary, this first visit was followed by feveral others of the like tenor; which meeting with the fame refusal, at length, the lords Herbert, Petre, and bishop Ridley, brought him new articles, wherein the required acknowledgement, being made more general, runs thus: " That he had been fuspected of not approving the king's proceedings, and being appointed to preach had not done it as he ought to have done, and fo deferved the king's difpleafure, for which he was forry; but now the other articles being enlarged were, befides the king's supremacy, the suppression of abbies and chanteries, pilgrimages, malles, and images, adoring the facrament, communion in both kinds, abolifhing the old books, and bringing in the new book of fervice, with that for ordaining priefts and bishops, the completeness of the Scripture, and the use of it in the vulgar tongue, the lawfulnefs of clergymen's marriage, and for Erasmus's Paraphrase, that it had been on good confiderations ordered to be fet up in churches." These being read, he infifted first to be released from his imprisonment, and faid that he would then freely give his answer, such as he would stand by, and fuffer if he did amifs; but he would trouble himfelf with no more articles while he was detained in prifon, fince he defired not to be delivered out of his imprisonment in the way of mercy but of justice. July 19, he was brought before the council, who having told him that they fat by a special commission to judge him, asked whether he would subscribe these last articles or no? which he answering in the negative, his bishopric was sequestered, and he required to conform in three months on pain of deprivation. Hereupon the liberty he had before of walking in fome open galleries, when the duke of Norfolk was not in them, was taken from him, and he was again shut up in his chamber. At the expiration of the limited time, the bishop still keeping his resolution, was deprived for disobedience and contempt, by a court of delegates wherein Cranmer presided, after a trial which lasted from Dec. 15, to Feb.

Feb. 14 following, in 24 fessions. He appealed from the delegates to the king; but no notice was taken of it, the court being known to be final and unappealable.

In the courfe of the proceedings, Gardiner all along behaved himfelf contemptuoufly toward the judges, and particularly called them Sacramentarians and Heretics; on which account he was ordered to be removed to a meaner lodging in the Tower; to be attended by one fervant only, of the lieutenant's appointment; to have his books and papers taken from him; to be denied pen, ink, or paper; and nobody fuffered to vifit him. However, as he continued a close prisoner here during the rest of Edward's reign, the feverity of this order was afterwards mitigated; as appears from various pieces written in this confinement [u]. He is faid to have kept up his fpirits very well; and it is not improbable, that he forefaw the great alteration in affairs which was speedily to take place. The first dawning of this began to appear on the demife of king Edward. For, notwithstanding the faint struggle in favour of Jane Gray, Mary's fucceffion was visible enough; and accordingly she was publicly proclaimed queen July 19, 1553. On Aug. 3, she made her folemn entry into the Tower, when Gardiner, in the name of himfelf and his fellow-prisoners, the duke of Norfolk, dutchefs of Somerfet, lord Courtney, and others of high rank, made a congratulatory speech to her majesty, who gave them all their liberty. The fpokesman took his feat in council the same day, and on the 8th performed the obsequies for the late king in the queen's prefence. On the 9th he went to Winchester-house in Southwark, after a confinement of somewhat more than five years; and was declared chancellor of England on the 23d. He had the honour of crowning the queen Oct. 1, and on the 5th, opened the first parliament in her reign. By these hasty steps Gardiner role to the prime ministry; and was possefield at this time of more power, civil and ecclefiastical, than any English minister ever enjoyed, except his old master cardinal Wolfey. He was also re-chosen chancellor of Cambridge, and restored to the mastership of Trinity-hall there, of which, among his other preferments, he had been deprived in the former reign [x].

The great and important affairs transacted under his adminiftration, in bringing about the change in the constitution by queen Mary, are too much the subject of general history to be related here. The part that Gardiner acted is very well known.

[x] Fuller, Hift. of Cambridge, p. 48, where he ranks Gardiner among the benefactors to Trinity-hall. Upon his reftoration to the chancellorship, he purged the university thoroughly, turning out all the masters except two. However, it is certain, that seat of the Muses was faved from the flames of persecution, as long as he continued chancellor.

If not the promoter, which however is very probable, he was openly the abettor, of many cruel and fanguinary acts : whether from motives of policy, a love of perfecution, or an abject and fervile fpirit [y], imputed to him by Burnet, we cannot deter-mine; very probably from a mixture of all. From the arrival of cardinal Pole in England, he held only the fecond place in affairs relating to the church; but in matters of civil government, his influence was as great as before, and continued without the least diminution to the last. By his advice, a parliament was fummoned to meet in OA. 1555. As he was always a guardian of the revenues of the ecclefiaftics, both regular and fecular, fo he had at this time projected fome additional fecurity for church and abbey lands. He opened the feffion with a well-judged speech, Oct. 21, and was there again on the 23d, which was the last time of his appearing in that assembly. He fell ill foon after, and died Nov. 12, aged 72. His death was occasioned probably by the gout [z]; the lower parts of his body, however, being mortified, and fmelling offenfively, occafion was hence taken, according to the ordinary working of fuperstition, to turn the manner of his death into a judgement [A]. His funeral was performed with all the folemn pomp with which perfons of the first rank were conducted to the grave in those times.

His character, as a minister, is to be drawn from the general histories; as a private man, he was learned himself, and a lover of learning in others [B]: of a generous and liberal disposition; kept a good house; and brought up several young gentlemen, fome of whom became afterwards states frates on the other counsellors, secretaries of state, and chancellors. On the other hand, he had a large portion of haughtines, boundles ambition, and deep diffimulation. As to his religion, it has been observed, that he was more a protestant than a papist; which may perhaps be allowed, if the word papist be applied to the pope only, and his authority, which he always as a states from the states of the sta

[B] Of this the two following inftances deferve particular mention; Thomas Smith, who had been fecretary to Edw. VI. was permitted by Gardiner to live in Mary's days, in a flate of privacy, unmolefted, and with a penfion of 1001, a year for his better fupport, though he had a good effate of his own. English Baronetage, vol. iii. p. 538. Roger Afcham, another fecretary to the fame prince of the Latin tongue, was continued in his office, and his falary increased by this prelate's favour; which he fully repaid, by those elegant epiftles to to him, that are extant in his works. Life of the Thomas Smith, p. 65, and Strype's Memorials, vol. iii. p. 65, who makes this remark upon it: "Thus lived two excellent protestants, under the wings, as it were, of the fworn enemy and destroyer of protestants."

difapproved : and indeed he plainly looked on religion as an engine of flate, and made use of it as such. On this principle, he was very watchful to preferve and to increase the revenues of the church in general, and those of his own rich diocese in particular; being well apprised of the truth of that political maxim, that dominion is linked close to property. Burnet tells us, that at his death he expressed great remorfe for his former life, often repeating these words, "Erravi cum Petro, sed non flevi cum Petro:" I have erred with Peter, but not wept with him.

He wrote feveral books, befides those mentioned below [c]; to which, however, if we add his letters to Smith and Cheke upon the pronunciation of the Greek language, with his order or refeript, as chancellor of the university on that subject [D], we shall have the most material of his compositions; a complete lift whereof may be seen in Tanner's Bibl. Britannico-Hibernica, p. 308, 309.

GARENGEOT (RENE', JACQUES, CROISSANT DE), a. French furgeon of eminence, author of fome effeemed works, on fubjects relating to his profession, was born at Vitri, in 1688. He was royal lecturer in furgery at Paris, and a fellow of the Royal Society in London. His knowledge was extensive, and his manual dexterity in operations celebrated. His works are, 1. "A Treatife on the Instruments of Surgery," 2 vols. 12mo, 1727. 2. "Another, on the operation for the Stone," 12mo, 1730. 3. "The Anatomy of the Viscera," 2 vols. 12mo, 1742. 4. "On the Operations of Surgery," 3 vols. 12mo, 1749. 5. "La Myotomie Humaine; the Art of diffecting the human Muscles," 2 vols. 12mo, 1750. All these are reckoned valuable. The author died at Paris in 1759.

[c] His principal works are, T. " De vera Obedientia, 1534." 2. " Palinodia dicti libri;" when this was published is not known. 3. " A neceffary doctrine of a Christian Man, set forth by the King's Majestie of England, 1543." 4. " An Explanation and Affertion of the true Catholic Faith, touching the most blessed Sacrament of the Altar, &c. 1551." 5. " Confutatio Cavillationum quibus facrofanctom Eucharistiæ facramentum ab impiis Capernaitis impeti folet, 1551." This he composed while a prisoner in the Tower: he managed this controversy against Peter Martyr, and others, who espoused Cranmer. After the accession of queen Mary, he wrote replies in his own defence, against the abuses of Turner, Bonet, and other Protestant exiles.

[D] Some of these letters are fill exsant in Benet-college library at Cambridge. The controverfy made a great noife in its time, but was not much known afterwards; till that elegant account of it appeared in public, which is given by Baker in his "Reflections on Learning," p. 28, 29. who observes, that our chancellor affumed a power, that Cæfar never exercifed, of giving laws to words. However, he allows that, though the controverfy wasmanaged with much warmth on each fide, yet a man would wonder to fee fo much learning shewn on so dry a subject. Du Freine was at a lofs where the victory lay; but Roger Afcham, with a courtly address declares, that though the knights flew themfelves better critics, yet Gardiner's letters manifest a superior genius; and were chiefly liable to cenfure, from his entering further into a dispute of this kind, than was necessary for a perfon of his dignity.

GARLANDE

GARLANDE (JEAN DE), a grammarian, a native of Garlande en Brie in Normandy. As he came into England foon after the Conqueft, fome authors have fuppofed him an Englifhman. He was not dead in 1081. His works have not all been printed; but among thofe that have, thefe are most remarkable: 1. "A Poem on the contempt of the World," falfely attributed to St. Bernard; 4to, Lyons, 1489. 2. Another poem, entitled, "Floretus, or, Liber Floreti;" on the Doctrines of Faith, and aln oft the whole circle of Christian Morality. 3. A Treatife on "Synonimes," and another on "Equivoques," or ambiguous terms, 4to, Paris, 1494. 4. A Poem in rhymed verfes, entitled, "Facetus," on the duties of Man towards God, his Neighbour, and himfelf, 4to, Cologne, 1520; the three poems are often printed together. 5. "Dictionarium artis Alchymiæ," cum ejufdem artis compendio, 8vo, Balle, 1571.

GARNET (HENRY), a perfon memorable in English history for having been privy to, and aiding in, the celebrated confpi-racy called "The Gunpowder Plot," was born in England, and bred at Winchester school; whence he went to Rome, and took the Jesuit's habit in 1575. He returned to England in 1586, as provincial of his order; although it was made treason the year before, for any Romith prieft to come into the queen's dominions. Here, under a pretence of establishing the Catholic faith, he laboured inceffantly to raife fome disturbance, in order to bring about a revolution; and with this view held a fecret correspondence with the king of Spain, whom he folicited to project an expedition against his country. This scheme not proceeding fo fast as he would have it, he availed himself of the wretched zeal of fome papifts, who applied to him, as head of their order, to refolve this cafe of confcience; namely, " Whether, for the fake of promoting the Catholic religion, it might be permitted, fhould neceffity fo require, to involve the innocent in the fame deftruction with the guilty?" to which this righteous ca-fuift replied without hefitating, that, " if the guilty fhould con-ftitute the greater number, it might." This impious determi-nation gave the first motion to that horrible confpiracy, which was to have deftroyed at one ftroke the king, the royal family, and both houses of parliament: for the popish traitors proceeded upon this principle, when they concerted the dire project of blowing them up by gunpowder. But this plot being providentially difcovered, Garnet was fent to the Tower; was afterwards tried, condemned to be hanged for high-treason, and executed at the west-end of St. Paul's, May 3, 1606. He owned the crime for which he fuffered, yet has been placed by the Jesuits among their noble army of martyrs. He was probably an enthulialt, and confidered his death as a martyrdom :

GARNIER (ROBERT), a French tragic poet, was born at Ferté Bernard in the province of Maine, in 1534. He was defigned for the law, which he fludied fome time at Touloufe; but afterwards quitted it for poetry, in which he fucceeded fo well, that he was deemed by his contemporaries not inferior to Sophocles or Euripides. Thuanus fays, that Ronfard himfelf placed nobody above Garnier in this refpect: what Ronfard fays, however, is no more than that he greatly improved the French drama.

Par toi, Garnier, la scene des François,

Se change en or, qui n'etoit que de bois.

And it is certain, that his tragedies were read with vaft pleafure by all forts of perfons, and held in the higheft effimation. The reafon was, they had no better to read: for, upon the introduction of a better tafte, they gradually fell into difefteem, and now only ferve to fhew, that France, like other nations, has been capable of admiring very indifferent poets. Befides tragedies, he wrote fongs, elegies, epiftles, eclogues, &c. of no better ftamp. He died in 1590, after having been more fortunate than even good poets ufually are, by obtaining feveral confiderable pofts. Seneca the tragedian, was Garnier's model, which fingle circumftance may eafily give the learned reader an idea of his tafte and manner. His dramatic works were printed collectively at Lyons, in one volume, 12mo, 1597, and reprinted at Paris in 1607.

GARNIER (JOHN), a Jefuit; profeffor of claffical learning, philofophy, and rhetoric; was born at Paris in 1612, and died at Bologna in 1681, in a deputation to Rome from his order. His principal works are, 1. An edition of "Mercator," folio, 1673. 2. An edition of the "Liberat," in 8vo, Paris, 1675, with learned notes. 3. An edition of the "Liber diurnus," or Journal of the Popes, with historical notes, and very curious differtations, 4to, 1680. 4. "The Supplement to the Works of Theodoret," 4to, 1685. 5. "Systema Bibliothecæ Collegii Parisiensis, focietatis Jefu," 4to, Paris, 1678. A very ufeful book to those who are employed in arranging large libraries.

GAROFALO (BENVENUTO), an Italian painter, a native of Ferrara, who after studying under indifferent masters, (probably in France) fo far improved himself, by studying the works of the most eminent painters at Rome, that he became celebrated for his skill in copying the pictures of Raphael. There was at Paris a celebrated copy of the transfiguration of that master, and one or two original pictures by Garofalo. He died in 1695, at the age of 80.

GARRARD (MARK), an eminent painter, was born at Bruges in Flanders, in 1561. He was fome time principal painter to queen Elizabeth, and afterwards to queen Anne, confort to James I. He was both a good hiftory and portrait-painter; and fome of his pieces are still extant in this country. He died at London, in 1635.

GARRICK (DAVID), an illustrious actor, was grandson of Mr. Garrick, a merchant in France, who, being a protestant, fled to England as an afylum, upon the revocation of the edict of Nantes in 1685; and fon of Peter Garrick, who obtained a captain's commission in the army, and generally refided at Litchfield [E]. Peter Garrick was on a recruiting party in Hereford, when his fon David was born; and, as appears by the register of All-faints in that city, baptized Feb. 20, 1716. His mother was Arabella, daughter of Mr. Clough, one of the vicars in Litchfield cathedral. At ten years of age, he was fent to the grammar-fchool at Litchfield; but, though remarkable for declining puerile diversions, did not apply himself with any affiduity to his books. Being fprightly and frolicfome, he had conceived an early paffion for theatrical reprefentation; and, at little more than eleven years of age, procured " The Recruiting Officer" to be acted by young gentlemen and ladies, himfelf performing the part of serjeant Kite. Not long after, he went on invitation to an uncle, a wine-merchant, at Lifbon; but, returning fhortly to Litchfield, he was fent once more to the grammar-school, where, however, he did not make any considerable progress in learning.

About the beginning of 1735, Mr. (afterwards Dr.) Samuel Johnson, undertook to instruct some young gentlemen of Litchfield in the belles lettres; and David Garrick, then turned 18, became one of his fcholars, or (to fpeak more properly) his friend and companion. But the master, however qualified, was not more difposed to teach, than Garrick was to learn; and, therefore, both growing weary, after a trial of fix months, agreed to try their fortunes in the great metropolis. Mr. Walmfley, register of the ecclesiastical court at Litchfield, a gentleman much respected, and of confiderable fortune, was Garrick's friend upon this occasion, recommended him to Mr. Colfon, an eminent mathematician, to be boarded and inftructed by him in mathematics, philosophy, and polite learning; with a view of being fent within fome two or three years to the Temple, and bred to the law. But when Garrick arrived in London, he found that his finances would not fuffice to put him; under Mr. Colfon, till the death of his uncle; who, about 1737, left Portugal, and died in London foon after. He left his nephew 1000l. with the intereft of which, he prudently embraced the means of acquiring ufeful knowledge under Mr. Colfon. His proficiency, however, in mathematics and philofophy was not extensive; his mind was theatrically disposed; and, both father and mother living but a fhort time after, he gave himfelf up to his darling passion for acting; from which, fays his historian, " nothing but his tenderness for so dear a relation as a mother had hitherto restrained him." During the short interval, however, between his mother's death and his commencing comedian, he engaged in the wine trade, with his brother Peter Garrick; and they hired vaults in Durham-yard.

When he had at length formed his final refolution, he prepared himfelf in earnest for that employment he fo ardently loved, and in which nature defigned he fhould fo eminently excel. He was frequently in the company of the most admired actors; he obtained introductions to the managers of the theatres; he tried his talent in reciting particular and favourite portions of plays; and fometimes wrote criticilms upon the action and elocution of the players. Meanwhile, his diffidence withheld him from trying his ftrength at first upon a London theatre: he thought the hazard too great; and therefore commenced his noviciate in acting, with a company of players then ready to fet out for Ipswich, under the direction of Mr. Giffard and Mr. Dunstall, in the summer of 1741. The first effort of his theatrical talents was exerted in Aboan, in Oroonoko; and met with applause equal to his most fanguine defires. Under the affumed name of Lyddal, he not only acted a variety of characters in plays, particularly Chamont in the Orphan, captain Brazen in the Recruiting Officer, and fir Harry Wildair; but he likewife attempted the active feats of the Harlequin. In every effay he was gratified with conftant and loud applaufe, and Ipfwich may boast of having first seen and encouraged this memorable actor.

Having thus tried his powers at Ipfwich, and taken all the necessary steps for a London stage, he made his appearance at Goodman's-fields, Oct. 19, 1741, when he acted Richard III. for the first time. His acting was attended with the loudest acclamations of applause; and his fame was fo quickly propagated through the town, that the more established theatres of Drurylane and Covent-garden were deferted. The inhabitants of the most polite parts of the town were drawn after him; and Goodman's-fields were full of the fplendor of St. James's and Grofvenor-fquare. We must not wonder, that the players were the last to admire this rifing genius; who, according to this hiftorian, (and furely he must know) " are more liable to envy and jealoufy than perfons of most other professions." Quin and Cibber could not conceal their uneafinefs and difgust at his great success. The former, upon being told that Goodman's-fields was crouded every night hight to fee the new actor, faid, that "Garrick was a new religion: Whitefield was followed for a time; but they would all come to church again." Garrick; who had a quick and happy talent in pointing an epigram, gave this finart reply to Quin's bon mot:

" Pope Quin, who damns all churches but his own, Complains that herefy corrupts the town. Schifm, he cries, has turn'd the nation's brain; But eyes will open, and to church again. Thou great infallible, forbear to roar; Thy bulls and errors are rever'd no more. When doctrines meet with gen'ral approbation; It is not herefy, but reformation."

It will not be thought ftrange, that the patentees of Drurylane and Covent-garden should be alarmed at the great deficiency in the receipts of their houses, and at the crouds which constantly filled the theatre of Goodman's-fields; for Giffard, the manager there, having found his advantage from Garrick's acting, had admitted him to a full moiety of the profits; and Garrick, in confequence of his being perpetually admired, acted almost every night. Nay, to a long and fatiguing character in the play, he would frequently add another in the farce. Those patentees, therefore, united their efforts, to deftroy the newraifed feat of theatrical empire, and for this purpose intended to have recourse to law. An act of parliament, the 11th of George II. co-operated with their endeavours; which were further aided by fir John Barnard, who, for fome reafons was incenfed against the comedians of Goodman's-fields; in confequence of which, Garrick entered into an agreement with Fleetwood, patentee of Drury-lane, for 500l. a year; and Giffard and his wife, foon after, made the best terms they could with the fame proprietor. During the time of Garrick's acting in Goodman's-fields, he brought on the stage two dramatic pieces; " The Lying Valet, a Farce;" and a dramatic fatire, called " Lethe;" which are still acted with applause. The latter was written before he commenced actor.

The fame of our English Roscius was now so extended, that an invitation, upon very profitable conditions, was sent him to act in Dublin, during the months of June, July, and August, 1742; which invitation he accepted, and went, accompanied by Mrs. Woffington. His fuccess there exceeded all imagination; he was carefied by all ranks as a prodigy of theatrical accomplishment; and the playhous was so crouded during this hot feason, that a very mortal fever was produced, which was called Garrick's fever. He returned to London before the winter, and attended closely to his theatrical profession, in which he was now Bb'2 irrevocably fixed. To purfue the particulars of his life through this would be to give an hiftory of the stage; for which, we rather choose, and it is more confistent with our plan, to refer to the work from which we have extracted this account.

In April 1747, he became joint-patentee of Drury-lane theatre with Mr. Lacy. July, 1749, he was married to mademoifelle Viletti; and, as if he apprehended that this change of condition would expose him to fome farcastical wit, he endeavoured to anticipate it. He procured his friend Mr. Edward More, to write a diverting poem upon his marriage; in which his character is reviewed by fome gossipping ladies; and he is termed by one of them,

> " A very fir John Brute all day, And Fribble all the night."

Indeed, fays his hiftorian, the guarding against distant ridicule, and warding off apprehended censure, was a favourite peculiarity with him through life. When he first acted Macbeth, he was so alarmed with the fears of critical examination upon his new manner, that, during his preparation for the character, he devoted some part of his time to write an humourous pamphlet upon the subject. It was called, "An Essay on Acting; in which will be considered, the mimical Behaviour of a certain fashionable faulty Actor, &c. To which will be added, a short Criticism on his acting Macbeth."

In 1763, he undertook a journey into Italy, and fet out for Dover, in his way to Calais, Sept. 17. His historian assigns feveral causes of this excursion, and among the chief, the prevalence of Covent-garden theatre under the management of Mr. Beard, the finger; but the real caufe probably was, the indifferent health of himfelf and Mrs. Garrick, to the latter of whom the baths of Padua were afterwards of fervice. During his travels, he gave frequent proofs of his theatrical talents; and he readily complied with requests of that kind, because indeed nothing was more eafy to him. He could, without the least preparation, transform himfelf into any character, tragic or comic, and feize instantaneously upon any passion of the human mind. He exhibited tefore the duke of Parma, by reciting a foliloguy of Macbeth; and had friendly contests with the celebrated mademoifelle Clairon at Paris. He faw this actrefs when he paid his first visit to Paris in 1752; and though mademoifelle Dumefnil was then the favourite actrefs of the French theatre, he ventured to pronounce that Clairon would excel all competitors; which prediction was fulfilled.

After he had been abroad about a year and a half, he turned his thoughts homewards; and arrived in London in April, 1765. But, before he fet out from Calais, he put in practice his ufual method of preventing cenfure, and blunting the edge of ridicule, by anticipation; and this, in a poem called, "The Sick Monkey," which he got a friend to print in London, to prepare his reception there. The plan of it was, the talk and cenfure of other animals and reptiles on him and his travels. Wretched, furely, must be the life of a man exposed continually to public infpection, if thus afraid of cenfure and ridicule. Meanwhile, the piece died ftill-born; and it is well it did, if, as his historian fays, "it is among the few things he wrote, which one would wish not to remember." After his return, he was not fo conftantly employed as formerly in the fatigues of acting; he had now more leifure to apply himfelf in writing; and in a few months he produced two dramatic pieces.

In 1769, he projected and conducted the memorable Jubilee at Stratford, in honour of Shakspeare; so much admired by fome, and fo much ridiculed by others: the account of it, by his biographer, is really curious, under more points of view than one. On the death of Mr. Lacy, in 1773, the whole management of the theatre devolved on him. He was now advanced in years; he had been much afflicted with chronical diforders; fometimes with the gout, oftener with the ftone: for relief from the latter of which, he had used lixiviums and other foap medicines, which in reality hurt him. Yet, his friends thought that a retirement from the stage, while he preferved a moderate share of health and spirits, would be more unfriendly to him, than the profecution of a bufinefs, which he could make rather a matter of amufement, than a toilfome impofition. Accordingly, he continued upon the ftage fome time after; but finally left it in June 1776, and difposed of his moiety of the patent to mefficurs Sheridan, Linley, and Ford, for 35,000l. In Chriftmas, 1778, when upon a vifit at earl Spencer's in the country, he was feized with a terrible fit of his old diforder; but recovered fo far, as to venture upon his journey home, where he arrived, at his houfe in the Adelphi, Jan. 15, 1779. The next day, he fent for his apothecary, who found him dreffing himfelf, and feemingly in good health; but fomewhat alarmed, that he had not for many hours difcharged any urine, contrary to his ufual habit." The diforder was inceffantly gaining ground, and brought on a flupor, which increased gradually to the time of his death. This happened Jan. 20, without a groan. His phyficians knew not what to call his illnefs. He was attended by many of them, the day before his death; when, feeing a number of gentlemen in his apartment, he asked who they were? and being told they were all phyficians, he fhook his head, and repeated these lines of Horatio in the Fair Penitent:

" Another

" Another, and another, still succeeds;

Notwithstanding his constant employments, as an actor and a manager, he was perpetually producing various light dramatic compositions; some of which are originals, others translations or alterations from other authors, adapted to the tafte of the present times. In the "Biographia Dramatica," published in two vols. 8vo, 1782, are enumerated no less than 38 of these; besides which, he wrote innumerable prologues, epilogues, longs, &c.

GARTH (Sir SAMUEL), a celebrated poet and phyfician, was born of a good family in Yorkshire, and sent from school to Peter-house-college in Cambridge; where making choice of phyfic for his profession, he acquainted himself with the fundamental principles and preparatory requisites of that useful science. At the fame time he had an admirable genius and tafte for polite literature; and, being much delighted with those studies, he continued at college, employing his leifure hours in that way, till he took the degree of M. D. July 7, 1691 [F]. Soon after this, refolving to undertake the practice of his profession in London, he offered himself a candidate to the College of Phylicians; and, being examined March 12, 1691-2, was admitted fellow June 26th following [G].

The college at this time was engaged in that charitable project, of prescribing to the fick poor [H] gratis, and furnishing them alfo with medicines at prime coft. The foundation of this charity was first begun by an unanimous vote passed July 28, 1687, ordering all their members to give their advice gratis, to all their fick neighbouring poor, when defired, within the city of London, or seven miles round. With the view of rendering this vote more effectual, another was passed Aug. 13, 1688, that the laboratory of the college fhould be fitted up for preparing medicines for the poor, and alfo the room adjoining, for a repofitory. But this being difliked by the apothecaries, they found means to raife a party afterwards in the college against it; fo that the defign could not be carried into execution. The college was in this embroiled state, when our author became a fellow; and concurring heartily with those members who resolved, notwithftanding the difcouragements they met with, to push on the charity, an order was made by the unanimous confent of the fociety in 1694, requiring strict obedience from all their members to the order of 1688. This new order was prefented to the city on June 18, 1695, for their affiftance; but this too being defeated by the diffolution of the common-council at the end of the year, a proposition was made to the college, Dec. 22, 1696, for a fubscription by the fellows, candidates, and licentiates, for carrying on the charity, by preparing medicines in a proper dispensatory for that purpose.

In the fame year, Dr. Garth, detefting the behaviour of the apothecaries, as well as of fome members of the faculty in this affair, 'refolved to expose them by fatire; which he accordingly executed, with peculiar fpirit and vivacity, in his admirable poem, entitled, " The Dispensary." The first edition came out in 1699, and it went through three impressions in a few months. This extraordinary encouragement induced him to make feveral improvements in it; and, in 1706, he published the fixth edition, with feveral defcriptions and epifodes never before printed [1]. In 1697, he spoke the annual speech in Latin before the college, on St. Luke's day; which being foon after published, left it doubtful, whether the poet or the orator was most to be admired. In his poem he exposed, in good fatire, the false and mean-spirited brethren of the faculty. In the oration, he ridiculed the multifarious classes of the quacks, with spirit, and not without humour.

So much literary merit did not fail to gain him a prodigious seputation as a polite scholar, and procured him admittance into the company and friendship of most of the nobility and gentry. of both fexes; who thereby being inclined to try his skill in his profession, were still more pleased to find him answer their wishes and expectations. By fuch means he came into vast practice, which he preferved by his medical merit; and endeared himfelf to his patients, by his politenels, agreeable conversation, generosity, and great good-nature. It was these last qualities, that prompted him, in 1701, to provide a fuitable interment for the fhamefully abandoned corpfe, of Dryden; which he caufed to be brought to the college of physicians, proposed, and encouraged by his own example, a fubfcription for defraying the expence of a funeral, pronounced a fuitable oration over the reinains of the great poet, and afterwards attended the folemnity from Warwick-lane to Westminster-abbey. It is commonly observed, that the making of a man's fortune is generally owing to fome one lucky incident; and nothing was, pethaps, of more fervice in that respect to Dr. Garth, than the opportunity he had of fhewing his true character by this most memorable act of generofity, tendernefs, and piety.

In his Harveian speech, he had stepped a little aside from the principal subject, to introduce a panegyric on king William, and to record the bleffings of the Revolution. The address is warm and glowing: and to fhew that his hand and heart went together, he entered with the first members who formed the famous Kit-Kat Club, which confifted of above 30 noblemen and gentlemen, and was erected in 1703, purely, with the defign of diffinguishing themselves by an active zeal for the Protestant succession, in the house of Hanover [K]. The design of thefe gentlemen, to recommend and encourage loyalty, by the powerful influence of pleafantry, wit, and humour, furnished Dr. Garth with an opportunity of diftinguishing himself among the most eminent in those qualities, by the extempore epigrams he made upon the toasts of the club, which were inferibed on their drinking-glasses.

In the line of politics, Dr. Garth was prompted not more by good fense than by good disposition, to make his mule subfervient to his interest, only by proceeding uniformly in the fame road, without any malignant deviations. Thus, as he had enjoyed the fun-shine of the court during lord Godolphin's administration in queen Anne's reign, that minister had the pleasure to find him among the first of those who paid the muse's tribute on the reverse of his fortune in 1710[L]; and in the fame unchangeable spirit, when both the fense and poetry of this address were attacked by Prior [M] with all the outrage of party virulence, he took no notice of it; but had the fatisfaction to fee an unanfwerable defence made for him, by Addison. The task, indeed, was eafy, and that elegant writer, in the conclusion of it, obferves, that the fame perfon who has endeavoured to prove that he who wrote the " Difpenfary" was no poet, will very fuddenly undertake to fhew, that he who gained the battle of Blenheim was no general [N]. There was, indeed, no need of a prophetic spirit to inspire the prediction. It was written in Sept. 1710; and the following year, in December, the duke of Marlborough was removed from all his places, and, having obtained leave to go abroad, embarked at Dover for Oftend, Nov. 30, 1712. Dr. Garth had lived in the particular favour and esteem of this great man while in power, and when he was out of power he lamented, in elegant verse, his disgrace and voluntary exile.

In the mean time, with the fame feelings, he had written a dedication for an intended edition of Lucretius in 1711, to his late majefty king George I. then elector of Brunfwick. Thus did he perfevere in the fame road, which in the end brought him to preferment. For, on the acceffion of that prince to the throne, Garth had the honour of being knighted with the duke of Marlborough's fword, was appointed king's phyfician in ordinary, and phyfician general to the army. These were no more than just rewards even of his medical merit. He had gone through the office of cenfor of the college in 1702, and had practifed always with great reputation, and a ftrict regard to the honour and interest of the faculty; never stopping to prostitute the dignity of his profession, through mean and fordid views of felf-interest, by courting even the most popular and wealthy apotheca-ries. In a steady adherence to this noble principle, he concurred with the much celebrated Dr. Radcliffe, with whom he was also often joined in phyfical confultations.

Garth had a very extensive practice, but was extremely moderate in his views of advancing his own fortune; his humanity and goodnature inclining him more to make use of the great interest he had with perfons in power, for the fupport and encouragement of other men of letters. He chose to live with the great in that degree of independency and freedom, which became a man possefied of a superior genius, whereof he was daily giving fresh proofs to the public. One of these was addressed to the late duke of Newcastle in 1715, entitled, "Claremont;" being written on the occasion of giving that name to a villa belonging to that nobleman, who was then only earl of Clare, which he had adorned with a beautiful and fumptuous structure [0]. Among the Latin writers, Ovid appears to have been the doctor's favourite; and it has been thought that there was fome resemblance in their dispositions, manners, and poetry. One of his last performances, was an edition of Ovid's metamorphofes, translated by various hands, in which he rendered the whole 14th book, and the story of Cippus in the 15th. It was published in 1717; and he prefixed a preface, wherein he not only gives an idea of the work, and points out its principal beauties, but shews the uses of the poem, and how it may be read to most advantage.

The diftemper which feized him the enfuing year, and ended not but with his life, caufed a general concern, and was particularly teffified by lord Lanfdown, a brother poet, though of a different party, in a copy of verses written on the occasion [P]. He died after a short illhes, which he bore with great patience, Jan. 18, 1718-19. His lofs was lamented by another poetical brother, Pope, in a letter to a friend, as follows: " The bestnatured of men," fays this much-admired poet, " Sir Samuel Garth, has left me in the truest concern for his los. His death was very heroical, and yet unaffected enough to have made a faint or a philosopher famous. But ill tongues and worse hearts have branded even his last moments, as wrongfully as they did. his life, with irreligion. You must have heard many tales on this fubject; but if ever there was a good Christian, without knowing imself to be so, it was Dr. Garth [Q]." He was interred Jan. 22, in the church of Harrow on the Hill, near London, where he had caufed a vault to be built for himfelf and his family; being furvived by an only daughter, married to the honourable colonel William Boyle, a younger fon of the honourable colonel Henry Boyle, uncle to the last earl of Burlington of that name.

GARZI (LOUIS), born at Pistoia in Tufcany, was a painter bred under Andrea Sacchi, and confidered by many as an equal if not superior rival of Carlo Marat. His paintings are not much known in this country, but in Italy are celebrated for the highest excellencies of colouring, design, and composition. He lived a confiderable time at Naples, but returned before his death to Rome, where he had commenced his career, and at the age of 80, painted the dome of the church of Stigmatie (by order of Clement XI.) which was reckoned his most perfect work. He lived to complete it, and died in 1721, at the age of 83.

GASCOIGNE (Sir WILLIAM), chief juffice of the King'sbench in the reign of Henry IV. was defcended of a noble family, originally from Normandy; and born at Gawthorp in Yorkfhire, about 1350. Being defigned for the law, he became a fludent either at Gray's-Inn or the Inner-Temple [R]; and growing eminent in his profediton, was made one of the king's ferjeant's at law, Sept. 1398. October following, he was appointed one of the attornies to Henry IV. then duke of Heréford, on his going into banifhment: and upon the accellion of that prince to the throne, in 1399, fat as judge in the court of Common-pleas. Nov. 1401, he was made chief juffice of the King's-bench; and how much he diftinguifhed himfelf in that office, appears from the feveral abltracts of his opinions, argu-

July 1403, he was joined in a commission with Ralph Nevil, earl of Westmorland, and others, to issue their power and au-thority, for levying forces in Yorkshire and Northumberland, against the infurrection of Henry Percy, earl of that county, in favour of Richard II. and, after that earl had fubmitted, was nominated, April 1405, in another commission to treat with his rebellious abettors, a proclamation to the purpose being iffued next day by the king at Pontefract. These were legal trusts; and he executed them, from a principle of gratitude and loyalty, with fpirit and steadines. But, on the taking of archbishop Scroop in arms the fame year, when the king required him to pass sentence upon that prelate as a traitor, in his manor house at ` Bishopthorp near York, he withstood the king to his face: no prospect of fear or favour being able to corrupt him to any such violation of the subjects rights, or infringement of their laws and liberties as then established; which suffered no religious person to be brought to a secular or lay trial, unless he were a heretic, and first degraded by the church. He therefore refused to obey the royal command, and faid to his majefty : " Neither you, my lord the king, nor any liege subject of yours in your name, can legally, according to the rights of the kingdom, ad-judge any bithop to death." Henry was highly difpleafed at this instance of his intrepidity; but his anger must have been short, if, as Fuller tells us, Gascoigne had the honour of knighthood conferred on him the same year. However that be, it is certain, the king was fully fatisfied with his fidelity and circumfpection in treating with the rebels; and on that account joined. him again in a commission as before, dated at Pontefract-castle, April 25, 1408.

Befides the weight of his decifions in the King's-bench, already mentioned, he was engaged in reforming and regulating other public affairs, purfuant to the refolutions and directions of the parliament. Of which we shall give one instance. The attornies being even then grown by their multitude and malpractice a public grievance [s]. an act was made in 1410, not only for the reduction and limitation of them to a certain number for every county, but also for their amendment and correction; as that they should be fworn every term to deal faithfully and truly by their clients, and in breach thereof be imprifoned for a twelvemonth, and then make their ranfom according to the king's will: and it being farther enacted, that the justices of both benches fhould make this regulation, fir W. Gafcoigne must unavoidably have had a principal part in promoting the general benefit by redreffing that grievance.

[s] There was but 140 lawyers and attornies in England, in the time of Edward I. as appears in a parliament-roll, ann. 20 wards they were reckoned at 10,000 by of that reign, in 2292. Yet, Fortefcue lord Coke, in Epil. to Inft. iv.

From viewing what is already advanced, there is fufficient reason to place fir William Gascoigne in the rank of chief justices of the first merit, both for his integrity and abilities. But these would have been overlooked in the general hiftories, had he not diftinguished himself above his brethren, by a most memorable transaction in the latter end of this king's reign. A fervant of the prince of Wales (afterwards Henry V.) being arraigned for felony at the bar of the King's-bench; the news soon reached his master's ears, who, hastening to the court, ordered him to be unfettered, and offered to refcue him. In this being oppofed by the judge, who commanded him to leave the prifoner and depart, he rushed furiously up to the bench, and, as is generally affirmed, struck the chief justice, then sitting in the execution of his office. Hereupon, fir William, nothing difmayed, after fome expostulations upon the outrage, indignity, and unwarrantable interruption of the proceedings in that place, directly. committed him to the King's-bench prison, there to wait his father's pleasure; and the prince submitted to his punishment, with a calmnefs no lefs fudden and furprifing, than the offence had been which drew it upon him. The king, being informed of the whole affair, was fo far from being displeased with the chief justice, that he returned thanks to God, "That he had given him both a judge who knew how to administer, and a fon who could obey justice." The prince also, who had for some time led a diffolute life, was entirely reformed thereby, and afterwards became, with the title of Henry V. that renowned king who conquered France. This extraordinary event has been recorded, not only in the general histories of the reigns of these two foverigns, but celebrated also by the poets [T]; and, particularly Shakspeare, in the fecond part of "Henry IV."

[T] In a play called "Henry V." Tarleton, a famous comedian, reprefented not only his own part of the clown, but that of the judge, the player whofe part that was being absent; and prince Henry being reprefented by one Knell, another droll comedian of those times, when the blow was to be given, ftruck chief justice Tarleton fuch a swinging box on the year, as almost felled him to the ground, and fet the house in an uproar of merriment. When Tarleton the judge went off, presently after entered farleton the clown; and according to that liberty, wherewith the players of those days were indulged, of intruding fomething of their own, he very fimply and unconcernedly afked the reaton of all that laughter, like one who was an utter firanger to it. O, faid another player, hadit thou been here, thoud'ft feen prince Henry hit the judge a terrible box o' the car. What, firike a judge! quoth Tarleton? Nothing lefs, faid the other. Then, replied he, it must indeed be terrible to the judge; fince the very report fo terrifies me, that methinks, the blow remains to fresh ftill on my cheek, that it burns again. This, it feems, raifed a louder applause in the house than the first. Tarleton's Jefts, 1611, 4to.

This

This unparalleled example of firmnels and civil intrepidity upon that bench, happened in the latter end of Henry IVth's reign; and the chief justice having thus crowned his years with never-fading honour, did not long furvive the ftruggle. He was called to the parliament which met in the first year of Henry V. but died before the expiration of the year, Dec. 17, 1413-He was twice married, and had a train of defcendants by both his wives: by the former, the famous earl of Strafford, in the reign of Charles I.

GASCOIGNE (GEORGE), an early English poet, whose writings though they exhibit few marks of strength [u], are not destitute of delicacy. He was born in Essex, educated, according to Wood, at both universities, but more particularly at Cambridge; studied at Gray's-Inn, and ferved in the wars in the low countries. When he returned from this fervice, he applied his attention to polite literature, and became a celebrated poet. Lord Grey of Wilton was his patron, from whom he received, by his own acknowledgment, particular favours. The best of his poems have been printed, and specimens of them have been given in feveral late publications. He died in 1578, at Walthamstow, which seems to have been the residence of his family.

GASPARINI, a celebrated grammarian, firnamed Barzizio, from Barzizia, the place of his nativity near Bergamo, was born about 1370, when Europe was yet in a state of Gothic barbarity: but, having wit and tafte himfelf, he endeavoured to propagate them among others. He read Cicero, Virgil, Cæfar, and all the good writers of antiquity; feized the fpirit of them, and communicated it to his pupils. The university of Padua invited him to be their professor of belles lettres, and it seems as if he was there for fome time : but the duke of Milan, Philip Visconti, took him to himself, loaded him with favours, and honoured him with a most intimate friendship. Gasparini died in 1431. We have commentaries of his upon feveral parts of Cicero, and other works. His " Letters and Orations" were reprinted in 1723, with a' curious and useful preface. He was deservedly recorded as one of the first restorers of good Latinity in Italy.

GASSENDI (PETER), was born Jan. 22, N. S. 1592, at a village called Chanterfier, about three miles from Digne in Provence, in France. His father, Antony Gaffendi, being a Roman catholic, took very early care to breed him with great piety in that religion, fo that the first words he learned to pronounce were those of his prayers. This practice made fuch an impreffion upon his infant mind, which was also well disposed by nature, that at four years of age he played the preacher, either in reproving or exhorting his playfellows, as occasion prompted, In these first years of his youth, he likewise took particular delight in gazing at the moon and ftars, as often as they appeared in clear uncloudy weather. This pleafure drew him frequently into bye-places, in order to feast his eyes freely and undisturbed; but by these means his parents had him often to feek, not without many anxious fears and apprehenfions. As foon, therefore, as he grew fit for it, they put him to fchool at Digne, to Godfry Wendeline [x], an excellent master, under whofe care he made a quick and extraordinary progrefs in learning. In a very fhort time he conquered not only the elements of the Latin language, but was fo far advanced in rhetoric, as to be fuperior to all the boys in that fchool; for which reason it was thought proper by fome perfons, who had feen fpecimens of his genius, to have him removed, in order to ftudy philosophy under Fefay, a very learned Minorite friar, then at Aix. The propafal was not much relifhed by his father, whofe defign was to breed up his fon in his own way to country bufinefs, or farming, as a more profitable employment than that of a scholar. Nor could he be brought to confent to the proposed removal, but upon this condition, that the boy fhould return home in two years at Young Gaffendi, accordingly, at the end of his alfarthest. lotted time, repaired to Chanterfier; but he did not ftay there long, being invited to be a teacher of rhetoric at Digne, before he was full fixteen years of age; and he had been engaged in this not above three years, when his mafter Fefay dying, he was made professor of philosophy in his room at Aix.

He was fcarcely yet paft the bounds of childhood. But he had been here only a few years, when his merit raifed him alfo above this profeflorfhip. For he had, at leifure hours, by way of trial of his wit, composed his "Paradoxical Exercitations[x];" and those admirable effays coming to the hands of the famous Nicolas Peiresc, that great patron of learning joined with Joseph Walter, prior of Valette, in a resolution to take him out of the way of losing his time in empty scholastic squabbles, and procure him a place in the church, which would afford him such leifure and quiet as was necessary for cultivating more fublime and useful researches. He was now of years sufficient to receive the priesthood; he therefore entered into holy orders; and being first made a canon of the church of Digne, and D. D. he obtained the wardenship or rectory of the fame church, which was carried by the interest of his two friends, though not without fome difficulty, against feveral competitors. He held this place for the space of twenty years; and during that time several of those pieces were written which make up the collection of his works.

In 1628, he accompanied Francis Luillere, mafter of accounts at Paris, in his journey to the Netherlands; which was the only time he was ever out of France. In Holland he wrote his Exercitation against Fludd in defence of Merfennus, who, upon his fetting out on this journey, had put Fludd's book into his hands for that purpofe [z]. During his stay in this country, he alfo became acquainted, among others, with Des Cartes, and John Gerard Vosius; against the former of whom he maintained a dispute upon the subject of metaphysics [A], and he convinced the latter of his great still and excellent knowledge in the mathematics [B]. In 1640, he was fixed on for proctor of his diocese in the general synod of the Gallican church, but the election was carried for another by the interest of cardinal Richelieu.

Gaffendi had from his infancy a turn to aftronomy, as has been mentioned. His ardour for that fcience grew up with his years; and, in 1618, he had begun to make obfervations upon the ftars, and to digeft them into a method. His reputation daily increasing, he became fo eminent in that way, that in 1645 he was appointed royal professor of mathematics at Paris, by the interest of Alphonse du Pless, cardinal of Lyons, and brother to cardinal Richelieu. This institution being chiefly designed for astronomy, Gassendi not only employed his telescope [c] very diligently, but read lectures in that fcience with great applause to a crouded audience. He did not, however, hold this place long; for contracting a cold, which brought on a dangerous cough, and an inflammation of his lungs, he found himself under a necessity of quitting Paris; and being advised by

[A] It is inferted next after the laftmentioned piece, and entitled, "Difquifitio Metaphyfica adverfus Cartefium." 'It was printed by the confent, and even at the defire, of Des Cartes, who prefently returned an anfwer: to which Gaffendi replied.

[B] In his hiftory of the mathematical writers, Vossius writes thus of Gaffendi: "Ac deinceps varia doctrina, imprimis mathefi, eluxit Petrus Gaffendus, cujus fingularem & multijugam eruditionem non potui non mirari; cum Belgiam hanc luftrans, anno MDCXXIX, inter alios me non femel falutatione & alloquio fuaviffimo dignaretur."

[c] At first he used a telescope made by Galileo; but fir Kenelm Digby, in his return from Rome, presented him with one made by that celebrated artist Eustachius, which Gassendi preserved to that of Galileo, the physicians to return to Digne for the benefit of his native air, he went there in 1647.

This advice had the defired fuccefs; which was alfo effected the fooner by the kindnefs of Louis Valois, earl of Alais, and viceroy of Provence, who, obferving the philofopher's circumftances, invited him to his houfe; where Gaffendi's converfation upon points of learning gave him fo high an idea of his talents, that he frequently made ufe of him as a friend and counfellor in the affairs of his poft. He had the fatisfaction of enjoying this honourable eafe as long as the viceroy continued in Provence; and when that nobleman was called to court, Gaffendi returned to Digne, where he began to write the life of his patron, the famous Nicolas Peirefc, a tafk which had been enjoined him by the earl of Alais.

He refided at Digne till the year 1653; when in company of Francis Bernier, phyfician, and Anthony Poller his amanuenfis, he returned to Paris. Here he refided in the houfe of the honourable M. Monmor, master of the court of requests, who had infifted upon his promife to that purpofe, before his laftmentioned departure from that city. At the request of this friend, he had alfo at the fame time engaged to write the life of Tycho Brahe, and had then made feveral collections with that view; and this request being now renewed, he immediately fet about the work, and published it at Paris, with the lives of Copernicus, Purbachius, and Regiomontanus, in 1654, 4to. But he neither fuffered this nor any other business to prevent him from going on with his celestial observations; and he had no fooner finished the last-mentioned book, than he proceeded to complete his fystem of the heavens: While he was thus employed, too intenfely for the feeble state of his health, he relapsed into his former diforder, which had been relieved by the intermission of his studies; so that he was neither able to enjoy his garden-walks, nor the fociety of his friends, with his usual alacrity; and in the autumn of his years, his cafe became desperate.

In the first attack he had been relieved by phlebotomy, which, however, fo much enfeebled him, that he never recovered his former strength. Yet this, as the only remedy in his cafe, was judged necessary by his physicians. He had suffered this depletion for the ninth time, when, perceiving himself to be too much funk, he modestly proposed to forbear a repetition, as thinking himself not able to undergo it; and two of his physicians had yielded to this fuit, when a third, strutting about the room with an air of sufficiency and haughtines, and obstinately infisting on the contrary, drew his colleagues into his opinion. Whereupon, Gassendi also submitted, and the operation was repeated even to the fourth time afterwards. In the laft of which, holding out his arm for the purpofe, he faid to Peter his amanuenfis, who conftantly attended him, "It is more eligible by this deprivation of ftrength to fleep quietly in Chrift, than to be taken off with more pain by fuffocation [D]." Accordingly, this being executed upon him, he prefently felt himfelf approaching to his laft hour, and fent for a prieft to adminifter the viaticum; which being given, he expired [E] about four in the afternoon, on Sunday, Oct. 22, 1655, in the 63d, or grand climacteric, of his age. At his death, his hand was found upon the region of his heart, which place he had frequently defired his amanuenfis to touch, in order to mark the fyftole and diaftole, or the motion, of that great fpring of life; which when this attendant obferved to be very faint and fluttering, he faid, "You fee what is man's life;" which were the laft words he fpoke.

He had made his will Oct. 15 preceding, by which he appointed M. de Monmor his executor, and left him all his MSS. with leave to publish fuch as he should think fit for the press; in purfuance whereof that gentleman, with the affiftance of another friend, having carefully collected and perused them, came to this opinion, that he had written nothing which was not worthy of him. Whereupon, adding these to his pieces before printed, the whole was published by the order and direction of his worthy executor, at Leyden, 1658, in fix volumes, folio. This honourable friend had before testified his great respect for Gaffendi's memory at his funeral, which was performed two days after his death; by depositing his corpse with those of his own ancestors, in the church of St. Nicholas in the Fields, at Paris. Here, alfo, he erected a handfome monument, exhibiting his buft cut by Nanteuil, and fet upon a frame of black, inclofing a plate of white marble; upon which was an infeription, in the clofe whereof his character is elegantly and literally expressed in three words, attefting his " Piety, Wildom, and Learning [F]." His dirge and requiem, and funeral rites, according to the ufage in the Romish church, were likewise performed in the church of Digne; and a funeral oration pronounced by Nicolas Tixelius, his fucceffor in that rectory, who printed it at Leyden in 1656. It appears by his letters, printed in the fixth volume of his GASTAUD (FRANCIS), an ecclefiaftic, a native of Aix in Provence, who was first a father of the fociety called the Oratory, then a preacher at Paris, and lastly, a pleader at his native city. He was violent in his attachments and diflikes; one of the most ardent admirers of Quefnel, and one of the greatest adversaries of Girard and his fociety. He was embroiled with the bishop of Marfeilles, about the time of his death, which happened in 1732, at Viviers, to which place he had been banished. In confequence of this difagreement with the bishop, occasioned by fome of his writings, he was denied the regular rites of fepulture. His chief works were, 1. "A fet of Homilies on the Epistle to the Romans," 2 vols. 12mo. 2. "The Policy of the Jefuits unmasked." 3. "Funeral Oration of Madame Tiquet," a matter of pleafantry, which yet obtained a ferious answer.

GASTRELL (FRANCIS), an English bishop, was born about 1662, at Slapton in Northamptonshire; and, being fent to Westminster-school, was there admitted on the foundation, and elected to Chrift-church in Oxford, where he of courfe became a student in 1680 G. He took the degrees in arts at the statuable period [H]; after which, entering into orders, and proceeding in divinity, he took a bachelor's degree in that faculty, June 23, 1681. The fame year he was made preacher to the Hon. Society of Lincoln's-inn; and this station bringing him into public notice, he was appointed to preach Mr. Boyle's lecture in 1697. Having finished those eight fermons, he drew them up in the form of a continued difcourse, which he published the fame year; the subject of this piece being a defence of religion in general against atheifm, Gastrell profecuted the defign further, in afferting the truth of the Christian religion against the deists. This he published in another discourse, in 1699, by way of continuation, or fecond part of the fame fubject. He commenced D. D. July 13, 1700; being then chaplain to Robert Harley, esq; speaker of the house of commons. The ferment that had been raifed by the difpute between South and Sherlock upon the Trinity, being still kept up, Dr. Gastrell, in 1702, published " Some Confiderations concerning the Trinity, and the Ways of managing that Controverfy:" and the Meanwhile, he continued to give public proofs of his hearty concern for religion; and published, in 1707, his excellent work, entitled, " The Christian Institutes, or the fincere Word of God, &c. [k]." The fame year alfo, being appointed to preach the fermon at the anniverfary meeting of the charity. schools in London, he printed that discourse; wherein the peculiar advantage of these charities is set in a new light, by contrafting them with the popifh monasteries. Mr. Collins, in his "Effay concerning the Ufe of Reafon," having animadverted on fome things in the doctor's " Confiderations concerning the Trinity," which had gone through two editions; he this year put forth a third, fubjoining a vindication of the work, in anfwer to Collins. In 1711, he was chosen proctor in convocation for the chapter of Christ-church, and appointed one of the chaplains in ordinary to the queen. In 1714, he published "Remarks upon the Scripture Doctrine of the Trinity, by Dr. Samuel Clarke;" who acknowledged, that the objections to his doctrine were there fet forth to particular advantage, by the skill of a very able and learned writer, and proposed with a reafonable and good fpirit [L]. He refigned the preacher's place at Lincoln's-inn this year, upon his promotion to the fee of Chefter; and he was allowed to hold his canonry of Christ-church in commendam. He had for fome time before been appointed one of the commissioners for building the 50 new churches in and about London; and had become a member of the fociety for propagating the Gofpel in foreign parts.

Thus his merit found all the reward and encouragement which he could expect, from the court and ministry of queen Anne; but this brought him under the difpleafure of the administration in the fucceeding reign, which, being shewn, as he conceived, without any just or reasonable grounds, was refented by him. At this period, he became a patron to the university; and appeared warmly in its vindication, in the house of lords, when it was attacked there for a pretended riot on the birthday of the prince of Wales in 1717. At the fame time he teftified the greatest abhorrence of this and all other marks of difloyalty shewn by that learned body, and used all his influence to prevent and check them.

He now engaged in a very remarkable contest with the archbishop of Canterbury, about the degrees granted in virtue of his metropolitical power. The occasion was this. The prefentation to the place of warden of the collegiate church of Manchefter in Lancashire falling to the crown, George I. nominated Mr. Samuel Peploe, vicar of Preston in the same county. But that gentleman, being then only M.A. found himfelf obliged by the charter of the college, to take the degree of B. D. as a neceffary qualification to hold the wardenship. To that end, having been bred at Oxford, where he had taken his former degrees, he went thither in order to obtain this; and had actually prepared the best part of his exercise for that purpose, when he was called to Lambeth, and there created B. D. by the archbishop, who thought the university ought, in respect to the royal nomination, to difpenfe with the usual exercise. With this title, he applied to bifhop Gastrell, in whose diocese the church of Manchester lies, for institution. But the bishop, being perfuaded that his degree was not a fufficient qualification in this cafe, refuled to admit him; and observed to him, that being in all respects qualified to take his degree regularly in the university, he might proceed that way without any danger of being denied; that, however, if he defired any favour usually indulged to other perfons, he would endeavour to obtain it for him, and did not doubt but the university would grant it [M]. On the other hand, Mr. Peploe infifted on his qualification by the archbishop, and had recourfe to the court of King's-bench, where fentence was given in his favour. Hereupon, bishop Gastrell, in his own vindication, published, " The bishop of Chester's Case, with relation to the Wardenship of Manchester. In which is shewn, that no other Degrees, but fuch as are taken in the University, can be deemed legal Qualifications for any Ecclefiaftical Preferment in England." This was printed at Oxford; and that university, March 22, 1720, decreed in a full convocation, that folemn thanks fhould be returned to the bifhop, for having fo fully afferted the rights, privileges, and dignities, belonging to the univerfity degrees in this book.

This affair was fcarcely concluded, when the profecution commenced against Atterbury, bishop of Rochester [N]. Bifhop Gastrell never liked the haughty temper of that prelate, and had always opposed his arbitrary attempts while dean of Christ-church; yet, being fatisfied in his confcience, that the proceedings in parliament against him were pushed on with too much violence, he opposed them with great resolution; and when the bill for inflicting pains and penalties upon Atterbury was before the houfe of lords, he fpoke against it with earnestness and warmth, not fparing to cenfure the reft of his brethren the bithops, who all concurred with the bill [0].

He furvived the bishop of Rochester's banishment but a few years. The gout, with which he had been much afflicted in the latter part of his life, put a period to it, Nov. 24, 1725. He died at his canon's lodgings in Christ-church, and was buried in that cathedral without any monument: but, as Dr. Willis observes, he left a sufficient monument of himself in his writings, and his virtues are far from being yet forgotten. Befides the pieces already mentioned, he published "A moral Proof of a future State," in 8vo, which being printed without his name, gave occasion to ascribe some other pieces of a similar nature to him, but without any certainty.

GATAKER (THOMAS), defcended from a family of that name at Gatacre-hall [P] in Shropshire, was born in 1574, in the parsonage-house of St. Edmund the King, in Lombard-street, London, where his father was then minister [Q]. At 16 years of age he was fent to St. John's-college in Cambridge; where, in due time, he took both the degrees in arts. He was greatly diftinguished by his abilities, learning, and piety; infomuch that, the foundation of Sidney-college being laid about this time, he was, by archbp. Whitgift, and Dr. Goodman dean of Westminster, the trustees of that foundation, appointed a fellow of that fociety, even before the building was finished [R]. In the mean while he went into Effex, as tutor to the eldeft fon of Mr. afterwards fir William Ayloff, of Berksted, who himself learned Hebrew of him at the fame time. During his refidence here, he ufually expounded a portion of Scripture to the family every morning; wherein, after rendering the text into English from the original language, he explained the fense of it, and concluded with fome useful observations. Dr. Stern, then fuffragan bishop of Colchester, being nearly related to the mistrefs of the family [s], happened in a visit to be present at one of these performances [T]; and, being ftruck with admiration, instantly exhorted the expounder to enter into the priesthood; and Mr. Gataker was ordained by that fuffragan,

This step was conformable to the statutes of his new college; and as foon as the building was finished; about 1599, he settled there, and became an eminent tutor. At the fame time, he engaged in a defign, then fet on foot, of preaching in fuch places adjacent to the university, as were destitute of ministers. In performing this engagement he preached every Sunday at Everton, a village upon the borders of Cambridge, Bedford, and Huntingdonshires; the vicar of which parish was said to be 130 years old Lu]. He had not executed this charitable office above fix months, when he grew uneafy in the university : and, going to London, refided as chaplain in the family of fir William Cook at Charing-crofs, to whofe lady he was nearly related. This fituation made him known to feveral perfons of fashion and fortune, and, among others, to fome principal members of Lincoln's-inn; of which fociety he was chosen preacher, about 1601. He thought it his duty to refide there during term-time, when he was obliged to attend the chapel; but in the vacations he went down to fir William Cook's in Northamptonshire, and conftantly preached there, either in their private chapel or in the parish-church. In 1603, he commenced B. D. and was afterwards often folicited to proceed to doctor; but he declined it. He did not at all approve of pluralities; and upon that principle refused a confiderable benefice in Kent, which was offered him by fir William Sedley, while he held the preachership at Lincoln's-inn [x]. Having married in 1611, he quitted that place for the rectory of Rotherhithe in Surrey : yet yielded to the acceptance of this living, only in the view of keeping it out of the hands of a very unworthy perfon.

In 1616 and 1617, he wrote two letters to archbp. Ufher, concerning fome curious MSS. of the famous Robert Grofthead, bifhop of Lincoln, and others [v]. It is true, that fome miftakes in those letters are corrected by his correspondent, who, however, thought the whole very worthy of his notice; and they are mentioned here chiefly, as they shew at once his own modelly and erudition, as well as the effecem which Usher had for him. All this however he posseffed in private, his modely being yet unconquerable by any folicitations to commit any thing to the prefs; but this backwardness was at length fubdued.

He had, in fome of his difcourfes at Lincoln's-inn, delivered his opinion concerning lots and lotteries, and fhewn the lawfulnefs of the luforious, and the unlawfulnefs of divinatory lots; which being mifreprefented, he published "A Difcourfe of the Nature and Ufe of Lots; a Treatife Hiftorical and Theological, 1619," 4to. This publication made a great noife, and drew him afterwards into a controverfy: but before that happened, he m de a tour through the Low Countries, in company with two friends, and a nephew of his, then a young fludent. They fet out July 13, 1620, and arriving at Middleburgh in Zealand, Gataker preached in the English church there; and in his travels confuted the English papists in Flanders. His mother, yet alive, was apprehensive of fome mischief befalling him, as he was a known adverfary to the popifh caufe; but he returned with his companions fafe Aug. 14, having viewed the most confiderable places in the Low Countries. During this fort ftay he had an opportunity of feeing the diffreffed state of the protestants in Holland; with which he was to much affected, that he even thought it behoved the English to give up fome national interests then disputed by them, for fear of ruining the protestant cause. This, however, flewed him perhaps to be not fo much of a found politician, as of a pious divine  $[\mathbf{Z}]$ .

After his arrival at Rotherhithe, feveral objections having been made to his vindication of luforious lots, he published a defence of it in 1623. In 1624, he printed a tract against transubftantiation; and his fhort catechifm came out the fame year. In 1640, and the following years, he engaged in the controverfy concerning justification; and being appointed one of the affembly of divines who met at Westminster, he gave his attendance there, and among other conferences supported his opinion upon the last-mentioned article; but the point being determined by the majority against his fense, he submitted, and subscribed the covenant alfo, though he had declared his opinion in favour of epifcopacy. He engaged likewife with the affembly in writing annotations upon the Bible; and the books of Isaiah, Jeremiah, and the Lamentations, fell to his fhare, which, in the opinion of Calamy, are exceeded by no commentator ancient or modern on those books. In the mean time, upon the removal of Dr. Comber, he was offered the mastership of Trinity-college, Cambridge; but declined it on account of his health. Yet the ill state of this did not hinder him from profecuting his studies. Though confined to his chamber, he drew up his treatife, " De Nomine Tetragrammato," in defence of the common way of pronouncing the word Jehovah in England [A]. This was printed in 1645, and was followed the next year by another difcourfe, " De Diphthongis five Bivocalibus ;" wherein he endeavours to fhew, that there are no diphthongs, and that two vowels can never unite in fuch a manner as to form one fyllable [B], Mr. John Saltmarsh having published a treatise, the preceding year, in defence of the Antinomian doctrine, concerning "free grace," Gataker this year, 1646, wrote an answer to it, en-titled, "A Mistake or Misconstruction removed, &c." In 1647, he recovered in strength fo far, as to be able to go to church, and he ventured into the pulpit, where in preaching he burft a vein in his lungs, the mifchief of which was however prevented for the present, by letting blood. He soon after refumed his preaching; but this threw him again into a fpitting of blood, which, though relieved again by opening a vein, made the pulpit duty too dangerous. Yet he continued to administer the facraments, and to give his usual short discourses at funerals, fuitable to the occasion. Being thus disabled from preaching, he supplied that defect as far as possible, by publishing feveral learned works; most of which, besides others already mentioned, were printed among his " Opera Critica," at Utrecht, in 1668, folio.

He was the first of the 47 ministers, who in 1648, subscribed the remonstrance to the army and the general, against the defign of trying and executing the king. He was not at all pleafed with the principles and proceedings of the independent faction, which prevailed then and afterwards; and declared his opinion in defence of the doctrine and discipline of the presbyterian polity, both in private conferences, and openly from the pulpit. Among these he had fome friends still in power, that maintained him in the posseffion of his legal rights. But, as foon as it appeared that he was rather fuspected than countenanced by the state, fome of his parishioners refused payment of their share of the composition for the tithes of their houses; which, upon an amicable law-fuit, had been decreed him in the court of exchequer, and in fatisfaction for which, he confented to accept of 401. per ann. This refufal he bore with patience, and diverting himfelf in his study, produced several other learned works; among which his edition of " Marcus Antoninus's Meditations, with his Preliminary Discourse of the Philosophy of the Stoics, and Commentary [c]," is most esteemed.

In 1653, he was drawn into a difpute with Lilly the aftrologer, about the certainty of his art, which he had maintained was revealed to mankind by the good angels. Our author, in his annotations upon Jeremiah, taking notice of this profaneness, had used the aftrologer a little roughly, calling him blind buzzard, &c. in return to which, Lilly in his "Annus Tenebrofus," reflected upon the divine; who replied, in "A Vindication of the Annotations, &c. 1653," 4to. It is faid that he had thought proper before he had published this piece, to confult Mr. Briggs, for his opinion in the point; whereupon the profeffor returned a decifive and ready anfwer, that he conceived it to be a mere fystem of groundless conceits. To this Lilly printing an anfwer, wherein he charged his antagonist with covetouineis, and proftituting his function to worldly views, Gataker wrote " A Difcourfe Apologetical," vindicating himfelf from those calumnies [D]. This last piece was published in 1654; and the fame year he died, being in his 80th year. His corpfe was interred at his own church, Mr. Simon Alhe preaching his funeral fermon: this was printed in 1655, with a narrative of hislife, which has been the ground-work of this memoir. He would never suffer his picture to be drawn, and probably it is owing to the fame caufe, that no ftone marked the place of his burial E.

Mr. Ashe gives him the following character. As to his perfon, he was of a middle stature, a thin habit of body, a lively countenance, and fresh complexion, of a temperate diet, of a free and chearful conversation, addicted to study, but not fecluding himfelf from useful company; of a quick apprehension, sharp reason, folid judgment, and so extraordinary a memory, that though he used no common-place book, yet he had all his reading in readiness, as his prodigious number of quotations shew. He was a man fo moderate and confcientious, that he would not go the length of any party, which was the true reafon of his not accepting preferment, and also of his being difliked fucceffively by all parties. In the reigns of James and Charles I. he difliked the high notions of churchmen, and the maxims of the government, which he rightly forefaw would be fatal both to them and the church. When he came amongst the divines at Westminster, for which he never received any thing, he drew upon himself the displeasure at least, if not the hatred, of such as were zealous for the hierarchy: but when he declared himfelf in that affembly in favour of epifcopacy, and excepted against the folemn league and covenant, till the words were fo altered as to be understood only of ecclesiastical courts and the exorbitant power of bishops, he lost the affections of the other party, who were for destroying episcopacy root and branch. His open declaration against the fublequent proceedings of those who refolved all power and authority into that of the fword, heightened

[D] This led him to give an account of feveral transactions of his life, and how he came by his preferments. He was very temperate in his diet and way of living, which was all the reason Lilly had for charging him with avarice. Yet the aftrologer, in defence of his craft, perfecuted him after his death. See his article. [E] Aubrey's Hift. of Surrey; in Rotherhithe. the averfion of the predominant faction, and exposed him to much ill-treatment from their tools; who charged him with inconftancy, changing fides, and fquaring his doctrine to the times: whereas he was always confistent in his principles, and, instead of shifting from party to party, was never the instrument of any; but lived contented upon a very small provision, at most sool. a year, and was revised for even keeping that.

His extensive learning was admired by the great men abroad, as Salmafius and others, with whom he held a correspondence. Axenius ftyles him a man of infinite reading and exact judgment; and Colomies tells us, that of all the critics of that age, who have written for the advancement of polite learning, there is none fuperior to him in the talent of explaining authors [F]. Morhoff speaks of all his Latin works with high commendation [G]: and Baillet has a chapter concerning his writings, in which he acknowledges his profound skill in the learned languages, his great accuracy and admirable fagacity; but adds, that he was too bold in his conjectures [H]. Gataker left feveral MSS. fome of which were published by his fon Charles Gataker, rector of Haggerston in Buckinghamsthire. In the course of his long life he had four wives. His fon was also an author, but of no great or important work.

GAUBIL (ANTOINE), one of the French miffionaries in China, whole knowledge of that country was carried to a wonderful extent by an active fpirit of enquiry, and a refidence of thirty years in it. He was bern at Caillae, in 1708, and died in 1759. He acted as interpreter at the court of Pekin; and his knowledge of the feiences and hiftory of China were matter of aftonifhment to the Chinefe themfelves. He fent many curious memoirs on the fubject to Europe, befides which, he publifhed a good hiftory of Gengifkhan, in 4to, 1739; and a tranflation of the Chou King, in 1771. His eulogium may be found in the 31ft vol. of the "Lettres curieufes et edifiantes."

GAUDEN (JOHN), was fon of John Gauden vicar of Mayfield in Effex, where he was born in 1605. He had his grammar-learning at Bury St. Edmunds in Suffolk, whence he was removed to St. John's-college in Cambridge; and, having made a good proficiency in academical learning, took his degrees in arts. About 1630, he married a daughter of fir William Ruffel of Chippenham in Cambridgefhire, and was prefented to that vicarage. He alfo obtained the rectory of Brightwell in Berkfhire, which bringing him near Oxford, he entered himfelf of Wadham-college in that univerfity, and became tutor to two of his father-in-law's fons; other young gentlemen, and fome noblemen, were alfo put under his care. He proceeded B. D. July, 1635; and D. D. July 8, 1641.

He had now been some years chaplain to Robert earl of Warwick; and that nobleman fiding with the parliament against the king, was followed therein by his chaplain, who being appointed, Nov. 29, 1640, to preach before the houfe of commons, adapted his difcourfe to exactly to the humour of the prevailing party, that they made him a prefent of a large filver tankard, which was generally made use of in his house, with this infeription, " Donum honorarium populi Anglicani in parliamento congregati, Johanni Gaudenati." This was only an earnest of future favours. In that discourse he inveighed against pictures, images, and other superstitions of popery: and the parliament next year prefented him to the rich deanery of Bocking in Effex. He accepted the nomination, but did not choose to depend entirely upon it; and therefore made interest with Laud, then prifoner in the Tower, and procured a collation from that archbishop, undoubtedly the rightful patron [1].

Upon the abolition of the hierarchy, and establishment of the prefbyterian form of church government, he complied with the ruling powers, was chosen one of the affembly of divines, who met at Westminster in 1643, and took the covenant as enjoined by their authority; though he was far from approving it, and offered his feruples and objections against it, both as to matter and authority; and though his name was among those who were to constitute the assembly of divines, yet it was afterwards struck off the lift, and Mr. Thomas Godwin put into his room. He published the fame year a piece, entitled, " Certain Scruples and Doubts of Conficience about taking the folemn League and Covenant, tended to the Confideration of fir Lawrence Bromfield and Zacharias Crafton," 4to: and though, at length, he forbore the use of the Liturgy of England, yet he persevered in it longer in his church than any of his neighbours. Nor did he continue any longer openly to efpouse the cause of the parliament, than they fluck to their first avowed principles of reforming only, and not rooting out monarchy and epifcopacy.

With thefe difpofitions, he was one of those divines, who figned the protestation which was prefented to the army, against trying and destroying the king; and not content with joining among others in that cause, he distinguished himself above the rest by publishing a piece, entitled, "The religious and loyal Protestation of John Gauden, Doctor in Divinity, against the present declared Purposes and Proceedings of the Army, and others, about the trying and destroying of our Sovereign Lord the King; fent to a Colonel, to be prefented to the Lord Fairfax, and his General Council of Officers, the 5th of January, 1648, Lond. 1648," 4to. Nor did his zeal ftop here: prefently after the king's death he wrote what he called, " A juft Invective against those of the Army and their Abettors, who murthered king Charles I. on the 30th of January, 1648, with fome other poetical Pieces in Latin, referring to those tragical Times, written February 10, 1648 [K]."

He went still further : for, having got into his hands his majefty's meditations, &c, written by himfelf, he took a copy of the MS. and immediately refolving to print it with all fpeed, he prevailed with Mr, Royfton, the king's printer, to undertake the work. But when it was about half printed, a difcovery was made, and all the fheets then wrought off were deftroyed. However, this did not damp Gauden's spirit. He attempted to print it again, but could by no possible means get it finished, till fome few days after his majefty's destruction; when it came out under the title of Eizav Baoilinn, or, " The Portraiture of his Sacred Majefty in his Solitude and Sufferings." Upon its first appearance, the powers then at the helm were immediately fenfible, how dangerous a book it was to their caule; and therefore fet all their engines at work to difcover the publisher; and having feized the MS. which had been difpatched to the king, they appointed a committee to examine into the bufinefs. Gauden, having notice of this proceeding, withdrew privately in the night from his own house to sir John Wentworth's, near Yarmouth, with a defign to convey himfelf beyond fea: but Mr. Symonds, his majefty's chaplain, who had communicated the MS. to the doctor [1], and had been taken up in a difguife, happening to die before his intended examination, the committee were not able to find out any thing, by any means whatfoever. Upon this, the doctor changed his refolution, and ftayed in England [M]; where he directed his conduct with fo much policy, as to keep his preferments during the feveral periods of the usurpation; although he published several treatifes in vindication of the Church of Engand and its minifters, as may be feen below [N].

The fame year, upon the death of bishop Brownrigg, he succeeded him as preacher to the Temple [0]; and upon the return of Charles II. he succeeded the fame bishop in the fee of Exeter, Nov. 1660, having been made king's chaplain before. The value of a bishopric was greatly enhanced at this time, by the long intermission that had happened in renewing the leases of their estates, during the abolition of episcopacy. In this view, the nomination to Exeter might be looked upon as a present from his majesty of 20,000. fince the bishop received that fum in fines on the renewal of leases [P].

But he did not fit down content here; thinking his fervices deferved fomething more. He had already published his "Antifacrilegus," or, "A Defensative against the plausible or gilded Poison of that nameless Paper, supposed to be the Plot of Cornelius Burges and his Partners, which tempts the King's Majesty by the Offer of 500,000l. to make good by an Act of Parliament, to the Purchafers of Bishop's Lands, &c. their illegal. With an Anfwer to that monstrous Paradox of no Sacrilege, no Sin, to alienate Church Lands, without, and against all Laws of God and Man." These were all printed before his promotion to the fee of Exeter. His zeal continued to glow with equal ardour the two following years; in his " Life of Hooker," prefixed to an edition of Hooker's works, published by him in 1661; and, again, in his " Pillar of Gratitude, humbly dedicated to the Glory of God, the Honour of his Majefty, &c. for reftoring Episcopacy," in 1662. But, above all, he particularly pleaded his merit in respect to the Excar Basilinn. He applied to the Ufher went to the protector at the fame time to intercede for them. Befides thefe, he publifhed, with the fame fpirit of vindicating the doctrine of the church of England, "A Difcourfe concerning public Oaths, and the Lawfulnefs of fwearing in judicial Proceedings in order to anfwer the Scruples of the Quakers, 1649."

[P] Several evidences in the controverfy, concerning Eixer Basidian, by J. Young, p. 26, 1703, 4to. Ludlow tells us, that, in order to procure a translation, he alledged to the king that Exeter had a high rack; but a low manger. earl of Clarendon, in a letter dated Dec. 28, 1661, with a petition to the king; wherein, having declared the advantages which had accrued to the crown by this fervice, he adds, that what was done like a king, fhould have a king-like retribution. In another letter to the duke of York, dated Jan. 17, the fame year, he ftrongly urges the great fervice he had done, and importunately begs his royal highnefs to intercede for him with the king. Chancellor Hyde thought he had carried his merit too far, with regard to the king's book: and, in a letter to him, dated March 13, 1661, writes thus: "The particular you mention, has indeed been imparted to me as a fecret: I am forry I ever knew it; and, when it ceafes to be a fecret, it will pleafe none but Mr. Milton."

He adhered, however, clofely to the court, and, in compliance with the measures which were then pursued, drew up a declaration for liberty of confcience extending to papifts, of which a few copies were printed off, though prefently called in : he was about the fame time employed to draw up another declaration of indulgence to the quakers, by an exemption from all oaths. He alfo wrote, " Confiderations touching the Liturgy of the Church of England, in Reference to his Majesty's late Declaration, and in order to a happy Union in Church and State, 1660." So that he obtained a removal to the see of Worcester, to which he was elected May 23, 1662. But with this promotion he was fo far from being fatisfied, that he looked upon it as an injury: he had, it feems, applied to the king for the rich bishopric of Winchester, and flattered himself with the hopes of a translation thither; and the regret and vexation at the difappointment is thought to have hastened his end, for he died in September that year. After his death, his widow, being left with five children, in confideration of the fhort time he had enjoyed Worcester, and the charge of removing from Exeter, petitioned the king for the half year's profits of the last bishopric; but her petition was rejected as unreasonable, on account of his large revenues and profits at his first coming to Exeter. As to his character, it is certain he was an ambitious man; which, as is usually the cafe, occafioned the moral part to be feverely fifted. In which refpect, the behaviour of his relict, though otherwife intended, was far from being of fervice to his memory. In a letter to one of her fons, after the bishop's death, she calls the Eixav Basilinn, " The Jewel;" faid, her hufband had hoped to make a fortune by it; and that fhe had a letter of a very great man's, which would clear up that he wrote it [Q]. This affertion, as Clarendon had predicted, was eagerly espouled by the anti-royalists, in the view of difparaging Charles I. and that kindling the indignation of those who thought his majesty greatly injured thereby, thefe in return exposed the dark fide of the bifliop's character to view: and reprefented him as an inconftant, ambiguous, and lukewarm man, covetous of preferment, hafty and impatient in the purfuit of it, and deeply tinctured with folly and vanity; upon the whole, an unhappy blemish and reproach of the facred order. Nor is bishop Kennet's censure less severe, though convev. d in a somewhat less intemperate language, when he tells us, that Dr. Gauden was capable of underwork, and made himfelf a tool to the court, by the most fordid hopes of greater favour in it. This charge is supported by two instances, namely; his drawing up the two declarations already mentioned; one for liberty of confeience to the papifts, the other for indulgence to the quakers in respect to taking an oath: the latter of which we have seen paffed into an act of parliament, and the policy and juffice of the former attested by a connivance to all loyal papists, or fuch . s deny the pope's power of diffolving their allegiance to their lawful fovereign, which was the express motive for making the declaration. The most candid character of him is that left us by Wood, who fays, " that he was effeemed by all who knew him, to be a very comely perfon, a man of valt parts, and one that had ftrangely improved himfelf by unwearied labour; and was particularly much reforted to, for his most admirable and edifying way of preaching." It is certain, however, he had too luxuriant an imagination, which betrayed him into an Afiatic ranknefs of ftyle; and thence, as bifhop Burnet argues, it may be certainly concluded, that not he, but the king himself, was the true author of the Eixer Baoilium ; in which there is a noblenefs and justnefs of thought, with a greatnels of style, that cauled it to be esteemed the best written book in the English language.

Soon after his death there came out, written by him, "A Difcourfe of artificial Beauty in point of Confcience between two Ladies, 1662." This was followed by another track, publifhed, together with fome on the fame fubject by Whitgift, Hooker, and Sanderfon, under the title of "Prophecies concerning the Return of Popery, 1663." Thefe were aimed at the fectaries, who were faid to be opening a door, at which Popery would certainly enter. Laftly, in 1681, there appeared in 12mo, "The whole Du y of a Communicant, &c." with bifhop Gauden's name prefixed to it.

GAULMIN (GILBERT, a French minor author, who while he lived, contrived to establi a fame fuperior to his real deferts, by haranguing in focieties of beaux and ladies. He was a counfellor of state, and died in 1555, at the age of 60. His works are thus enumerated. 1. "Notes and Commentaries on Pfellus, and and on Theodore Prodomus." 2. "Notes on the Treatife of an anonymous Rabbin, concerning the life and death of Mofes," 1629, 8vo. 3. "Remarks on the falfe Callifthenes." 4. "An edition of the Romance of Ifmenus and Ifmenias, in Greek and Latin," 8vo. 1618. 5. "Poems, confifting of Epigrams, Odes, Hymns, and a Tragedy." He had a competent knowledge of ancient and modern languages, and is allowed to have had fome fire in his compositions, though fuch as greatly wanted the regulation of judgment.

GAUTHIER (JEAN-BAPTISTE), a French abbé, chaplain to de Langle bishop of Boulogne, and to Colbert bishop of Montpellier, was born at Louviers, in the diocefe of Evreux, in 1685. The latter of his patrons employed him as an adviser and a fecretary, after whose death he retired to Paris, where he published many tracks against infidels. He died of a fall in 1755, aged 71. The most remarkable of his works are, 1. "A Track against Pope's Essay on Man, which he attacks as impious." 12mo. 1746. 2. "Theological Letters, against Hardouin and Berruyer," 3 vols. 12mo. 3. "An Attack upon the Jesuits," 12mo. 1743. 4. "A Collection of Letters against Infidelity," 12mo. 1746; and several other publications. He produced many other works, of which a complete list is given in France Litteraire. Anno 1758.

GAY (JOHN), an English poet, was born in 1688, near Barnstaple in Devonshire; and put to the free-school there, where he acquired a tafte for claffical literature. This was all the education of that kind which he obtained : for the effate of his family, which was ancient, being much reduced, his fortune was not fufficient to fupport him as a gentleman [R]; and his friends, therefore, chose to breed him to some genteel trade. He was accordingly put apprentice to a filk-mercer in London. But this ftep was taken without confulting the tafte and temper of the youth. The condition of an apprentice appeared too illiberal; he was not made, it feems, for a counter. The shop soon became his averfion; he was feldom feen in it; and in a few years his master, upon the offer of a finall confideration, willingly confented to give up his indentures. Having thus purchafed the eafe of his mind, he indulged himfelf freely and fully in that courfe of life to which he was irrefiftibly drawn by nature. Genius concurred with inclination; poetry was at once his delight and his talent; and he fuffered not his Mufe to be diffurbed by any difagreeable attention to the expence of cultivating his mind.

[R] In his " Rural Sports," he fays,

He never had been bleft by fortune's hand, Nor brighten'd plowshares in-paternal land.

Thefe

These qualities recommended him to such company and acquaintance as delighted him most; and among others to Swift and Pope, who were exceedingly ftruck with the open fincerity, the undifguiled fimplicity of his manners, and the eafinels of his temper. To the latter he addreffed the first-fruits of his Muse, entitled, "Rural Sports, a Georgic, printed in 1711 [s]." This piece discovered a rich poetical vein, peculiar to himself, and met with fome agreeable attestations of its merit, that would have been enjoyed with a higher relifh, had not the pleafure been interrupted by the ill state of his finances; which, by an uncommon degree of thoughtleffnefs and cullibility [T], were reduced now to a low ebb. Our poet's purfe was an unerring barometer of his fpirits; which, finking with it, left him in the apprehension of a fervile dependence, a condition he dreaded above any thing that could befal him The clouds were, however, fhortly difpelled by the kindnefs of the dutchefs of Monmouth, who appointed him her fecretary in 1712, with a handfome falary. This feafonable favour feating him in a coach, though not his own, kindled his Muse to new efforts. He first produced his celebrated poem; called, "Trivia, or, the Art of walking the Streets;" and the following year, at the inftance of Pope, he formed the plan of his "Paftorals" There is not perhaps in hiftory a more remarkable example of the force of friendship in an author, than was the undertaking and finishing of this inimitable poem. Pope, in the fubscription of the Hanover-club to his translation of the " Iliad," had been ill ufed by Philips their fecretary, and his rival in this fpecies of poetry. The translator highly refented the affront; and, meditating revenge, intimated to Gay, how greatly it was in his power to pluck the bays from this envied rival's forehead. Gay immediately engaged in his friend's quarrel, and executed his request even beyond his expectation. The rural fimplicity neglected by Pope, and admired in Philips, was found, though mixed with fome burlefque, only in the "Shepherd's Week." This exquisite piece of nature and humour, came out in 1714, with a dedication to lord Bolingbroke, which Swift facetioufly called the author's original fin against the court.

In the mean time, fo noble a way of ferving his friend was the fure way of ferving himfelf. The most promising views opened to him at court; he was carefied by fome leading perfons in the ministry; and his patronels rejoiced to fee him taken from her house, the same year, to attend the earl of Clarendon, as fecretary in his embaffy to the court of Hanover. But, whatever were his hopes from this new advancement, it is certain, they began and ended almost together; for queen Anne died in fifteen days after their arrival at Hanover. This, however, did not prove an irreparable lofs; his prefent fituation made him perfonally known to the fucceeding royal family; and returning home he made a proper use of it, in a handsome compliment to the princess of Wales, on her arrival in England [U]. addrefs procured him a favourable admittance at the new court ; and, that raifing a new flow of spirits, he wrote his farce, "The What d'ye call'it," which appeared upon the stage before the end of the feafon, and was honoured by the prefence of the prince and princefs. The profits, likewife, brought fome useful recruits to his fortune; and his poetical merit, being endeared by the fweetnefs and fincerity of his nature, procured him an eafy accefs to perfons of the first distinction. With these he passed his time with much fatisfaction, notwithstanding his difappointment in the hopes of favours from the new court, where he met with nothing better than a smile. In 1716, he made a visit to his native county at the expence of lord Burlington, and repaid his lordship with an humourous account of the journey. The like return was made for Mr. Pulteney's favour, who took him in his company the following year to Aix in France [x].

This eafy travelling, with fome decent appointments, was one of the highest relished pleasures of Gay's life [x], and never failed of calling forth his Muse. Soon after his return from France, he introduced to the stage, " The Three Hours after Marriage." His friends Pope and Arbuthnot had both a hand in this performance, and the two principal characters were acted by two of the best comedians at that time; yet, with all these helps and advantages, it was very ill received, if not condemned, the first night [z]. Gay stood the brunt with an unusual degree of magnanimity, which feems to have been infpired by a hearty regard for his partners; especially Pope, who was greatly affected with In 1718, he accompanied Pope to lord Harcourt's feat in īt. Oxfordshire, where they united in confectating to posterity the death of two ruftical lovers, unfortunately killed in the neighbouring fields by a stroke of lightning [A]. In 1720, he again recruited his finances by a handfome fubfcription to his poems, which he collected and printed in 2 vols. 4to; but falling into the general infatuation of that remarkable year, he loft all his fortune in the South-fea scheme, and confequently all his spirits. This stroke, in fact, had almost proved fatal to him; he was feized with a violent colic; and, after languishing fome time, removed in 1722 to Hampstead, for the benefit of the air and waters; but, by the affistance of Dr. Arbuthnot, who constantly attended him, at length he recovered. He then began to write his tragedy called, "The Captives;" which, when finished, he had the honour of reading from the MSS. to the princess of Wales, in 1724. Her royal highness also promised him further marks of her favour, if he would write fome fables in verse for the use of the duke of Cumberland; which task he accordingly undertook, and published them in 1726, with a dedication to that prince. All this was done against the advice of Pope, the duke being then only an infant; and the refult happened, as that friend prefaged, to be very difagreeable to him [B].

Upon the acceffion of George II. to the throne, he was offered the place of gentleman-usher to the then youngest princes Louifa; a post which he thought beneath his acceptance [c]: and, refenting the offer as an affront, in that ill-humour with the court, he wrote the "Beggar's Opera;" which, being brought upon the stage Nov. 1727, was received with greater applause than had ever been known on any occasion. For, befides being acted in London 63 days without interruption, and renewed the next feafon with fuccefs, it fpread into all the great towns of England, was played in many places to the 30th and 40th time; at Bath and Briftol 50, &c. It made its progrefs into Wales, Scotland, and Ireland, where it was performed 24 days fucceffively; and laftly, was acted in Minorca. The ladies carried about with them the favourite fongs of it in fans, and houses were furnished with it in screens. The fame of it was not confined to the author only; the perfon who acted Polly, till then obscure, became all at once the favourite of the town; her pictures were engraved, and fold in great numbers; her life written; books of letters and verses to her published, and pamphlets made of her fayings jefts [D]; and, to crown all, after being the mother of feveral antenuptial children, she obtained the title and rank of a dutchefs by marriage. There is fcarcely to be found in hiftory an example, where a private fubject, undiftinguished either by birth or fortune, had it in his power to feast his refentment fo richly at the expence of his fovereign. But this was not all ; he went on in the fame humour, and cast a fecond part in a fimilar mould; which, being excluded from the stage by the lord chamberlain, he was encouraged to print with the title of " Polly," by fubfcription ; and this too, confidering the powers employed against it, was incredibly large [E]. Neither yet did it end here. The duke and dutchess of Queensberry took part in resenting the indignity put upon him by this last act of power; refigned their respective places at court; took the author into their houfe and family; and treated him with all the endearing kindnefs of an intimate and much beloved friend.

These noble additions to his fame, his fortune, and his friendships, inspired him with fresh vigour, saifed him to a degree of confidence and affurance, and he was even prompted to think that "The Wife of Bath," despised and rejected as it had been [F], might, with fome improvements which he could now give it, be made to tafte the fweets of this happy change in his fortune. In this temper he revised and altered it, and brought it again upon the stage in 1729, but had the mortification to see all his fanguine hopes of its fuccefs blafted; it met with the fame fate in the play-houfe as formerly. This rebuff happened. in March 1729-30; and produced a degree of melancholy, which,with the return of his constitutional distemper the colic, gave a new edge to the fense of his disappointments at court, with respect to the "Beggars Opera." By that fatire, he had flattered himfelf with the hopes of awing the court into a difpofition to take him into favour, in order to keep fo powerful a pen in good humour. But this last refinement upon his milery, added to former indignities, threw him into a dejection, which he in vain endeavoured to remove, by another tour into Somersetshire, in 1731. In short, he grew incurable. But the state both of his body and mind cannot be fo forcibly defcribed, as it " My melancholy," fays is in his own account of it to Pope. he, "increases, and every hour threatens me with some return. of my distemper. foil (to me fo) have I been striving to produce founething out of! Why did not I take your advice before my writing fables for the duke, not to write them, or rather to write them for fome young nobleman? It is my hard fate, I must get nothing, write for them or against them." In this disposition, it is no wonder that we find him rejecting a propofal, made to him by this last-mentioned friend in 1732, of trying his Muse upon the Hermitage, then lately built by queen Caroline in Richtmondgardens; to which he answers with a fixed despondency, that " he knew himfelf unworthy of royal patronage."

In the delightful retirement of Amefbury, however, a feat of his noble patron, near Stonehenge upon Salisbury-plain, he found lucid intervals enough to finish his opera called "Achilles;" and coming with the family to his grace's house in Burlingtongardens, to pass the winter seafon, he gave that piece to the play-houfe. The week after, he was fuddenly feized with a violent inflammatory fever; which, ending in a mortification of the bowels, in three days put a period to his life, Dec. 11, 1732. In his fhort illnefs he was attended by two phyficians, befides Dr. Arbuthnot, who particularly observed, that it was the most precipitate cafe he ever knew; meaning, after the fever shewed itfelf: for there were prognoftics enough to predict his approaching end long before, and he himfelf was fenfible of it. In October, he sent Pope his last gift, as a token to be kept in remembrance of his dying friend; declaring, that he found by many warnings, that he had no continuing city here. " I begin," fays he, " to look upon myfelf as one already dead; and defire, my dear Mr. Pope, whom I love as my own foul, if you furvive me, as you certainly will, if a ftone fhould mark the place of my grave, fee thefe words put upon it :

This dying requeft was executed by that friend with remarkable piety [G]; and the whole epitaph infcribed on a very handfome marble monument, erected to his memory by the duke and dutchefs of Queenfberry, who took care to have his body interred with a fuitable funeral folemnity. The corpfe was brought from his grace's houfe to Exeter-change in the Strand; where, after lying in a very decent state, it was removed to Westminster-abbey, and interred in the South-crofs-ille, against the tomb of Chaucer, near the place where ftands his monument,

The

The opera of " Achilles" was brought upon the stage foon after his death, and met with a very good reception, which was greatly promoted by the duke of Queenfberry, who was uncommonly affiduous in patronizing it; and who, as Pope obferves, acted in this, and every thing elfe, more than the part of a brother to his deceased friend. It was also, through the influence of his example, that the profits of the representation were given by the managers of the play-houfe to our author's two widow fifters, Katharine and Joanna, relicts of Mr. Ballet and Mr. Fortescue, who, as heirs at law, shared his fortune (about 3000l.) equally between them; which difposition was agreeable to his own defire, and therefore he made no will. He left feveral MSS. behind him, fome of which came into the hands of Pope, who took care no doubt (as he promifed Swift) to suppress such as he judged unworthy of him. A few years after his death, there was published under his name a comedy, called, " The Diffreffed Wife," the fecond edition of which was printed in 1750; and in 1754, a humorous piece, with the title of "The Rehearfal at Goatham."

GAYOT DE PITAVAL (FRANÇOIS), a French author, native of Lyons, remarkable rather for the magnitude of his work, entitled, "Caufes Célèbres," in twenty volumes duodecimo, than for any merit as a writer. He seemed destined to fail in every walk of life. He began by taking orders, and became an abbé; he then quitted the church for the army, where he obtained no diffinction, and at 50 became an advocate. Not fucceeding in this occupation, he applied himfelf diligently to his pen; in which employment he rather proved his affiduity than his powers. His great work, though interesting in its subject, is r ndered intolerable by the heaviness and badness of the style, with the puerilities and bad verfes interfperfed. It has been two or three times abridged. His other works are not more admired. They are, 1. " An Account of the Campaigns of 1713 and 1714;" a compilation from the Memoirs of Vilbart. 2. "The Art of adorning and improving the Mind," a foolifh collection of witticisms: and, 3. A compilation entitled, "Bibliotheque des Gens de Cour." He died in 1743, at the age of 70.

GAZA (THEODORE), a very eminent man at the time of the revival of letters in Europe, was born at Theffalonica in Greece in 1398 [H] Some have called him Theodore de Gaza, as if he had been a native of that village; but they were wrong in fo doing. His country being invaded by the Turks, he was obliged to quit it; and, in 1430, he went into Italy, to feek that tranquillity abroad, which was denied him at home. He applied himfelf, immediately on his arrival there, to learn the Latin tongue; and for that purpofe, put himfelf under the tuition of Victorinus de Feltre, who taught it at Mantua. He was, indeed, paft the age when languages are ufually attained, yet he made himfelf fuch a mafter of Latín, that he fpoke and wrote it with the fame facility and elegance, as if it had been his native tongue: though Erafmus is of opinion, that he could never fairly diveft himfelf of his Greek idiom. His uncommon parts and learning foon recommended him to public notice; and particularly to the patronage of cardinal Beflarion. Gaza had taken a very fair and exact copy of Homer's "Iliad;" for tranfcribing ancient authors was a method to which the learned, before the invention of printing, frequently had recourfe, to fupport themfelves and their families. This copy, written by fo illuftrious a hand, the cardinal was extremely defirous to purchafe; and he obtained either that, or one like it, which is ftill extant in his library at Venice.

About 1450, Gaza went to Rome, being called thither by Nicholas V. with many other profeilors of the Greek language, fcattered about Italy, to tranflate the Greek authors into Latin. Great jealoufies and diffentions arofe among thefe learned thus affembled [1]; and an actual quarrel broke out between Gaza and George Trapezuntius in particular. Paul Jovius, however, affures us, that he not only far furpaffed all the Greeks, his fellow-labourers and cotemporaries, in learning and folidity of judgment, but alfo in the knowledge of the Latin : which, fays Jovius, he attained to that fupreme degree of perfection, that it was not eafy to difcern, whether he wrote belt in that or his native tongue. On account of thefe extraordinary qualities no doubt it was, that he was admitted to fuch a familiarity with cardinal Beffarion, as to be called by him in fome of his writings his friend and companion.

Nicholas V. dying in 1456, Gaza went to Naples, where he was honourably received by king Alphonfus, to whom he had been well recommended; but this prince dying in 1458, he returned to his patron the cardinal at Rome, who foon after gave him a benefice in Calabria. This would have been a very competent provifion for a man fo temperate in all things, but yet he was always poor and in diftrefs; for he was fo extremely attentive to letters, that he left the management of his fubftance to fervants; which was as effectual a way to diffipate it, as if he had lived in the most extravagant manner. It is related, that towards the latter end of his life he went to Rome, with one of his performances finely written upon vellum, which he prefented to Sixtus IV. expecting to receive from his holinefs an immenfe reward for fo curious and valuable a prefent. But the pope, having coolly asked him the expence he had been at, gave him but just what was sufficient to defray it : which moved him to fay, with indignation, that " it was high time to return to his own country, fince these over-fed assesses at Rome had not the least relish for any thing but weeds and this their taste being too depraved for what was good and wholesome." Pierius Valerianus, who relates this, in his book De Infelicitate Literatorum, adds, that Gaza flung the money into the Tiber, and died foon after of disappointment and grief. He died at Rome, and in 1478, which might, perhaps, be foon after the prefentation of his book : he might die too of disappointment, but there is no absolute reason to affign that cause, for he was 80 years of age.

His works may be divided into original pieces and translations. Of the former are, 1. "Grammaticæ Græcæ Libri quatuor." Written in Greek, and printed first at Venice in 1495: afterwards at Bafil in 1522, with a Latin translation by Érasmus. 2. " Liber de Atticis Menfibus Græce." By way of supplement to his grammar, with which it was printed with a Latin version. 3. " Epistola ad Franciscum Philelphum de origine Turcarum, Græce, cum Versione Leonis Allatii." Printed in the Symmicta of the translator at Cologne in 1653. His translations are also of two forts; from Greek into Latin, and from Latin into Greek. Of the latter fort are Cicero's pieces, " De Senectute," and " De Somnio Scipionis:" both printed in Aldus's edition of Cicero's works in 1523, 8vo. Of the former fort are, " Aristotelis Libri novem Historiæ Animalium: de Partibus Animalium Libri quatuor : & de Generatione Animalium Libri quinque. Latine versi. Venet. 1476." It was Aristotle's "History of Animals," which is faid to have caufed the enmity between Gaza and Trapezuntius. Trapezuntius, it was alledged, had translated the fame work before Gaza: and though Gaza had made great use of Trapezuntius's version, yet in his preface he boafted, that he had neglected to confult any translations whatever; and declared contemptuously, that his defign was not to enter the lift with other translators, or to vie with those whom it would be fo easy to conquer. This conduct, if the flatement be true, Trapezuntius might very juftly refent. The fame "Hiftory of Animals," or rather, as P. Va-Ierianus fays, his divine lucubrations upon it, were memorable on another account; for it is faid to have been the work which he prefented in a Latin translation to Pope Sixtus, and for which he underwent fo fevere a disappointment. He translated also other Greek books into Latin: as, " Aristotelis Problemata," " Theophrasti Historiæ Plantarum Libri decem," " Alexandri Problematum Libri duo," " Æliani Liber de Instruendis Aciebus," " J. Chryfostomi Homiliæ quinque de incomprehensibili Dei Dei Natura." There are extant also some works of Gaza which have never been published.

There is no man of learning spoken of in higher terms, and more universally, than Gaza. Scaliger used to say, that "of all those who revived the belles letters in Italy, there were not above three that he was inclined to envy: the first was Theodore Gaza, who was certainly a great and learned man, though he has committed some mistakes in his version of Aristotle's ' History of Animals.' The fecond was Angelus Politianus [K]; and the third was Picus of Mirandula." In another place, he calls him " doctiffimus," a most learned man; commends his grammar, and fays, that " he ought to be ranked among the best translators of Greek authors into Latin [1]" Huetius obferves, that though he does not differ from the judgment of Jofeph Scaliger, in regard to Gaza's translations, where he allows that fome things might be better, and fome entirely altered ; yet, that upon the whole he fhould be glad, if all translators would do as well, would exhibit the fame fidelity, perfpicuity, and elegance, that Gaza has difplayed [M]."

GEBER (JOHN), an Arabian physician and astronomer, who flourished, according to the best authorities, in the ninth century, and wrote a commentary on the "Syntaxis Magna" of Ptolemy, in nine books: and feveral other works. This commentary was published at Nuremburg in 1533. In it he en-deavoured to correct the astronomy of Ptolemy, but Copernicus called him rather the calumniator of Ptolemy. He was a learned chemist, and as such has been mentioned with respect by the great Boerhaave. But he was alfo addicted to the reveries of Alchemy, and condefcended to use occasionally a jargon fuited to the mystic pretensions of those fanciful writers. Dr. Johnfon was of opinion, that gibberish is best derived from this unintelligible cant of Geber and his followers: anciently, he alledges, it was written gebrish. Notwithstanding this, it is allowed that his writings contain much useful knowledge. Other works of Geber now extant are, 1. "His Astronomy, or demonstrative work of Aftrology" in nine books, printed at Nuremberg in 1533. 2. "His three Books on Alchymy," published at Strafburg, with one De investigatione perfecti Magisterii, in 1530; and alfo in Italy from a MS. in the Vatican. 3. "On the Investigation of the truth of Metals, and on Furnaces, with other works." Nuremberg, 1545. 4. "A book called Flos Naturarum," published in 1473. 5. "Also his Chymica," printed by Perna, with the chemical works of Avicenna. His Almagest is also extant in Arabic. As a specimen of his language, he used to fay, my GED (WILLIAM) [N], an ingenious though unfuccefsful artift, who was a goldsmith in Edinburgh, deserves to be recorded for his attempt to introduce an improvement in the art of printing. The invention, first practifed by Ged in 1725, was fimply this. From any types of Greek or Roman, or any other character, he formed a plate for every page, or sheet, of a book, from which he printed, inftead of using a type for every letter, as is done in the common way. This was first practifed on blocks of wood, by the Chinese and Japanese, and purfued in the first estays of Coster, the European inventor of the present art. " This improvement," says James Ged, the inventor's fon, " is principally confiderable in three most important articles, viz. expence, correctnefs, beauty, and uniformity." But these improvements are controverted by Mr. Mores and others in the little tract which furnishes this memoir.

In July 1729, William Ged entered into partnership with William Fenner, a London stationer, who was to have half the profits, in confideration of his advancing all the money requifite. To fupply this, Mr. John James, then an architect at Greenwich (who built fir Gregory Page's house, Bloomsbury church, &c.) was taken into the scheme, and afterwards his brother, Mr. Thomas James [0], a letter-founder, and James Ged, the inventor's fon. In 1730, these partners applied to the university of Cambridge for printing bibles and common-prayer books by block instead of fingle types, and, in confequence, a leafe was sealed to them April 23, 1731. In their attempt they funk a large fum of money, and finished only two prayer-books, so that it was forced to be relinquished, and the lease was given up in 1738. Ged imputed his disappointment to the villainy of the prefs-men, and the ill-treatment of his partners (which he fpecifies at large) particularly Fenner, whom John James and he were advised to profecute, but declined it. He returned to Scotland in 1733, and had no redrefs. He there, however, had friends who were anxious to fee a fpecimen of his performance; which he gave them in 1744, by an edition of Salluft [P]. Fenner died infolvent in or before the year 1735, and his widow married Mr. Waugh, an apothecary, whom fhe furvived. Her [o] George James, another brother, was printer to the city of London; a man of letters, and refided many years in Little-Britain. [r] "Edinburgi, Gulielmus Ged, Aurifaber Edinenfis, non Typis mobilibus, ut vulgò fieri folet, fed Tabellis feu Laminis fufis, excudebat, MDCCXLIV." James Ged, the fon, wearied with disappointments, engaged in the rebellion of 1745, as a captain in Perth's regiment; and being taken at Carlifle, was con-demned, but on his father's account, (by Dr. Smith's intereft with the duke of Newcastle) was pardoned, and released in 1748. He afterwards worked for some time, as a journeyman, with Mr. Bettenham, and then commenced mafter; but being unfuccefsful, he went privately to Jamaica, where his younger brother William was fettled as a reputable printer. His tools, &c. he left to be shipped by a false friend, who most ungeneroufly detained them to try his skill himself. James died the year after he left England; as did his brother in 1767. In the above pursuit Mr. Thomas James, who died in 1738, expended much of his fortune, and fuffered in his proper bufinefs; " for the printers," fays Mr. Mores, " would not employ him, becaufe the block-printing, had it fucceeded, would have been prejudicial to theirs." Mr. William Ged died, in very indifferent circumstances, Oct. 19, 1749, after his utenfils were sent for Lei.h to be shipped for London, to have joined with his son James as a printer there. Thus ended his life and project, which, ingenious as it feems, is not likely to be revived, if, as Mr. Mores suggests, " it must, had it at first succeeded, have soon funk under its own burthen," for reasons needless here to recapitulate.

GEDDES (JAMES), the eldeft fon of an old and respectable family in the shire of Tweedale in Scotland, was born about 1710, and received the first rudiments of learning in his father's family, under private tutors. His genius was quick, and, as he took great pleasure in reading, he soon made considerable progrefs in the learned languages, and the elements of philofophy. As foon as he understood Latin and Greek, he entered with remarkable spirit into the sentiments of the ancient writers, and discovered an ardent desire for a more intimate knowledge of them. He afterwards studied the different branches of philofophy at the univerfity of Edinburgh, and particularly applied to mathematical learning, in which he made uncommon proficiency, under the tuition of the late learned M'Laurin. After he had acquired a competent knowledge of philosophy, his thoughts were turned to the law, which he proposed to make the peculiar study and profession of his life. After the usual course of preparatory study for this employment, he was admitted advocate, and practifed at the bar for feveral years with growing reputation; but he did not arrive to the greatest eminence in his profession, as he was cut off by a lingering confumption before he was forty years of age. His character was in all respects amiable and worthy. He retained through his whole life that keen relifh for ancient literature, which he had imbibed imbibed in his youth: and what time he could fpare from the duties of his profeffion, and the neceffary affairs of his family, was devoted to the fludy of the ancient poets, philosophers, and historians. The fruit of these fludies was "An Effay on the Composition and Manner of Writing of the Ancients, particularly Plato." Glafgow, 1748, 8vo. He is faid to have left papers fufficient to make another volume, but they have not been published.

GEDOYN (NICHOLAS), a French writer, born at Orleans in 1667, went to study at Paris, and was a Jesuit for ten years; but, returning back to the world, became one of the friends of the celebrated Ninon de l'Enclos, and figured as a man of wit and letters. In 1711, he was received into the Academy of Belles Lettres; in 1719, into the French academy; and, 1732, he was named to the abbey of Notre-dame de Beaugency. He died in 1744. He is greatly distinguished by two excellent French translations of Quintilian and Pausanias. There were also published, in 1745, "Oeuvres diverses," or a collection of little essays by him upon subjects of morality and literature. He was besides author of many ingenious differtations in the memoirs of the French academy.

GEINOZ (FRANÇOIS), a learned Swifs abbé, admitted in 1735 into the Royal Academy of Belles Lettres, &c. at Paris, and author of feveral valuable differtations extant in the volumes of that fociety. Thefe were published at intervals from the year 1736 to about 1750, and are on the fubjects of ancient medals; on Oftracism; on the migrations of the Pelass; and feveral on the plan and character of Herodotus, which author he had a design to publish. He died at Paris in 1752, at the age of 56, much esteemed, not only for his extensive learning, but also for his probity and candour.

GELASIUS the elder, bifhop of Cæfarea in Paleftine, nephew of Cyril bifhop of Jerufalem, by whom he was confecrated to Cæfarea in 380. He is praifed, both by Theodoret and St. Jerom, for the purity of his ftyle and of his manners. He translated into Greek two books of the ecclefiaftical hiftory, Rufinus, and produced feveral other works. A fragment of one of his homilies on the epiphany is ftill extant in Theodoret.

GELASIUS of Cyzicus, alfo bifhop Cæfarea, flourifhed about the year 476. He compiled a hiftory of the Nicene council, in three books, partly from an old manufcript of Dalmatius archbifhop of Cyzicus, and from other authorities. His ftyle, according to Photius, was extremely low and bad, and the credit of his account, whether from himfelf or his manufcript, is as bad as poffible. Two books of pope Gelafius I. on the double nature in Chrift, have been erroneoufly afcribed to him.

GELASIUS

GELASIUS I. bishop of Rome, elevated to that see in 492, was successfor to Felix II. He was engaged, as his predecessor had been, in the disputes between the eastern and western churches; and particularly contended with Euphemius, patriarch of Constantinople, about the name of Acacius, which the latter refused to expunge from the facred list. He is faid to have alsembled a council of 70 bishops at Rome in 494, where a decree was passed on the subject of canonical and apocryphal books; but the existence of the decree, if not of the council, is doubted by Cave, for very strong reasons. He died in 496. Several works of his are extant, among which are, I. Epistles. 2. A volume on the power of Anathema. 3. Against fome Romans who continued to celebrate the Lupercalia. 4. Against the Pelagian herefy. 5. A book against Eutyches and Neftorius.

GELASIUS II. a Campanian by birth, was elected pope in 1118, but his pontificate was fhort and turbulent. He was violently ejected by Cencio Frangipani conful of Rome, in the interest of the emperor Henry V. who fet up another pope; he endeavoured to regain his fee, not only by anathematizing his opponent, but by force of arms. He was, kowever, repulsed, and retired to the monastery of Clugny in France, where he died very early in the year 1119.

GELDENHAUR (GERARD EOBANUS), a learned German, was born at Nimeguen in 1482 [Q]. He studied classical learning at Deventer, and went through his course of philosophy at Louvain with fuch fuccess, that he was chosen to teach that science there. It was in this university that he contracted a strict friendship with several learned men, and in particular with Erafmus. He made some stay at Antwerp, whence he was invited to the court of Charles of Auftria, to be reader and hiftorian to that prince: but, not liking to change his abode often, he did not think proper to attend him into Spain, but difengaged himself from his fervice, and entered into that of Philip of Burgundy, bishop of Utrecht. He was his reader and secretary 12 years, that was, to 1624; after which, he executed the fame functions at the court of Maximilian of Burgundy. He was fent to Wittemburg in 1526, in order to enquire into the state of the schools and of the church at that place. He faithfully reported what he had observed in that city, and confessed he could not disapprove of a doctrine fo conformable to the fcriptures, as that which he heard there: and upon this he forfook the popish religion, and retired towards the Upper Rhine. He married at Worms, and taught youth there for some time. Afterwards he was invited to Augfburg, to undertake the fame employment;

ployment; and at length, in 1534, he went thence to Marpurg, where he taught hiftory for two years, and then divinity to his death. He died of the plague in 1542. He was a man well fkilled in poetry, rhetoric, and hiftory. The most confiderable of his works are, 1. "Historia Batavica." 2. "De Batavorum Infula." 3. "Germaniæ Inferioris Historia." 4. "Epistola de Zelandia." 5. "Satiræ Octo."

His changing his religion, and fome writings which he published against the church of Rome, occasioned a quarrel between him and Erasmus. Erasmus called him a seditious fellow; and blamed him for publishing fcoffing books, which only irritated princes against Luther's followers. He blamed him alfo for prefixing the name and fome notes of himfelf to certain letters, the intent of which was, to fhew that heretics ought not to be punished. This was exposing Erasimus to the court of Rome, and to the popish powers: for it was faying in effect, that Erasmus had furnished the innovators with weapons to attack their enemies. Nothing could be more true; but Erafmus did not like to have fuch ill offices done him. Age had made him a coward, if he was not one naturally; and he was afraid to avow principles, which he fecretly maintained. He abused Geldenhaur, therefore, in very severe terms; compared him to the traitor Judas; and, instead of affisting him in his neceffity, put him off with raillery. "But, my dear Vulturius," for fo he nick-named him, " fince you have taken the refolution to profess an evangelical life, I wonder you find poverty uneafy; when St. Hilarion, not having money enough to pay his boathire, thought it caufe of glory, that he had undefignedly arrived at fuch Gofpel perfection. St. Paul alfo glories, that he knew how to abound, and how to fuffer need; and that, having nothing, he possessed all things. The fame apostle commends certain Hebrews, who had received the Gofpel, that they took the spoiling of their goods joyfully. And that, if the Jews fuffer none to be poor among them, how much more does it become those who boast of the Gospel, to relieve the wants of their brethren by mutual charity: especially, fince evangelical frugality is content with very little. Those who live by the spirit want no delicacies, if they have but bread and water: they are strangers to luxury, and feed on failing. We read, that the apostles themselves fatisfied their hunger with ears of corn. rubbed in their hands. Perhaps, you may imagine I am jefting all this while."-very likely-" but others will not think fo." Epist. l. 31. ep. 47.

It is proper to observe, that Gerard Geldenhaur was better known by the name of his country, than by that of his family; for he was usually called Gerardus Noviomagus: and Erasmus, in his letters to him, gives him no other name.

GELEE

GELEE (CLAUDE), commonly called Claude of Lorraine. See CLAUDE.

GELENIUS (SIGISMUND), a learned and excellent man, was born of a good family at Prague about 1498. He began very early to travel through Germany, France, and Italy; and eafily made himfelf master of the languages of those countries. In Italy, he confirmed himfelf in the knowledge of the Latin tongue, and learned the Greek under Marcus Musurus. In his return to Germany, he went through Bafil; and became acquainted with Erasmus, who conceived an esteem for him, and recommended him to John Frobenius for corrector of his printing-houfe. Gelenius accepted of that charge, laborious as it was; and had a great number of Hebrew, Greek, and Latin books; which Frobenius was printing, to correct. He acquitted him-felf well in this employment till his death, which happened at Basil about 1555. He had married in that city, and left behind him two fons and a daughter. He was a tall man, and very corpulent; had an excellent memory, and a ready fharp wit. He was wonderfully mild and good-natured, fo that he could fcarce ever be put into a paffion: but never retained ill-will against any man. He was not curious to pry into into other people's affairs, nor at all mistrustful; but endowed with primitive, yet not weak, fimplicity.

The reader may wonder at our recording a man, who feems to have been remarkable for nothing but his extreme good temper and industry: but he is still to be further informed. Gelenius was not content with correcting the prefs, but became alfo a translator and critic; and few learned men have translated fo many works from Greek into Latin. Hear what an able judge, Henry Valefius, has faid in his favour; where, having mentioned Accurfius and Gelenius, he fays, that " both of them were men of very great learning, as their writings testify; but that Gelenius had a greater strength of genius, and a more difcerning judgement. This appears from many valuable works of his, and, particularly, from his Latin translations of Dionyfius Halicarnassensis, Appian, Philo, Josephus, Origen, and others; all which shew him to have been a man of excellent parts and fingular learning: as likewife does his edition of Ammianus Marcellinus's hiftory; wherein he had made a great number of judicious and ingenious emendations, and with admirable dexterity reftored the strange transposition of pages. which is to be found in all the manufcript copies, and appears in Accurfius's edition. Wherefore, I willingly give him this public testimony of applause, that no one hath as yet deserved better of Ammianus Marcellinus than he." He first published a dictionary in four languages, the Greek, Latin, German, and Sclavonian: after which, he wrote annotations on Livy and Pliny. 2 .

Pliny. Erafinus does not speak to advantageously of his performance on Pliny: but, on the contrary, gives an indifferent character of it: "Gelenius," he fays, " was strangely imposed on by a manufcript copy; wherein fome fmatterer had altered whatever he thought fit out of his own head, and given us as it were a new Pliny. I advised him not to trust to that copy, but he would not hearken to me. Hermolaus Barbarus [R], would not venture to alter Pliny's text. Gelenius fancied that he had done a wonderful thing; but I take it to be an unpardonable crime." He published an edition of Arnobius, which has likewise been very much condemned. Barthius calls him " a most ingenious but most bold man, and one who has taken unbounded liberties in his edition of Arnobius, which he has reformed, or rather transformed, according to his own fancy [s]: and the prefacer to the Leyden edition of 1651, charges him with " trufting too much to his own abilities, with inferting his conjectures into the text, with rejecting the ancient readings on his own fingle authority, and with dreffing up an Arnobius in no wife refembling the true one." The judgement of Huetius feems to allow fome foundation for these censures ; who fays, that "Gelenius has left more monuments of his skill in translating, than almost any one elfe.' He is in particular esteemed copious and elegant; bold in bringing feveral periods into one, or breaking them into more; and he gives a new turn to passages, when he does not happen to understand them."

The difregard of Gelenius for riches and honours was extraordinary. The employments, which were offered him in other places, could not tempt him to quit his peaceful fituation at Basil. Lucrative protessorships he could not be induced on to accept; and when he was invited to the king of Bohemia's court, he preferred his own quiet and humble life to the fplendid dignities with which he would there have been incumbered. Though Erasmus judged him worthy of a better fortune, yet he durst not wish to see him rich, lest it should abate his ardour for the advancement of learning. According to Thuanus, he struggled all his life with poverty.

GELLERT (CHRISTIAN FURCHTEGOTT), a celebrated German poet, was born at Haynichen, a small village between Freyberg and Chemnitz in Milnia, July 4, 1715. He went to fchool at Meissen, and then was removed to Leipsic to complete his studies, but after four years was recalled, his father, who had a large family, not being able to fupport the expence. After maintaining himself for some years as a tutor in private families, he returned to Leipfic, at the age of forty-one, and two years atter was made professor of philosophy. He lectured also in poetry and eloquence with great applaufe, and exercifed himfelf continually in writing poems in his native language, by which he gradually established a fame which pervaded all Europe. The part of his works best known is, I. His "Fables and Tales," many of which have been translated into various European languages. He wrote alfo, 2. " A Collection of Hymns," which is efteemed very good. And, 3. " Didactic Poems," confeffedly of lefs poetical merit than the others, though very excellent in morality. He wrote, 4thly, a comedy, called "The Devotee," which had merit. There are, alfo, 5thly, Epistles by him. He died in December, 1769, of an obstruction in his bowels, a diforder to which he had long been fubject. He was a man of the easiest and most conciliating manners; pleasing even to strangers; and of a disposition to form and preferve the most valuable friendships. He was open and enthusiastic in his attachments, ready at all times to give his counfel, labour, and money, to ferve his friends. In himfelf, of a timid and hypochondriac habit, and difposed to criticize both his own character and works with a feverity of which his friends could not acknowledge the justice. He had a constitutional fear of death, which, notwithstanding, receded as the hour of trial approached; fo that he died with calmness and fortitude [T]. A fingular ftory is told of a countryman who brought Gellert a load of fire-wood, fimply out of gratitude for the pleasure he had enjoyed in reading his charming fables.

GELLI (JOHN BAPTIST), an eminent Italian writer, and a man of extraordinary qualities, was born of mean parents at Florence in 1498. His condition was fuch, that recourse was had to a trade for his livelihood; and, accordingly, he was brought up a taylor. Such, however, was the acuteness and greatness of his genius, that this did not hinder him from acquiring more languages than his own, and making an uncommon progrefs in the belles let-Thuanus fays, indeed, that he did not understand Latin: but that historian is certainly mistaken; for Gelli translated, from Latin into Italian, " The Life of Alphonfus Duke of Ferrara," by Paul Jovius, and a treatife of Simon Porzio, "De Coloribus Oculorum," at the request of those writers; and it cannot be imagined, that fuch a request would have been made, if it had not been known that he understood the Latin language more than ordinarily well. It is not certain that he underflood the Greek; nay, it is pretty well agreed that he did not; for though he translated the "Hecuba" of Euripides into Italian, he was known to do it from the Latin version. He excelled, however, in his native tongue, and acquired the higheft reputation by the works he published in it. He was acquainted with all the wits and learned men of Florence; and his merit was univerfally known. He was chofen a member of the academy there; and the city, to do him all the honour they could, made him one of their burgeffes. Neverthelefs, he continued the exercife of his profeffion to the end of his life; and he tells us, in a letter to F. Melchior, March 3, 1553, that he devoted working-days to the care of his body, and Sundays and feftivals to the culture of his understanding. The fame letter shews the modest of this furprising man, whom we find reproaching his friend for giving him honourable titles, which did not agree with the lownefs of his condition. He died in 1563, in his 65th year.

In 1546, he published at Florence, " Dialoghi," in 4to. There are but feven dialogues here; but in the fifth edition, which was printed in 1551, 8vo, and is the best, there are three more added. It must be observed, that he changed the title from " Dialoghi," to " i Capricci del Bottaio." He published alfo, " La Girce, 1549 and 1550," 8vo. This work confifts of ten dialogues, and treats of human nature; where the author introduces Ulyffes and fome other Greeks, who were transformed by Circe into various beafts, difputing about the excellence and mifery of man and other animals. It has been translated into Latin, French, and English. These dialogues, like the rest of Gelli's, are written in the manner of Lucian. We have too by him, " Le Lezioni fatte da lui nell' Academia Fiorentina, 1551," 8vo. These differtations are employed upon the poems of Dante and Petrarch. Lastly, he published feveral letters upon Dante's Inferno, entitled, "Ragionamento sopra le Difficulta del mettere in Regole la nostra lingua," without date. He was the author also of two comedies, " La Sporta," and " Lo Errore;" and of fome translations, as we have already observed:

GELLIBRAND (HENRY), profeffor of aftronomy at Grefham-college, was the fon of Henry Gellibrand, M. A. and fome time fellow of All-Souls-college in Oxford. He was born in the parifh of St. Botolph, Alderfgate, in London, in 1597: but his father fettling upon a paternal effate at St. Paul's Cray in Kent [u], he probably received the rudiments of his education in that neighbourhood. He was fent to Trinity-college, Oxford, in 1615; and took his first degree in arts, in 1619. He then entered into orders, and became curate of Chiddingstone in Kent; but, having conceived a strong inclination for mathematics, by hearing one of fir Henry Saville's lectures in that fcience, he grew, by degrees, fo deeply enamoured with it, that though he was not without good views in the church, he refolved to forego them altogether. He contented himfelf with his private patrimony which was now come into his hands, on the death of his father; and the fame year, becoming a student at Oxford, made his beloved mathematics his fole employment. In this leifure, he profecuted his studies with fo much diligence and fuccess, that, before he became M. A. which was in 1623, he had rifen to excellence, and was admitted to a familiarity with the most eminent masters. Among others, Mr. Hen. Briggs, then lately appointed Savilian professor of geometry at Oxford by the founder, shewed him particular countenance and favour. This, in a few years, was improved to a degree of intimate friendship, infomuch, that the professor communicated to him all his notions and discoveries, and, upon the death of Mr. Edmund Gunter, recommended him to the truftees of Gresham-college, where he once held the geometric lecture, for the altronomy professorship. He was elected, Jan. 22, 1626-7. His friend, Mr. Briggs, dying in 1630, before he had finished his "Trigono-metria Britannica," recommended the completing and publishing of that capital work to our author.

As Gellibrand was puritanically inclined, while he was engaged in this work, his fervant, William Beale, by his encouragement, published an almanack for the year 1631, wherein the popish faints, usually put into our kalendar, were omitted [U]; and the names of other faints and martyrs, mentioned in the book of martyrs, were placed in their room as they stand in Mr. Fox's kalendar. This gave offence to Dr. Laud, who, being then bishop of London, cited them both into the highcommission court. But when the cause came to a hearing, it appeared, that other almanacks of the fame kind had formerly been printed; on which plea they were both acquitted by abp. Abboit and the whole court, Laud only excepted; which was afterwards one of the articles against him at his own trial. This profecution did not hinder Gellibrand from proceeding in his friend's work, which he compleated in 1632; and procured it to be printed by the famous Ulacque Adrian, at Gouda in Holland, in 1633, folio, with a preface, containing an encomium of Mr. Briggs, expressed in such language, as shews him to have been a good master of the Latin tongue [x]. While he was abroad on this bufinefs, he had some difcourse with Lanfberg, an eminent astronomer in Zealand, who affirming that he was fully perfuaded of the truth of the Copernican fystem, our author observes, " that this so styled a truth

He wrote feveral things after this, chiefly tending to the improvement of navigation [v], which would probably have been further advanced by him, had his life been continued longer; but he was untimely carried off by a fever in his 40th year.

As to his character in the learned world, which is that of a mathematician, it must be confessed, that whatever progress he made, was chiefly the produce of a plodding industry, without much genius. Hence we see, that he was not capable of difcerning the true weight and force of the reasoning on which the Copernican system was built in his time; and to the same cause must be ascribed that confusion and amazement he was thrown into, upon confidering the change (then, indeed, but just difcovered) in the variation of the magnetic needle.

GÉLLIUS (Aulus), or, as fome have improperly called him, Agellius, a celebrated grammarian of antiquity, who, according to the best authorities, was born in the reign of Trajan, was a youth in that of Adrian, passed his manhood under Antoninus Pius, and died foon after Marcus Aurelius had been raised to the imperial throne. His instructor in grammar was Sulpitius Apollinaris. He studied rhetoric under Titus Castritius, and Antonius Julianus. After taking the toga virilis, he went from Rome to Athens, where he lived on terms of familiarity with Calvifius Taurus, Peregrinus Proteus, and the celebrated Herodes Atticus. While he was at Athens he began his " Noctes Atticæ." After traverfing the greater part of Greece he returned to Rome, where he applied himfelf to the law, and was appointed a judge. He was deeply verfed in the works of Ælius Tubero, Cæcilius Gallus, Servitius Sulpitius, and other ancient writers on the Roman law. His "Attic Nights," contain a curious collection of observations on a vast variety of subjects, taken from books and difcourfes with learned men, and "A Latin Oration in Praife of the Aftronomy of Gaffendus, fpoken in Chrift-church-hall, fome Time before he left the Univerfity." are particularly valuable for preferving many facts and monuments of antiquity which are not elfewhere to be found. His matter has rendered him an object of curiofity to the most diftinguished scholars, and his style, though not perfectly pure, is, in the judgement of the most acute critics, rather to be commended for its beauties, than blamed for its singularities. Macrobius frequently copies from him without acknowledgement. There are twenty books of the "Noctes Attice," but of the eighth, only the titles of the chapters remain. After many editions of this author, he was published by Proust for the use of the dauphin, at Paris, in 1681, 4to; and by James Gronovius at Leyden in 1706, 4to: and fince by Conradus at Leipsic, in 1762. An excellent English translation with notes, was published by Mr. Beloe, in 1795.

GEMINIANI (FRANCESCO), a fine performer on the violin, and compofer for that inftrument, was born at Lucca in Italy, about 1680[z]. He received his first instructions in mulic from Scarlatti, but finished his studies under Corelli. In 1714, he came to England; and, two years after, published twelve fonatas, "à Violino, Violone, è Cembalo." These, together with his exquisite manner of performing, had such an effect, that he was at length introduced to George I. who had expreffed a defire to hear fome of the pieces contained in this work, performed by himfelf. Geminiani wifhed, however, that he might be accompanied on the harpfichord by Handel; and both accordingly attended at St. James's. The earl of Effex, being a lover of music, became a patron of Geminiani: and, in 1727, procured him the offer of the place of mafter and compofer of the state of music in Ireland: but this, not being tenable by one of the Romish communion, he declined; faying, that, though he had never made great pretensions to religion, yet the renouncing that faith in which he had been baptized, for the fake of worldly advantage, was what he could not answer to his confcience. He afterwards composed Corelli's folos into concertos; he published fix concertos of his own composition, and many other things. The life of this musician appears to have been very unfettled; spent in different countries, for he was fond of making excursions; and employed in pursuits which had no connection with his art. He was, particularly, a violent enthuliast in painting; and, to gratify this propensity, bought pictures; which, to supply his wants, he afterwards fold. The confequence of this kind of traffic was lofs, and its concomitant, distress: which distress was so extreme, that he actually did go to, and would have remained in prifon, if a protection from nis patron the earl of Effex had not delivered him. Yet his fpirit was fuch, that when the prince of Wales, who admired his compositions, would have fettled upon him a pension of 1001. a year, he declined the offer, affecting an aversion to a life of dependence.

In 1761, he went over to Ireland, and was kindly entertained there by Mr. Matthew Dubourg, who had been his pupil, and had been made mafter of the king's band in Ireland upon his refufing it. Geminiani, it is faid, had fpent many years in compiling an elaborate treatife on mufic, which he intended for publication; but, foon after his arrival at Dublin, by the treachery of a female fervant, who is fuppofed to have been recommended to him for no other purpofe, it was conveyed out of his chamber, and could never after be recovered. The greatnefs of this lofs, and his inability to repair it, made a deep impreffion upon his fpirits, and is conjectured to have haftened his diffolution; at leaft, he furvived it but a fhort time, dying Sept. 17, 1762.

GEMISTUS (GEORGE), furnamed Pletho, originally of Conftantinople, retired to Florence, at that time the afylum of the literati, after the taking of his country by the Turks. He was at the council of Florence in 1438, and greatly diffinguifhed by his wifdom as well as learning. He lived to be above 100. He was the author of, 1. "Commentaries upon the Magic Oracles of Zoroafter;" a book of profound erudition. 2. "Hiftorical Treatifes;" thefe difcover a great knowledge of Grecian hiftory. 3. "A Comparifon between Plato and Ariftotle;" in which, however, he leans to the former. He was, indeed, a ftrong Platonician.

GÈMMA (REINIER), a Dutch phyfician, a native of Dockum in Frifeland, practifed phyfic at Louvain. He was born in 1508, and died in 1555. Befides his medical fkill, he was efteemed one of the best astronomers of his age; and wrote feveral works on that science, and other branches of mathematics. He is often called, Gemma Frifius, from his country. His son, Cornelius Gemma, was also famous for his proficiency in the same sciences, and died in 1579, at the age of 44.

GENDRE (LOUIS LE), a French historian, born of an obfcure family at Rouch, in 1659, and raifed by the patronage of Harlay, archbishop of Rouen, and afterwards of Paris. His patron gave him first a canonry of Notre-Dame, and afterwards he was made abbé of Claire-Fontaine in the diocese of Chartres. He died in 1733. Le Gendre was author of several works, of which the most important were the following: 1. "A History of France, from the Commencement of the Monarchy, to the Death of Louis XIII." in three vols. folio, or eight, 12mo, published in 1718. This history, which is confidered as an abridgement, is much esteemed by his countrymen. The style is is fimple, and rather low, but it contains many curious particulars not recorded in other hiftories. It is reckoned more interesting than the history of Pere Daniel, though lefs elegant. His first volumes, from the nature of the fubject, were lefs admired than the last. 2. "Manners and Customs of the French, in the different periods of the Monarchy," a fingle volume, in 12mo, which may ferve as an introduction to the history. 3. "The Life of Francis Harlay;" a work dictated by gratitude, but more esteemed for its style than its matter. 4. "An Essay on the Reign of Louis the Great:" a panegyric, which ran through four editions in eighteen months. 5. "A Life of cardinal d'Amboife, with a parallel of other Cardinals who have been ruling Statessien," Paris, 1724; an instructive, but not very laboured work. 6: "Life of Peter du Bosc."

GENDRE (GILBERT CHARLES LE), marquis of St, Aubin, known as an author of one or two good works; was first counfellor in the parliament of Paris, then master of requests, and died in 1746, at the age of 59. He wrote, I. "A Treatife on Opinion," in eight vols. 12mo. This is a collection of historical examples, illustrating the influence of opinion in the different sciences. The work is well written; and though it difplays more erudition than genius, contains many found remarks to clear up facts, and remove errors. .2. "Antiquities of the Royal Family of France:" a work in which he displays a fystem of his own, but not with fufficient fuccess to subvert the opinions of others.

GENDRE (NICOLAS LE), a famous French sculptor, who died at Paris in 1670, at the age of 52. Many of his works still subsist there, and are admired for the good sense and chasteness of their designs.

GENEBRARD (GILBERT), a celebrated Benedictine, a zealous partizan of the league in France, and a writer for it, but alfo a good divine, and learned writer in theology, was born at Riom in Auvergne, in 1537. He fludied at Paris, and having acquired a profound knowledge of Hebrew, was profeffor of that language at the royal college for thirteen years. He was twice named for epifcopacy, yet never obtained it, and at laft died in a kind of exile at his priory of Semur in Burgundy, in confequence of the violence of his writings againft Henry IV. As a polemic as well as a politician, he was a moft violent and abufive writer, but is faid to have been more prudent in his conduct than in his ftyle. He died in 1597. The following verfe which was placed upon his tomb, ferved rather to prove the perifhable nature of fame, than the merit of the man:

" Urna capit cineres, nomen non orbe tenetur."

His

His chief works are, 1. "A facred Chronology;" a work efteemed in its day. 2. "A learned Commentary on the Pfalms." 3. "Three books on the Trinity." 4. "A Translation of Jofephus," not much efteemed. 5. "Translations from various Rabbins." 6. "An Edition of Origen's Works."

GENESIUS (JOSEPHUS), one of the Byzantine historians, who flourished about the year 940, and, by order of Constantine Porphyrogenitus wrote a history of Constantinople in four books, from Leo the Armenian, to Basilius the Macedonian. Kuster Olearius, Bergler, and several other learned men, had proposed to publish this history, but, after all, it was printed at Venice in 1733, in such a manner, that Menckenius heavily laments the fate of the author, who, after the efforts of so many most learned men, "fell at last," he fays, "into the impure hands of the Venetians, whence he came forth disfigured in the most miserable manner." Bergler's copy is still in the hands of Saxius, a learned German, and may, perhaps, yet be printed, if the fame fatality does not continue to prevail.

GENEST (CHARLES CLAUDE), a French poet of fome celebrity, was born at Paris in 1636. The early part of his life was unfortunate. He attempted to go to India, and was taken by the Englifh. He then taught French in England for fome time, but, difgufted with that mode of fubfiftence, returned to France. He now obtained the protection of fome great perfonages, became preceptor in fome very high families, whence he obtained an abbey, and other lucrative fituations, became a member of the French academy, and died at length in 1719, at the age of 84. He wrote a didactic poem on the natural proofs of the existence of a God, and the immortality of the foul, feveral tragedies, one of which, entitled Penelope, is highly commended; fome epiftles; and other fmall poems.

GENGIS, KHAN, fon of a khan of the Moguls, was born in 1193. He was only thirteen years of age when he began to reign, and foon after was obliged by a very general confpiracy among his fubjects and the neighbouring powers, to retire to Aventi-khan, a Tartar prince. In this fituation, he fludied and practifed the art of war, greatly to the advantage of his protector, whom he re-established in his throne, after his brother had difpoffeffed him of it. He then married the daughter of this khan, who, notwithstanding that tie, and those of gratitude, endeavoured not long after to destroy him. Gengis efcaped, overcame this perfidious enemy, and raifing a large army, followed the impulse of his ambition, and conquered every country against which he marched. In the space of about twenty-two years, he had made himfelf master of Cathay, Corea, the greatest part of China, and no small portion of Asia. His dominions thus became of an extent almost unparalleled, and he

he was meditating to carry them still farther, by completing the conquest of China, when death interrupted his projects in the year 1227. His conquests, too extensive for any other prince, were divided after his decease among his four sons.

GENNADIUS, patriarch of Conftantinople, fucceeded Anatolius in 458. He laboured very diligently to reftore the difcipline of his fee which he found greatly impaired, and made many good regulations. He wrote a commentary on Daniel, and many homilies, all of which have perifhed, nor does any thing remain of his writings, except a circular epiftle against fimony, and a fragment of a work against the anathemas of Cyril. His character is that of an eloquent and able theologian. He died in 471.

GENNADIUS, an ecclefiaftical writer, was a prieft of Marfeilles, not a bifhop, as fome have imagined; and died about the year 492 or 493. There are two works of his remaining; one, "De Dogmatibus Ecclefiafticis," which was falfely attributed to St. Augustin, and has been printed in some editions of his works; another, "De Illustribus Ecclefiæ Scriptoribus." He has been accufed of adhering fome time to the errors of Pelagius; but, as is now agreed, without any reasonable foundation.

GENSERIC, a king of the Vandals in Spain, who began to reign about 428. He was the natural fon of Godefilius, whom he fucceeded, and commenced his reign by gaining a fignal victory over Hermenric king of the Suevi. Boniface, governor of Africa, being difgraced through the intrigues of Ælius, called in the aid of Genferic, to preferve him in his throne. When he had made his peace at Rome, he would willingly have difmiffed his auxiliary, but this was not to be done, and Genferic eftablifhed himfelf in Africa by defeating, first Boniface, and afterwards Afpar, who was fent with all the force of the empire to oppose him. Hence he became the first Vandal king of Africa, and foon after took an opportunity to make himfelf master of Carthage. He attacked Sicily alfo; but his most formidable invafion was that of Rome, undertaken at the defire of Eudoxia, against Maximus, who had murdered her husband Valentinian III. and threatened to compel her to espouse him. Genferic failed for Italy with a large fleet, entered Rome in June, 435, and gave up that city to a cruel pillage, which lasted fourteen days. Maximus, who had fled at his approach, was destroyed by his own people. Eudoxia herfelf became the victim of the vengeance she invited, being carried into captivity with her two daughters, Eudoxia and Placidia. The former was married to Huneric fon of the conqueror: the mother and the other daughter were, after a time, fent back to the emperor in Greece. Genferic, thus powerful in Africa and Italy, became the terror of of all the countries bordering on the Mediterranean; and was uniformly fuccefsful both by land and fea. His greateft danger arofe from the fleet of Leo I. commanded by his brother-in-law Bafilifcus, in 468. Genferic would now have been overpowered, and Rome avenged, had not Bafilifcus, bribed, as it is fuppofed, by him, delayed the attack till he loft his advantage; when the Vandal, by fending in fome empty fhips on fire among the Roman fleet, put them into confusion, and gained the victory. Genferic was a ftrenuous Arian, and a cruel perfecutor of the orthodox Chriftians; he was in all refpects favage and atrocious, but the most fkilful politician of his age; fertile in expedients, prompt and bold in the execution of them, and ready to take advantage of all occasions. This fcourge of the earth was removed by death in 477. He was fucceeded by his fon Huneric.

GENTILIS (SCIPIO), a native of the march of Ancona in Italy, and brother of Alberic Gentilis, who was alfo a writer of fome eminence, was born in 1565, and went into Germany with his father. He there studied at Tubingen, Wittenberg, and Leyden, and was a pupil of Lipfius. He was profoundly learned in the civil law, of which he was professor at Altorf, and was famous for the clear method in which he taught. He was also eminent for his knowledge in polite literature, and was of very amiable manners. He died in 1616, having been married little more than four years before his death, to a very beautiful lady from Lucca, by whom he left four children. His principal works were on civil law; as, 1. " De jure Publico Populi Ro-mani." 2. " De Conjurationibus." 3. " De Donationibus inter Virum et uxorem." 4. " De bonis Maternis et Secundis nuptiis." These appeared between 1602 and 1606; but he publissed also at an earlier period. 5. "Epic Paraphrases of twen-ty-five of David's Pfalms," in 4to, 1584. And, 6. "Tasso's Jerufalem," translated into Latin verse, and published in 1585, 4to.

GENTILESCHI (HORATIO), an Italian painter, was born at Pifa in 1563. After having made himfelf famous at Florence, Rome, Genoa, and in other parts of Italy, he removed to Savoy; whence he went to France, and at laft, upon the invitation of Charles I. came over to England. He was well received by that king, who appointed him lodgings in his court, together with a confiderable falary; and employed him in his palace at Greenwich, and other public places. The moft remarkable of his performances in England, were the cielings of Greenwich and York-houfe. He painted a Madona, a Magdalen, and Lot with his two daughters, for king Charles; all which he performed admirably well. After the death of the king, when his collection of paintings were expofed to fale, nine pictures of Gentilefchi were fold for 600l. and are now faid to be the ornaments ments of the hall in Marlborough-houfe. His most effeemed work abroad, was the portico of cardinal Bentivoglio's palace at Rome. He made feveral attempts in portrait-painting, but with little fuccess; his talent lying altogether in histories, with figures as large as the life. He was much in favour with the duke of Buckingham, and many others of the nobility. After twelve years continuance in England, he died here at 84 years of age, and was buried in the queen's chapel at Somerfet-house. His head is among the prints taken from Vandyke, by whom he had been painted.

He left behind him a daughter, Artemifia Gentilefchi, who was but little inferior to her father in hiftory-painting, and excelled him in portraits. She lived the greatest part of her time at Naples in much splendor; and was as famous all over Europe for her gallantry and love-intrigues, as for her talents in painting. She painted many historical pictures of full fize, among which, the most celebrated was that of David with the head of Goliah in his hand. She drew also the portraits of fome of the royal family, and many of the nobility of England.

GEOFFROI (STEPHEN FRANCIS), a celebrated phyfician and chemist, was the fon of an apothecary, and born at Paris in 1672. He travelled in his own country, and into England, Holland, and Italy, to complete his medical fludies, and the collateral knowledge of botany and chemistry. On his return, he obtained the degree of doctor, and became professor of chemistry at the King's garden, and of medicine at the Royal college. He was also fellow of the Royal Society in London, and member of the French Academy of Sciences. His modest, timid, and patient character, induced him to fludy nature with attention, and to aid her with caution; and he took an interest in the recovery of his patients which at the beginning of his practice was rather injurious to him, as caufing him to betray too visible an anxiety. He never refused his advice to any one. He died in 1731. The principal work of Geoffroi was that on the materia medica, in three vols. 8vo, written in Latin. It was translated into French by Bergier, in feven vols. duodecimo, and afterwards continued by M. Nobleville, who, by adding a hiftory of animals, extended it to feventeen volumes. The medical thefes of this author were, much efteemed, as much more profound and useful than many which courted popularity without any other claim than elegance of ftyle.

GEORGE of Trebisond. See TRAPEZUNTIUS.

GERARD (TOM, or TUNG), was born either in a finall island in Provence, or as is thought more probable, at Amalfi. He was the inftitutor, and the first grand master of the knights hospitalers of Jerusalem, who asterwards became knights of Malta. Some Italian merchants, while Jerusalem was yet in the the hands of the Infidels, obtained permiffion to build a Benedictine monaftery oppofite to the holy fepulchre for the reception of pilgrims. In 1081, an abbot of that monaftery founded alfo an hofpital, the direction of which he gave to Gerard, who was diftinguifhed for his piety. In 1100, Gerard took a religious habit, and affociated with others, under a particular vow to relieve all Chriftians in diftrefs, befides the three great vows of chaftity, poverty, and obedience. Gerard died in 1120. His order was protected by the church from the beginning, and in 1154, was confirmed by a bull of Anaftafius IV. which diftinguifhed the fubdivifions of the order into knights, companions, clerks, and ferving brothers. The fucceffor of Gerard as grand mafter, was Raymond du Puy.

GERARD (BALTHAZAR), the affaffin of William the first. prince of Orange, was a native of Villefans in Franche-Compté. This villain found means to infinuate himfelf into the good graces of 'the prince, by affecting an outrageous zeal for the protestant religion, and a furious hatred of the Roman catholics. He was a conftant attendant at prayers and fermons, and fearcely ever seen without a Pfalter or New Testament in his hands. Who could have imagined, that fo pious an exterior concealed the heart of fuch a monfter? The whole world was duped by his execrable hypocrify. One day, when the prince of Orange was going out of his palace at Delft, Gerard shot him through the head with a piftol. When the murderer was feized, he asked for pen and paper, to write down all that they wanted to know of him. He declared, that for fix years palt he had refolved to put to death the prince of Orange, as chief of the rebellious heretics. And why? To expiate his fins, and merit cternal glory. He mentioned fome of the fecular clergy, as having applauded his project; and plumed himfelf as a noble champion of the church of Rome. He avowed, that if the prince had lived, he would have killed him again, although they made him fuffer a thousand tortures: tantum religio potuit. His fentence was the fame as those of Ravaillac, Clement, Damien, &c. and this fanatic died, in his own conceit, a martyr of the church of Rome, July, 1584.

GERBELIUS (NICOLAUS), an eminent lawyer, was a native of Pforzeim. He was a profetfor of law at Strafburg, where he died very old in 1560. He was greatly diflinguifhed and refpected in his day: Thuanus calls him, "Virum optimum, & pariter doctrina ac morum fuavitate excellentem." His principal work is an excellent defcription of Greece, under the title of, "Ifagoge in tabulam Græciæ Nicolai Sophiani. Bafil, 1550," folio. There are befides of Gerbelius, 1. "Vita Joh. Cufpiniani." 2. "De Anabaptiftorum ortu & progreffu;" a curious work. He publifhed alfo a New Teftament, in 1521. GERBERON

GERBERON (GABRIEL), born at Saint-Calais in the French province of Maine, in 1628, was first of the Oratory, and then became a Benedictine in the congregation of St. Maur, in 1649. He there taught theology for fome years with confiderable fuecefs, but being too free in his opinions on the Janfenilt controverfy, was ordered to be arrefled by Louis XIV. in 1682. Gerberon contrived to efcape into Holland, but the air of that country difagreeing with him, he changed his fitnation for the Low Countries. In, 1703, he was taken into cuffody by the bifhop of Mechlin, and being condemned for errors on the doctrine of grace, fuffered imprifonment at Amiens, and in the caffle of Vincennes. No fufferings could thake his zeal for what he thought the truth, and in 1710 he was given up to the fuperiors of his own order, who fent him to the abbey of St. Denis, where he died in 1711, at the age of 82. He was anthor of many works on the fubjects of controverfy then agitated, and other topics. His chief work was a general hiftory of Janfenism, 3 vols. 12mo, Amsterdam, 1703, for which he was called a violent Janfenist. Many other of his works are extant, but not much known. He is faid to have been impetuous in character and ftyle, but his virtues were alfo great, his manners fevere, and his piety exemplary. A confiderable detail of the life of Gerberon is given in the literary hiftory of the congregation of St. Maur, published in 410, 1770.

GERBIER (Sir BALTHAZAR), a painter of Autwerp, bornin 1592. He painted fmall figures in diffemper; and Charles I. was fo pleafed with his performances, that he invited him to his court. The duke of Buckingham, perceiving that he was a man of very good fenfe, as well as a good painter, recommended him zealoufly to his majelty; who knighted him and fent him to Bruffels, where he refided a long time in quality of agent for the king of Great Britain. He died in 1661.

GERBILLON (JOHN FRANCIS), one of the Jefnit miffionaries in China, and author of fome hiftorical obfervations on Great Tartary; and accounts of fome of his travels, inferted in Du Halde's hiftory of China. He was born in 1654, became a Jefuit in 1670, was fent to China in 1685, and arrived at Pekin in 1688. He obtained the higheft favour with the emperor, for whom he wrote Elements of Geometry, from Euclid and Archimedes; and a practical and fpeculative geometry, which were fplendidly publifhed at Pekin in the Chinefe and Tartarian languages. The emperor permitted him to preach, and to appoint preachers throughout his vaft dominions, but was defirous always to have him about his perfon. He died at Pekin in 1707, fuperior general of all the miffions in China. He wrote an account of his journey to Siam, which has not been publifhed.

GERMANICUS

GERMANICUS (CÆSAR), fon of Drusus and of Antonia the virtuous niece of Augustus, inherited the excellent qualities of his mother. Tiberius, who was his paternal uncle, adopted him, and he was gradually raifed to the confulfhip, the twelfth year of the Christian æra. When Augustus died, he was in Germany, where the foldiers would have raifed him to the empire, had he not declined it. He recalled the rebellious to their duty, defeated the Germans under Arminius, and retook a Roman eagle which the Marfi had kept from the defeat of Varus. Being recalled to Rome, he obtained the honours of a triumph, and was appointed commander in the East, whither he returned foon after, to quell the enemies of Rome in that quarter. was there fo fuccefsful, that he defeated the king of Armenia, and placed another on his throne. But the fplendor of his victories is supposed to have cost him his life; for Tiberius became jealous of him, and if he did not actually poifon him, as many thought, contrived to wear out his life with fatigue and vexation. He died at Daphne of Antioch, aged 34, in the 29th year of the Christian æra. His widow, Agrippina, by whom he had nine children, received his ashes with fincerity, as well as folemnity of grief, in which all Rome, except the tyrant, deeply partook. One of his fons was Caligula, who proved fo dreadfully unworthy of his excellent father. Germanicus had all the qualities and talents which could conciliate univerfal affection and efteem: courage, probity, military skill, pleasing manners in fociety, fidelity in friendship, and even abilities for literature, eloquence, and composition. Some specimens of his Latin poetry are still extant; and he wrote comedies in Greek, and a version of Aratus. In the midst of arms he cultivated polite studies. It is feldom that fo many admirable qualities unite in a perfon of fuch rank; and it must have been, therefore, with the most poignant regret, that the Romans faw him fo early cut off by the dark fuspicions, or unfeeling treatment, of Liberius.

GERSON (JOHN), by fome called Charlier, an illuftrious Frenchman, and ufually flyled "Doctor Chriftianiffimus [A]," was born in 1633. He became canon and chancellor of the church of Paris; and, when John Petit had the bafenefs to juftify the murder of Louis duke of Orleans, which was committed in 1408 by order of the duke of Burgundy, Gerfon caufed the doctrine of this tyrannicide to be cenfured by the doctors and bifhops of Paris. His zeal fhone forth no lefs illuftrioufly at the council of Conftance, at which he affifted as ambaffador from France; and where he diftinguifhed himfelf by many fpeeches, and by one, particularly, in which he enforced the fu-periority of the council over the pope. He caused alfo the doctrine of the above John Petit to be condemned at this council. Not venturing to return to Paris, where the duke of Burgundy would have perfecuted him, he retired into Germany, and afterwards got into a convent at Lyons, of which his brother was prior. He died in 1429. A collection of his writings have been published feveral times; but they came out in Holland, in 1706, under the care of Du Pin, in five vols. folio. In this edition there is a "Gerfoniana," which is reprefented as being curious.

Thuanus has fpoken highly of Gerfon in the first book of his history. Hoffman, in his lexicon, calls him, "fæculi fui oraculum;" and Cave, in his "Historia Literaria," fays, that no man can be very conversant in his works, fine infigni fructu, "without very great benefit." Some have attributed to him the famous book of "the Imitation of Christ;" but for this there feems no sufficient foundation. It is not in any edition of Gerson's works.
